GUATEMALA AIR SERVICE IN MERGER

Deal Here Includes Plane and Propeller Factories; $3,500,000 Involved

A $3,500,000 merger of the Guatemalan Air Service, the Albatross Aircraft Corporation and the California Propeller Company has been consummated here, it was learned last night from Sidney W. Neighbors, official of the Guatemalan organization.

The combine was effected to insure suitable planes for the [illegible] miles of air lines now operated in Central America by Guatemalan Air Service and for a new line to be inaugurated a week from today which will link Los Angeles with Panama City, Neighbors admitted.

"There is no use trying to dodge the fact that the major aircraft manufacturers in the United States are giving preference to the major airlines in the United States on plane orders," Neighbors said.

"We need ships for expansion where we operate and the best and quickest way to get them is through absorbing an airplane factory. That's what we did. We have taken in a propeller company for good measure and have the right ahead up to purchase Axelson motors and purchase them fast."

The Albatross Aircraft Corporation is a Santa Ana and Long Beach concern. In manufactures trimotored twenty-passenger ships capable of lifting nine tons.

Delivery of the first ship under the new combine was made yesterday. The plane is being groomed today for the take-off on a [illegible]-mile nonstop flight from here to Guatemala City, in inaugurating the United States-Panama sky line.

Eight passengers and two pilots are scheduled to make the trip, the longest nonstop flight attempt with ten people aboard that has been essayed, Neighbors stated.

Three smaller planes to be used on some of the shorter lines operated in Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama, Costa Rica and Guatemala by the air service will take off for Guatemala City next Wednesday, it was announced by the new organization heads last night.

COAST AIR MAIL FLYER SETS MARK OF MONTH

Without "turning up" his motors faster than 1650 revolutions per minute, with 1625 as the average, Capt. Eddie Bellande of Maddux Air Lines yesterday afternoon brought the southbound daily "express" through from San Francisco in two hours and fifteen minutes. He took off at the Alameda Airport at 2:40 p.m. and arrived at the Grand Central Air Terminal, Glendale, at 4:55 p.m. The average of the San Francisco-Los Angeles "through" plane time over a thirty-day period has been two hours and thirty-five minutes, with sixteen-place Ford air liners powered with Pratt & Whitney "Wasps."

ART LECTURE ANNOUNCED

The last of the series of ten lectures on art by Frederick Schwankovsky will be given Tuesday in Room 315, Manual Arts Evening High School, at 7 p.m. The lecture is "Today and Tomorrow in Art and Music, the Ultra Modern." Miss Dorothy Ellis will play extracts from her own compositions and also from the "Rhapsody in Blue."

STILL A DREAM

in Same Old Port

Corrigan

Miss Corrigan, well known as an amateur golfer, went aboard the City of Honolulu while the ship was crowded with visitors just prior to sailing time on the 4th inst., selected a vacant de luxe stateroom and posed for two days as a regular passenger, before her status was discovered by Purser Harry Kelly. Capt. George Zeh made arrangements by radio with Capt. Fred L. Hamma, commanding the City of Los Angeles, to transfer her at sea when the two ships met last Tuesday morning. She was placed in the charge of Miss Beatrice Daly, stewardess, during the remainder of the voyage back to Los Angeles. Miss Corrigan yesterday was full of praise for Lasco Line service, despite failure of her life-long ambition to see Hawaii.

She is being held by immigration officials for investigation of reports that she entered the United States from Ireland illegally.

POLICE HUNT FOR PET PENGUINS

Antarctic Birds Disappear From Life of Ease on Doctor's Estate

LEXINGTON (Mass.) May 11. (AP)—Lost, strayed or stolen—two penguins.

Dr. Thomas Richard has asked the police to institute a search for a pair of the strange birds which have disappeared from his estate. There are said to be but three others of the species in the country.

It may be that the penguins have decided to return to their former South Sea home, whence they were brought by Huntington R. "Tack" Hardwick's recent expedition to the Galapagos Islands. If so, their owner points out they have a long walk, or swim, ahead.

Specialist in England Finds New Insulin Method Highly Effective

Drug Mixed With Oil and Injected Under Skin May End Disease

[Copyright, 1929, by Chicago Tribune.]

LONDON, May 11. (Exclusive)—A new method of administering insulin which it is hoped will make it a definite cure for diabetes instead of merely an alleviation as at present has been discovered by Dr. Otto Leyton, the famous British specialist and one of the chief physicians of the great London Hospital, where he has been carrying on experiments for some years. Already he has effected several cures which, so far as can be told at present, are permanent.

The importance of the discovery may be realized when it is stated that one person in every 100 in America suffers from diabetes and that up till now no cure was known.

PACIFIC AIR RACE SEEN

Rival Zeppelins in Field Now

Los Angeles-to-Hawaii Line Breeds Competition for Prize Aerial Route

Negotiations on for German "Graf" to "Get Jump" on Goodyear

WASHINGTON, May 11. (Exclusive)—The Goodyear-Zeppelin Corporation is to meet competition for the honor of starting the first dirigible air line between Southern California and Hawaii.

This is the belief here today following apparently reliable reports that a group of Los Angeles and New York capitalists represented by John A. Elden, Cleveland attorney, is negotiating for the purchase of the Graf Zeppelin, German dirigible, with a view to putting it into regular operation between Los Angeles and Honolulu.

DOWN TO DETAILS

According to the reports the negotiations have reached the stage of discussing details with a possibility that the deal will be closed in the near future and delivery of the craft made following completion of the Graf Zeppelin's 'round-the-world trip scheduled for the coming summer.

The Graf Zeppelin is said to be the only nonmilitary dirigible in existence that is suitable for transoceanic passenger and freight service and competitors of the Goodyear corporation buying it would potentially have at least a two years' jump in starting an air line across the Pacific.

TIME AND MONEY

However, it is pointed out by aeronautical people here that other factors than time would enter into the rivalry, notably financing, the securing of government mail contracts and the very expensive proposition of constructing a hangar at Los Angeles. There is at present no dirigible hangar anywhere near Los Angeles, and the erection of one would require perhaps a year and cost in the neighborhood of $2,000,000.

The Goodyear-Zeppelin plan for establishing a dirigible line between Los Angeles and Honolulu, ultimately to be extended to Havana, Tokio and possibly Australia, was unfolded in detail before President Hoover at the White House two days ago by Paul W. Litchfield.

MINE TOWN MENACED BY FLAMES

Unabated Fire Sweeps Over Patagonia Mountain Range in Arizona

NOGALES (Ariz.) May 11. (AP)—A village of fifty people and several valuable mining properties are threatened today as a great forest fire sweeps unabated over the Patagonia mountain range a few miles from here. More than 5000 acres of timber have been laid waste and high winds are minimizing the efforts of 100 men to stop the conflagration.

A report from A. S. Wingo, chief of the Forest Service here, stated that the flames had approached within a short distance of Harshaw, a mining village.

The fire, which broke out three days ago, is roaring over a ten-mile front, rapidly burning its way to the east and south. Several small mining properties and one large shaft, the Morning Glory, are directly in the path of the flames.

Fire fighters express fear that the strong winds will sweep the flames over the village and mining claims and that there seems small opportunity of conquering the blaze in face of the elements.

The origin of the fire is attributed to the upsetting of a miner's carbide lamp in a brush section and the flames have attained such intensity that this border town is faintly illuminated at night.

SCORE OF FIRES RAGE THROUGH CANADA

WINNIPEG (Man.) May 11. (AP)—A score of fires roared through the parched forests of Northern Manitoba and Saskatchewan today, destroying huge stands of valuable timber and threatening settlements. A stiff breeze and lack of rainfall aided the progress of the flames.

KANSAS FLOODS TAKE LIVES

Two Known Dead and Extensive Property Damage Caused by Torrential Rains

TOPEKA (Kan.) May 11. (AP)—Flash floods from torrential rains swept four Kansas towns today, causing two known deaths and extensive property damage. The water generally was receding tonight.

Jesus Medina and Elico Redrigura, Mexican railroad workers, were carried to their deaths from the top of a floating garage at Herington.

Advices from Council Grove told of heroic rescues of persons stranded by swirling waters. The flood reached a depth of two to three feet in Main-street business buildings there.

MAYOR AIDS RESCUE

W. L. Young, Mayor of Council Grove, accompanied by Walker Leigh, and using a garage door for a raft, rescued Mr. and Mrs. William Laramore, and two children who were marooned in the top of a tree from 7:45 a.m. until 2:45 p.m. Separate trips were made in carrying each person to safety as the fragile craft would accommodate but three persons.

Gypsum and Lindsborg, in the central part of the State, were inundated by near-cloudbursts which sent streams out of their banks for a brief rampage.

TRACK WASHED OUT

Transportation was hampered seriously. Many highways were under water. Rock Island tracks were washed out between Tampa and Herington. Union Pacific tracks were swept away north of McPherson, where the water entered the suburbs.

All service on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad between Emporia and Junction City was halted. Much of the track was under water and several stretches of track were washed away. Service on the main west line of the Missouri Pacific was annulled because of the high water at Council Grove.

Between 100 and 200 homes in addition to business houses, were flooded at Council Grove. Fifteen buildings were flooded at Herington.

Several persons were in hospitals at Herington suffering from exposure and injuries.

German Ace Reported Killed in Plane Crash

LONG BEACH, May 11. (AP)—A telephonic report from Trona, Cal., desert mining town seventy miles east of Bakersfield, today said Bernhard Lauscher, German World War ace, had been killed in an airplane crash at Trona Field.

Two other aviators, E. I. Glatte and James Bell, both of this city, were reported injured.

The plane, piloted by Lauscher, was coming in to land against a stiff head wind, when it nosed down suddenly and crashed. Lauscher was taken from the wreckage alive, but died a half hour later.

The plane left the local municipal airport in the morning bound for Corona, according to airport authorities.

Lauscher had gained local prominence during the last year as an aviator, serving as an inspector at the municipal airport for several months. He leaves a brother living in New York and his father in Germany. Following the war, he is said to have flown for the German organization, Dutche Lufthansa. Bell was the owner of the wrecked plane.

RISES ASKED IN TARIFF

Californians to Have Hearing

Cotton and Fig Growers Will Appear Tuesday Before Committee

Rate on Dried Cherries to Receive Consideration; Bill Debated

WASHINGTON, May 11. (Exclusive)—The California Congressional delegation is to have a hearing before the House Ways and Means Committee Tuesday on two of the schedules in the new tariff bill not satisfactory to their State and Representative Swing of El Centro is to argue for a duty on long staple cotton, while Representative Barbour of Fresno is to present the case of the fig growers, who failed to receive the duty they requested.

At the same time, efforts are to be made to increase the tariff rate on dried cherries, which formerly were on the free list, and are slated under the Hawley bill for a duty of 2 cents per pound, when 10 cents a pound plus 40 per cent ad valorem was desired by the California growers.

The California cherry producers themselves are responsible for not receiving more consideration when the tariff bill was being framed, as it has developed they neglected to mention dried cherries in the brief they submitted to the Ways and Means Committee.

Representatives of the cherry growers' organization were here today conferring with Representatives Free of San Jose and Englebright of Nevada City, and they and other members of the California delegation will endeavor next week to correct matters.

FAIRLY TREATED

That dried cherries were treated fairly in view of the fact no request was made in their behalf, is indicated by the fact the Ways and Means Committee fixed a tariff of 2 cents a pound on the product without solicitation, gauging the needs of the industry by the demands made for the fresh fruit, which also is given 2 cents a pound.

General debate on the tariff measure continued in the House today with the Democrats launching a vigorous partisan attack and Republicans countering with the contention that the Democrats are just as much in favor of protection for industries in their districts and States as are the Republicans.

Representative Crowther, Republican, of New York, challenged any single member on the Democratic side to get up and say he is opposed to protection for interests in his own district, and no one stood up. The New Yorker, a member of the Ways and Means Committee which drafted the present tariff bill, then proceeded to chide the Democrats on their "political opposition" to a protective measure, saying that while the Democrats will perhaps vote against it, for political reasons they will have their "fingers crossed" at the time. The Democrats acknowledged by their smiles that this is the case.

SCATHES REPUBLICANS

Earlier, Representative Rainey of Illinois, veteran Democratic member of the Ways and Means Committee, gave the Republican party a lashing for past tariff scandals, real and imagined.

Charging the Republican party is "corrupt from top to bottom," Rainey declared that from the increase in the sugar tariff in the pending bill it is plain that "the sugar trust still draws its slimy, sticky way through the vitals of the Republican party."

He said the sugar increase will raise the cost of living $192,000,000 a year. Three new schedules—sugar, glass and shingles—will add $460,000,000 annually to the burden on American households, he asserted.

Mr. Rainey's speech was a detailed recital of scandals he said had occurred under past Republican tariff acts. He even attacked Chief Justice Taft on the ground of the $20,000 annuity for ex-Presidents he is receiving from the steel trust estate of Andrew Carnegie.

Taft and George W. Wickersham, his Attorney-General, were responsible for the "escape of the sugar trust" in 1910 and 1911, Rainey charged, "and yet a few days ago we find the two of them conferring here over law enforcement."

MEXICAN ISSUE

The Mexican immigration issue was injected into the debate, Rainey telling of the prevalence of this nationality among sugar beet workers, and Smith, Republican, of

DAM SNAG IN OFFING

Boulder Power Sale Doubted

Government's Inability to Get Necessary Contracts May Block Start

Gov. Dern of Utah Discloses Situation After Talk With President

WASHINGTON, May 11. (Exclusive)—Inability of the government to obtain the necessary contracts for disposition of power may prevent it going ahead with the Boulder dam project after June 21, next, notwithstanding that is the date on which the present six-State ratification makes the development effective under the Swing-Johnson Act.

This information was given Gov. Dern of Utah by President Hoover at a conference at the White House today.

According to Gov. Dern the President expressed grave doubt that the government will be able to contract for the sale of power in an amount sufficient to repay the cost of the project within fifty years as required by the Swing-Johnson Act. Under the terms of the legislation the Secretary of the Interior is not permitted to expend $1 until such contracts are in hand.

CONTRACT BARRIERS

The President indicated, Gov. Dern said, that there is reason to believe the power companies of Southern California will not make a satisfactory bid for Boulder dam power, while the city of Los Angeles is unable to make a contract because of the California law prohibiting municipalities in the State to bond themselves beyond an indebtedness representing a certain percentage of their assessed valuation.

The power companies, it was understood from Gov. Dern, take the position that as the cost of producing electric power by steam is decreasing steadily with the cost in Southern California now about equaling that at Boulder dam plus transmission charges to Los Angeles, they would be extremely unwise to enter into fifty-year contracts to take power from the Colorado River project.

As a matter of fact, it is said, the power companies feel that within a few more years they will be producing steam power at a lower figure than is possible at Boulder dam.

ALTERNATIVE COURSE

If the power companies and the city of Los Angeles do not agree to take the power on the basis laid down in the Swing-Johnson Act, there is no other known purchaser of such a vast amount of power and the Boulder Dam Act cannot be put into operation. The alternative would be to wait and ask Congress at the regular session starting in December for an amendment to the act which would permit the building of the dam to proceed without the government first obtaining contracts for the sale of power to finance the enterprise. This would mean that the project would not be self-supporting, and would have to be built at public expense. The major claim of proponents of the development in Congress was that it would not cost the government or public anything, "not a single penny," to use the words so often employed by Senator Johnson of California, co-author of the act.

PURPOSE OF VISIT

Gov. Dern called on Mr. Hoover to urge that the government put into early operation the section of the Boulder dam legislation providing for a survey to determine the power and irrigation possibilities of all the States in the river basin. This work was intended as a corollary to the main Boulder dam project and Congress appropriated $250,000 to cover expenses. Each State was authorized to appoint a commissioner to act as adviser to the Federal government, and Gov. Dern recommended that the Utah appointment go to W. R. Wallace, a Democrat.

After seeing the President, Gov. Dern talked with Secretary of the Interior Wilbur and Dr. Elwood Mead, commissioner of reclamation, and both disagreed with Mr. Hoover and expressed the belief that when the time comes the government will be able to obtain satisfactory contracts for the sale of Boulder dam power. Dr. Mead especially was confident that a market for the power will be found. But the President, who may have advices the others do not have, impressed Gov. Dern as

Bulgaria Waits King's Betrothal

SOFIA, May 11. (Exclusive)—Bulgaria tomorrow will celebrate the thousandth anniversary of historical existence. There are strong rumors tonight that the government intends to announce the engagement of King Boris to Princess Giovanna of Italy.

Heretofore a difference of religion between them has prevented such a marriage, the Vatican insisting that the children of such a union be brought up in the Roman Catholic faith, although the state religion of Bulgaria is that of the Greek Orthodox Church.

HUTCHINS SIZES UP HIS JOB

Young University of Chicago President Meets Faculty Today But Denies Plans for Reorganization

CHICAGO, May 11. (AP)—A tall, slim young man 30 years of age, with an infectious, eager grin, dropped into town today to give his new job as president of the University of Chicago the "once over."

Robert Maynard Hutchins seemed entirely undismayed at having been chosen at his age to direct the preparatory years of thousands of young men and women in a $75,000,000 institution.

Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, neglected for once, peeped out their drawing-room windows as the newspaper men and photographers surrounded the youthful president-elect and his wife.

"What kind of a cigarette is that you are smoking?" was the first question popped at him. It brought forth the smile and an instantaneous reply:

"They're 15 cents a pack, boys and girls, but I'm not giving a testimonial," he flashed.

He was just as casual about more serious subjects. Modern youth received his quick o.k.

"I'm entirely unexcited by the so-called problems of the younger generation," he admitted. "I believe the students of today are more intelligent, active and independent than those of preceding generations, nothing to worry about."

Will there be the changes in the university administration one might expect from a new head?

"Not by President Bob Hutchins, no sir. The university is older than I am. It is the product of people with far more intelligence than mine and I hardly shall presume to come in and revolutionize things or even try to divert this institution's trend from its present channel."

President Hutchins, who is dean of Yale University's law school, will meet the faculty of the University of Chicago tomorrow, and, with his wife, return east Monday.

TOGA MRS. M'CORMICK'S AIM

Candidacy for Senate Seat Announced in Letter by Illinois Woman Representative

CHICAGO, May 11. (Exclusive)—The political future of Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick occupied the attention of Illinois political leaders again today when it became known that the State's only woman Representative has stated definitely, in a letter to a Springfield man, that she is a candidate for United States Senator. Mrs. McCormick, according to reports, told Gov. Emmerson in Chicago two weeks ago that she did not intend to run. She also is said to have indicated the same decision to others within the last two months.

The latest development comes in the form of a letter to former Judge William H. Crum of Springfield from Mrs. McCormick.

"The rumor and story in the various newspapers that I had withdrawn from the Senatorial race are entirely without foundation. I am a candidate for United States Senator and will start organizing at an early date," said Mrs. McCormick in her letter.

Persons who do not think Mrs. McCormick will run against Deneen next year point out that she does not specify any date in her letter. They add that her statement, "I am a candidate for United States Senator," might mean that she intends to run against Otis F. Glenn in 1932; or, they add, she might even have her eye on the 1936 race, figuring that Senator Deneen might be ready to retire then.

FEARS AROUSED BY DEBENTURE

Addition to Tariff Bill in Row Might Save It

Senate Leaders Prepare to Counteract Trend

House Sentiment in Favor of Proposal Grows

WASHINGTON, May 11. (AP)—A stiffening in the ranks of the Senate group which favors the export-debenture plan gave administration leaders considerable concern today as to what effect an attempt to incorporate this proposal into the tariff bill might have, should it finally fail to be included in the farm-relief bill as a result of opposition in the House.

Plans have been formulated by the debenture group in the Senate to attempt to tack the proposal onto the tariff measure if the House declines to receive the Senate farm bill after it passes. It has been suggested the House might take such action based on the contention that the debenture section constitutes revenue legislation and therefore cannot constitutionally be initiated by the Senate.

CONCERN FELT

Republican leaders have acknowledged that a combination of Democrats and middle-western Republicans in the House might present a formidable threat to their plans for restricting consideration of the tariff bill, but they still are of the opinion that such a coalition could not command enough support to be actually dangerous.

The problem is held to have become more acute because sentiment for the debenture plan in the Senate is considered to have extended rather than diminished since that proposal was written into the farm bill over the objections of President Hoover. Administration leaders have said that the plan, if offered as a rider to the tariff bill, would receive 2 or 3 more votes on the Senate roll call than it did on being retained in the farm bill.

TREND DISCLOSED

Some members of Congress noted today that, along with information being circulated in the agricultural sections of the country with respect to the effect of the debenture plan, a number of House Republicans from those sections are believed to be looking more favorably on the proposal than they were earlier in the session. In addition, the Democrats have taken up the plan, Representative Garner of Texas, the Democratic leader, having declared that if the House is given an opportunity to vote on the question, an almost solid Democratic line-up will be presented in its favor.

However, the opinion of the administration leaders is that even a strong coalition of Democrats and middle-western Republicans would be offset in the House by the substantial administration majority. They also look to President Hoover to take a hand in the negotiations and are hopeful that his influence will prove beneficial in preventing a serious deadlock.

SHOWDOWN NEAR

A showdown concerning debentures between the House and Senate is expected to materialize next week after the Senate passes the farm-relief bill and sends it over to the House. Present indications are that the House will refuse to accept it because it contains the debenture section and if this should happen a warm discussion over constitutional jurisdiction is predicted.

Senator Watson of Indiana, the Republican leader, and other administration Senators contend the House ought to accept the farm bill, disagree to the Senate's amendments and permit it to go to a conference of Senate and House members. The Republican leader has been conferring with House leaders, but so far no agreement has been reached. Watson intends to negotiate further over the week-end and is hopeful that the views of Senate leaders may prevail.

Chairman McNary of the Senate Agriculture Committee is hopeful that the farm bill may be passed by Tuesday night.

Ten-year-old Boy Over Six-feet Tall Wears Shoe Size Twenty-Five

RACINE (Wis.) May 11. (Exclusive)—A pair of size twenty-five shoes has just been made for a 10-year-old schoolboy by a Racine shoe manufacturing company. The purchaser is Robert Wadlow, an elementary school student of Alton, Miss. The boy is 6 feet 10 inches tall and weighs 250 pounds. Five square feet of leather were used to manufacture the shoes. Physicians say that if the boy continues to grow he will be 9 feet tall when he reaches maturity.

Capetown Again Orders Gallows in Assault Case

CAPETOWN, May 11. (Exclusive) The second execution in the last two months for criminal assaults on white women took place in Capetown prison this morning when a young farm laborer, Henryk Van Wyk, was hanged. The judge when pronouncing the sentence said that in ninety-nine cases out of 100, a woman of the high social position of the plaintiff would have preferred death rather than the ordeal she had undergone. In previous cases of this nature the death penalty has seldom been carried out in South Africa.

being greatly concerned over the prospect, and as seeming to recognize the necessity for additional legislation before the Boulder dam development can be started.

SPONSORS' ATTITUDE

Senator Johnson and Representative Swing of El Centro, the authors of the Boulder dam measure enacted by Congress last winter after a seven-year struggle, are said to have received intimations that things are not working smoothly and both are declared to be unalterably opposed to reopening the legislation in Congress for amendment, realizing they would be forced to admit failure and would face an almost impossible task in getting Congress to again approve the project under a new financial set-up.

It is reported that, despite the attitude taken by Secretary Wilbur in his meeting with Gov. Dern, the apprehension of President Hoover will be officially affirmed in the near future by a formal statement from the Interior Department setting forth the exact Boulder dam situation and explaining what must be done by Congress to make the Swing-Johnson act effective. Such a statement is not expected until some time after June 21, next, the date when the six-months leeway allowed for six-State ratification of the Colorado River compact expires and the date the project really comes into official existence.

FARMERS TO DISCUSS TAX REFORMING

Conferees Will Meet This Week in Chicago to Find Solution of Problem

CHICAGO, May 11. (AP)—Farmers of the nation will assemble in Chicago Wednesday to work out their own answer to what they term their problem of "unfair rural taxation."

It will be the first national farm conference in the history of the American Farm Bureau Federation, called by President Sam H. Thompson as a sequel to the annual convention of the federation last December. The convention authorized President Thompson to call the national conference as a step further in the organization's national campaign against "unfair taxation of farmers."

First Steps for Lowered Wheat Rates Approved

WASHINGTON, May 11. (AP)—First steps to make effective the reduction in export wheat and flour rates voluntarily tendered by eastern and western railroads were sanctioned today by the Interstate Commerce Commission, while at the same time it was announced that government barge lines of the Mississippi-Missouri River will cut water rates on the same products to conform with the rail schedules.

Both eastern and western rail carriers filed formal petitions with the commission for permission to make the rate cut effective on one day's notice, disregarding the usual requirement for thirty days advance notice before enforcing new schedules.

Gorilla Pair Passengers on Graf Zeppelin

[Copyright, 1929, by the New York Times]

FRIEDRICHSHAFEN (Germany) May 11. (Exclusive)—A pair of gorillas, a genuine Rubens and a German grand piano are slated to be among the Graf Zeppelin's freight cargo when the dirigible takes off on her second trans-Atlantic flight May 15.

Although Dr. Hugo Eckener, the commander, is willing to guarantee the live freight a comfortable journey so far as a smooth crossing and feeding facilities are concerned, the problem of protecting the gorillas against influenza or pneumonia remains to be settled before a bill of lading will be issued.

PHOENIX, May 11. (AP)—Frank Dushane's aim was good, but his head was better.

LINDBERGH LETS ANNE DRIVE AUTO

Couple Have Quiet Trip; Flyer's Plane Ready for Pilot at Airport

ENGLEWOOD (N. J.) May 11. (Exclusive)—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, for a change, let his fiancee, Anne Morrow, drive his car today as they rolled along the Palisades and Northern Valley of New Jersey for another quiet day together. The couple left at noon and did not return until evening.

Meanwhile, word was received at the Morrows' large estate, where the wedding will take place at 4 p.m. Saturday, June 15, next, that Ambassador Morrow has decided to come directly to Englewood from Mexico City, the 25th inst.

Lindbergh, who has not been up in the air since his betrothed returned ten days ago, is said to be growing restless. Friends said a plane is in readiness for him at Teterboro Airport, at Hasbrouck Heights, not far from here, but that it is uncertain if he will take off there or at some other airport when he decides to fly again. The Morrows will entertain several guests and Lindbergh at dinner tomorrow.

Birth Control Raid Has Echo

NEW YORK, May 11. (Exclusive)—Mrs. Mary Sullivan, director of the women's bureau of the police department, and the official who ordered the raid on the Birth Control Clinic Research Bureau on April 15, was removed today by Police Commissioner Whalen, as head of the bureau. Capt. James S. P. Brady, on duty in the legal department, was appointed commanding officer of the bureau, which was placed under the jurisdiction of Nelson Ruttenberg, fourth deputy police commissioner. Mrs. Sullivan was not removed from the bureau, but was made assistant to Capt. Brady.

No explanation of the shake-up was given by Commissioner Whalen. At police headquarters, however, Mrs. Sullivan's removal was attributed to the part of her raid on the birth-control bureau.

French Film Parley Fails

PARIS, May 11. (AP)—A joint American film conference which is seeking a decision on the importation of American films into France has been unable to come to any agreement, and it has been decided to let the matter revert to the French government.

The Americans expressed a willingness to pay an importation duty, but declined to discuss the so-called contingent regulations by which American films could be imported in a certain proportion to French films. For more than a month no new American films have been imported into France.

PARIS, May 11. (AP)—So many overoptimistic Frenchmen have been pawning their automobiles that the city hock-shop has had to call a halt. "My Aunt," as the Paris pawnshop is called, has no more room in her garage.

The city has decided to build a garage to hold 600 cars. It will be a good investment, for the municipality makes more than $60,000 a year clear profit on the vehicles of those compelled to resume the status of pedestrians.

BUYS FUNERAL, ENDS OWN LIFE

Desire to be Buried by Side of First Wife Believed Reason for Act

NEW YORK, May 11. (Exclusive)—Determination to make sure he would be buried next to his first wife was given today as the reason for suicide of Max Newman, 60 years of age, who directed and paid for his funeral only thirty-six hours before he took his life. Newman called on Sidney Schwartz, undertaker, on Monday, paid $285 for a simple three-car funeral and insisted time after time that his body be lowered next to the grave of his first wife in Mt. Hebren Cemetery, Flushing, L. I.

"You look like you'd live to be 100," the undertaker said.

"No, it won't be long," said Newman.

He went to his home in the Bronx, and ended his life by gas early today. The second Mrs. Newman survives.

PACIFIC RACE BY ZEPPELINS

president of the Akron corporation.

Mr. Litchfield said his company was assured of $10,000,000 backing, provided the government would cooperate the first few years with mail contracts. He said the dirigible to be used would be built on the heels of the two airships now being constructed for the Navy, and that the first trip would be made in 1932, if everything worked out well.

Litchfield was here sounding out the government on the matter of mail contracts. Whether the group reported ready to buy the Graf Zeppelin and use it to get a start on the Los Angeles-Honolulu air route, has similarly sought government co-operation is not known. Various government officials said today they were aware negotiations for the purchase of the German craft were under way, but Postmaster-General Brown was not one of them. Mr. Brown expressed entire ignorance of the matter.

Word came from Akron that Goodyear officials there said they have no knowledge of any deal for American purchase of the Graf Zeppelin. Admiral W. A. Moffett, chief of naval aeronautics, and Commander Fulton, the naval officer in the Aeronautics Bureau assigned to dirigible matters, both said they had heard that some group in this country sought to buy the German ship, but that they knew no particulars. Senator Burton of Ohio, who is interested in the Goodyear company's plans, said he also had heard of the proposed deal, but was uninformed as to details. No one else in Washington knew anything definite about the people back of the rumored deal to purchase the Graf Zeppelin or the extent of their financing.

The German airship is scheduled to arrive in the United States within the next week or ten days on the first of three projected trans-Atlantic flights, to be followed by a around-the-world trip which will take the giant craft to Los Angeles some time in the early part of August if it adheres to the running time mapped out.

INSULT TO INJURY

The fact that the Graf Zeppelin people have selected Los Angeles for a stopping place rather than San Diego has caused a storm of protest from the latter city, which is all the more enraged because the mooring mast that is to be used is being borrowed from the navy field at San Diego. The mast was dismantled to "stub" proportions a year ago, due to the complaints of the army, on whose part of Rockwell Field it stands, and the entire mast is to be removed to Los Angeles and put up there this summer long enough to accommodate the German airship.

Naval officers emphasized today that they have nothing to do with the arrangements, which are being made exclusively by F. W. Von Meister, representative of the Graf Zeppelin owners in this country. Their part, they said, was simply to authorize the loan of the mast to the German interests on the condition it be returned to San Diego when it had served its purpose.

The Graf Zeppelin is due to arrive in the United States on its second trans-Atlantic trip July 8, next, and to start shortly thereafter on the trip around the world. It is scheduled to arrive at Los Angeles from Tokio some time the fore part of August.

Angeleno Sued for Large Sum

SEATTLE (Wash.) May 11. (AP)—Filing suit for $248,000, A. R. Rutherford, Seattle attorney, today charged his former friend and law associate, O. L. Willett of Los Angeles and former Seattle lawyer, with defrauding him of a fortune.

The suit grew out of an agreement Rutherford said he made with Willett to make collections for creditors from the Atascadero Estates, Inc., San Luis Obispo county, California. Rutherford asserts Willett has realized fully $500,000, of which Rutherford has received only $2700.

and Dr. Shields vindicated them and ousted Dr. Wayman and his entire faculty.

James H. Sperry, a member of the board, contended the entire controversy revolves about an attempt by Miss Rebman to control all departments of the university. Charges that she sent students into classrooms to spy on professors were made by deans of the university.

Students, led by Cedric Peterson, passed a resolution indorsing President Wayman.

The Wayman-Shields controversy, Peterson said, started about a month and a half ago, when Dr. Shields asked President Wayman to request the resignations of Dean Bennett of the college of education, Dr. N. L. T. Nelson, professor of biology; Prof. Grimes of the English department, H. P. Chaffee, dean of men; Dr. F. B. Pearson, head of the Bible department; Miss Carolyne Forgrave, dean of women, and Dean E. C. Callaway of the college of pharmacy.

CHARGES OF SPIES

Wayman, Peterson said, could find no reason for their dismissal and so informed Dr. Shields. It was then, Peterson said, that Wayman's position was threatened.

Dr. Pearson charged Miss Rebman with sending Canadian students who followed Dr. Shields from Toronto to Des Moines into his classes to spy on him.

The announcement of the board's action brought forth a student demonstration for President Wayman that was quelled only after police were summoned.

While the demonstration was at its height, more than 100 students, armed with eggs, waited outside the executive offices where Dr. Shields was quartered.

The dismissals, which included every employee of the university, are effective June 4. All of the dismissed persons may file application for re-election or reappointment within ten days of that date.

LIBERTY (Mo.) May 11. (AP)—Dr. Harry C. Wayman, president of Des Moines University, dismissed today, resigned under fire last June after serving five years as head of William Jewell College here.

His formal resignation was accepted by trustees, who stated in the record that it was "in the interest of unity and harmony and for the good of William Jewell College."

Only a few scattering "ayes" were heard in the convention hall when the president, Dr. George W. Truett, put the question as to whether the body should rescind its invitation to Mrs. W. J. Cox of Memphis, president of the Women's Missionary Union, to make an address.

KENTUCKIAN'S MOTION

The motion to take back the invitation had been made by Rev. J. W. Porter, Lexington, Ky., who presented a memorial from Kentucky Baptists upholding his view. He argued that the idea of a woman speaking at a Baptist meeting is repugnant to "2000 years of Baptist history;" that the Bible expressly says women should keep silent in church and that the Scriptures teach that women are subject to men. He even went so far as to say that he would substitute sprinkling for immersion as soon as to vote for a woman to speak.

Dr. Porter saw in the invitation an effort to "[illegible] get more money."

HOPE GROWING FOR DIABETICS

A great advance was made when the insulin treatment was discovered. Under the method at present used, this drug, which is an extract of the pancreas of oxen, is administered by injection in an aqueous solution. It has been invaluable in controlling overproduction of sugar in the blood, but it does not cure. The injections must be continued constantly two or three times daily as long as the patient lives, and in most cases while the treatment is so continued the development of the disease is controlled.

Dr. Leyton started out to find the method by which the sugar contents could be kept down for a long enough time to allow nature to rally its own forces and effect a cure. He believes he has found this in the administration of insulin fairly divided and emulsified in castor oil, which is injected subcutaneously. By this method the absorption of the insulin is delayed and Dr. Leyton has been able to keep the sugar content below 15 per cent for long periods and in several cases effect what seems to be a radical cure.

Dr. Leyton himself is careful about making any claims. The time since his experiments began is too short, he says, to announce that a definite cure has been established, but it is certain that a great advance has been made in the treatment of diabetes.

"It's trading God for gold," the Kentuckian said. He referred to another piece of biblical history in his argument, remarking, "Eve tempted Adam, and now the Southern Baptist convention is tempting women. Women would do all right if the petticoated preachers would let them alone."

Dr. Porter, whose opponent in the debate had been Rev. M. E. Dodd of Shreveport, La., walked out of the hall when Mrs. Cox and several other women went to the platform.

In the course of her talk Mrs. Cox remarked that "no woman betrayed Jesus. Instead, the women stood beside him when the men fled." She also said that a woman is "expected to be a perfect, sweet wife, light pink chiffon or hand and blue serge on the other."

HOTEL GUESTS PERISH IN FIRE

[illegible] in Early Morning Amarillo (Tex.) Blaze

[illegible] of Woman Expected to Prove Fatal

[illegible] of Victims Killed in Leaps from Windows

AMARILLO (Tex.) May 11. (AP)—[illegible] by flames in the Tourist [illegible] before daybreak today, [illegible] were burned to death, [illegible] lost their lives when they [illegible] from third-story windows, a [illegible] was injured, probably fatally, and at least ten other persons were hurt.

The dead are Peter Kearns, Pine, [illegible] Raymond Cozart, Detroit, [illegible] Crowe, Tulia, Tex.; J. P. Purdian, Amarillo, Tex.; an unidentified man.

Attempts to identify other bodies recovered were unsuccessful. L. P. (Buffalo) Atachison of Shamrock, Tex., at first reported missing, was believed to have spent the night with friends.

The most severely injured is a woman, Miss Birdie Rhodes, operator of the hotel. Trapped in her room on the third floor, she leaped to the pavement below.

The fire was discovered about 3:30 a.m., and nearly every avenue of escape was cut immediately by dense smoke and flames. The only fire escape, a frail wooden and iron structure, was beyond the reach of most of the victims. Guests who escaped said the fire ate its way through the twenty-five-year-old frame building as if it were paper.

Many thrilling escapes were effected, half-clad guests jumping from windows and ledges. The most thorough was that of H. C. Wilson, elderly oil worker, who packed his suit case, lowered it to the ground with a rope which he had kept in his room for emergency since 1908, and then descended to safety himself.

Two Chickasha (Okla.) youths, E. P. Wallace and J. R. Williams, cut off from the fire escape, worked their way out on a ledge until they reached a gutter, down which they slid to the ground.

M. J. Geoghegan, Amarillo, who made his way down the fire escape, said that as he passed the second floor the screams of men and women could be heard above the roar of the fire. He attempted to force in the locked door and was severely cut about the face and arms.

GYPSIES FILE SUIT

BUDAPEST, May 11. (AP)—Two of Hungary's largest gypsy tribes, the Yoschigen and the Kumanen, have filed suit against the royal house of Hapsburg for $10,000,000. The nomads charge that Emperor Leopold in 1702 expropriated their lands without giving any compensation.

SINCLAIR'S FUNDS TAKEN TO STOP TIPPING IN JAIL

WASHINGTON, May 11. (AP)—Maj. William L. Peak, superintendent of the Washington jail, today said he has advised his wealthy prisoner, Harry F. Sinclair, that tipping of jail attendants is not permitted and that from now on the "no-tipping" rule will be enforced.

Peak took this action after his attention, he said, had been called to the generosity of the oil man to his fellow-prisoners and jail employees.

As a result all of Sinclair's money except "$5 or $6" has been taken away from him and placed in the office safe. The money left in his possession is to enable Sinclair to purchase sweets at the jail store.

Peak said Sinclair brought "about $200 or $300" to jail with him and a large part of this amount was placed in the safe upon his arival.

An investigation of the oil man's tipping was started after a report leaked out that he had given an attendant $5 for performing an errand. Peak said he believes this report exaggerated, but he took Sinclair's money away nevertheless.

NEW YORK FACES HUGE LAND CUT

Six Square Blocks May be Dug Up for Ship Berths

Length of New Vessels to Necessitate Work

Mayor Walker Asks Funds to Finance Project

NEW YORK, May 11. (Exclusive) Six square blocks of Manhattan Island bordering on the Hudson River will have to be dug out and carted away to provide berths for the giant new ships that are being built abroad, if a plan prepared under the direction of Mayor Walker, to be submitted to the Board of Estimates and the commissioners of the sinking fund, is approved.

According to the plan all land between Twenty-third and Twenty-ninth streets from the west side and Eleventh avenue to the river will be cut away so that piers varying in length from 1100 to 1400 feet can be built.

The longest vessel now in service is the Majestic of the White Star Line, 915 feet over all. The new German liners, Europa and Bremen are to be 938 feet in length. The White Star Line is now building a ship which, according to reports, will be more than 1000 feet in length.

GOV. PHILLIPS NOT TO CALL LEGISLATURE

PHOENIX, May 11. (AP)—Gov. Phillips is "unable to find any appreciable change" in the attitude of legislators regarding the road program of the State which would form a basis for calling a special session of the Legislature, he said today in a telegram to the secretary of the Yuma Chamber of Commerce. The Governor's message is in answer to telegrams from Yuma urging him to call the Legislature in special session at once to consider a road program.

MEXICAN REBEL GOLD ATTACHED

Torreon Bank Gets Writ on Plunder in New York

Asserted Paymaster Served Papers in Jail

Gens. Escobar and Caraveo Named in Suit

NEW YORK, May 11. (AP)—Part of the $750,000 brought to New York by Salvador Ateca, reputed Mexican rebel paymaster, was attached today on a writ obtained by the Banco de la Laguna Refaccionario of Torreon, Coahuila, Mex., in a suit by the bank against rebel leaders.

The Torreon bank obtained an attachment for $168,000 in an action against Gen. Gonzalo Escobar, Salvador Ateca, Antonio Maquero, Ateca's secretary, and Gen. Mercelo Caraveo, former Governor of Chihuahua, who joined the rebel forces.

Supreme Court Justice Gavegan signed the attachment papers on the application of New York counsel for the Torreon bank. Papers were served at once on Ateca and Maquero, who are being held in the Federal Jail, and on the officers of the Harriman National Bank, where the money is held.

The Torreon bank is the first of the Mexican banking institutions to bring action for the recovery of funds assertedly removed by the Mexican rebels. The businesslike methods of Gen. Escobar in leaving receipts in banks from which money was taken is said today to have been the basis for the suit.

Ateca was arrested in a New York hotel the 4th inst. with his secretary and two Americans who are charged with conspiracy to help him flee the country.

STATE DEPARTMENT HAS ATECA UNDER INVESTIGATION

WASHINGTON, May 11. (AP)—The State and Justice departments have under investigation the entry into this country of Salvador Ateca, asserted Mexican rebel paymaster, with about $700,000 said by the Mexican government to have been taken illegally from Chihuahua banks and government sources.

Pending receipt of extradition papers for the Mexican Embassy the State and Justice departments have set out to learn whether Ateca is wanted for political offenses or whether he is wanted by Mexico to be tried on charges of theft. Heretofore the American government has declined to surrender political refugees as such.

Ambassador Telles of Mexico is expected to return to Washington next week.

After a conference today with Secretary Stimson Representative Laguardia, Republican, New York, said he was sure the State Department would look into the matter carefully and that Ateca will have an opportunity to prove his political activities.

Mexico Denies Retrial Pleas of Rebel Aides

MEXICO CITY, May 11. (AP)—Attempts to obtain new trials for seventeen women out of thirty-nine who just have been sent to the penal colony on Las Tres Marias Islands, off the West Coast, on charges of smuggling arms and ammunition to the so-called religious rebels, failed today. The District Court denied application for a permanent restraining order against their detention in the famous island colony on the ground that the lawyers presented insufficient evidence that they had not received a fair trial.

Some of the women are from prominent families here and in Guadalajara. A temporary injunction pending today's hearing failed to reach the port of Manzanillo before they embarked for the islands.

Among the thirty-five other prisoners transferred is Mother Concepcion, who is serving a sentence of twenty years as "intellectual author" of the assassination last July of President-elect Obregon.

Organ Pumpers Plan Contest

CHICAGO, May 11. (Exclusive)—Affairs in the National Guild of Pipe Organ Pumpers have gone from serious to worse, it was learned today by detectives who have been shadowing Julius Rosenwald and Benjamin F. Afflock since the latter challenged the former to a public display of his talent for manning the organ pump.

There will be no public exhibition of feats of skill by these two celebrities, it has been definitely ascertained, but the two nevertheless will meet in combat on the 21st inst. when the next meeting of the pumpers is to be held.

Bandit Battle Wounds Two

SACRAMENTO, May 11. (AP)—In a gun battle here tonight with an admitted "petting-party" bandit, Deputy Sheriff Squiffiet was shot through the right shoulder, and the bandit, who gave the name of Clarence Gardner, 42 years of age, an asserted ex-convict, suffered three bullet wounds in the body before he submitted to arrest.

HOW SIMPLE, KNIFELESS GLAND OPERATION INCREASES STRENGTH OF THE WEAK, AILING AND CHRONICALLY SICK

Years of Intensive Study and Experimentation Reward Famous California Surgeon In Astounding Accomplishments

Clayton E. Wheeler M.D.

Former Stanford House Surgeon, San Francisco Hospital, Clinical Instructor Stanford University, Assistant Gynecologist, San Francisco Hospital.

"Ranking among the greater discoveries of this marvelous age, our knowledge of the importance of the ductless glands of the human body in its control of health, or lack of it, is by no means secondary in scientific progress."

This statement comes of a noted and authoritative writer on medical topics whose contributions are given utmost consideration by medical educators.

DR. WHEELER A PIONEER IN GLAND SURGERY AND THERAPY

Ten years ago Dr. Clayton E. Wheeler first gave the results of his astonishing experiments in gland surgery and therapy to the public, since when he has performed more than 16,000 of his knifeless, simple gland operations. His patients have come from every part of the land, and his fame has extended to the most distant parts of the world. His methods have become one of the outstanding forms of treatment in all endocrine (ductless glands) disorders, and its value has been definitely proven in physical decline, arteriosclerosis (hardening of the arteries), high blood pressure, and a host of other disorders.

RE-VITALIZING AND RE-ENERGIZING AGING ORGANISM

Careful research has disclosed that the splendid results following the Dr. Clayton F. Wheeler knifeless gland operation are largely due to the action of the introduction of young, live, virile gland tissue, in accordance to the sufferer's requirements, and the activity is carried to all body cells through the blood stream. In other words, gland dysfunction is restored to normal function.

DR. WHEELER MAY BE CONSULTED WITHOUT CHARGE

No charge is made by Dr. Wheeler for consultation, but when convenient, an appointment should be made in advance by telephoning WAshington 2311.

Engineer Tells of Writing Smithsonian Articles

WASHINGTON, May 11. (AP)—Frank E. Gannett of Rochester, N. Y., newspaper publisher, and S. E. Thomason, co-owner of Bryan-Thomason Newspapers, Inc., were summoned today by the Federal Trade Commission to appear before it next Wednesday in connection with its investigation into the newspaper financial interests of the International Paper and Power Company.

The commission also announced that Frank D. Comerford of Boston, vice-president of the International Paper and Power Company, and N. C. Head of New York, vice-president and assistant to the president of that company, would appear nup hearings on the 16th and 17 inst.

The commission today continued its inquiry into the general phases of the publicity activities of the public power utilities, hearing Samuel S. Wyer of Columbus, O., who described himself as a consulting engineer for public utilities.

Wyer was questioned principally about his publication of two monographs under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institution, which opposed the government ownership of electric power projects.

Wyer testified that he had obtained material for the two articles bearing the imprint of the Smithsonian while he was being paid by private utility interests. One related, he said, to the government-owned hydroelectric project of the Province of Ontario in Canada and the other was on the resources of Pennsylvania, with special attention to power possibilities in that State.

A third pamphlet based on a survey of the Muscle Shoals project in Alabama, was proposed by the Smithsonian, Wyer testified, but it was never published as its plans were upset after a "cub reporter" in Chattanooga, Tenn., had prematurely published a story revealing that the survey was to be made.

OAKLAND MAYOR MAKES HIT AMONG LONDONERS

LONDON, May 11. (AP)—Mayor John L. Davie of Oakland, Cal., who has been visiting England, made such a hit with his western sombrero and whiskers that he is said to have been offered the mayoralty of several English towns.

When asked about it, Mayor Davie just shook his head and said, "Say, boys, this is a fine town, but you should see Oakland, Cal."

While London has been looking over Mayor Davie, he has been busy looking over London, especially noting its air fields, and its traffic.

"I am surprised to find London traffic so well handled and moving so swiftly," said Mayor Davie. "It is marvelous how perfectly and instantaneously drivers obey the simple raising or lowering of the London policeman's white-sleeved arm.

"I like the idea of the white lines painted on the street pavements, too, and the instructions, 'look right' and 'look left' painted on the roads at dangerous corners for the benefit of pedestrians. There are more one-way streets here, too, than we have in the United States. In these respects we can learn from Europe with advantage in dealing with our own traffic problems.

"But when it comes to air fields, Europe can't hold a candle to Oakland."

Mayor Davie and his son, with P. H. Fisher, are going to try to "do" Scotland if possible, and Ireland, before returning home.

HOOVER PLANS SOUTHERN TOUR

President Will Go as Far as Texas This Fall

Itinerary Still Remains in Guesswork Stage

President Slips Away for Afternoon's Fishing

WASHINGTON, May 11. (AP)—President Hoover contemplates a tour of the South and is hopeful that the administrative and legislative situation will be cleared up sufficiently so that he can absent himself from the capital for an appreciable length of time this fall.

While the itinerary of the southern trip as yet has not even approached the formulative stage, it will carry him as far southwest as Texas, which he has been urged to visit ever since his election. He had considered going there on the return from South America, but found that time would not permit.

Attended by perfect weather, the President slipped away from his desk at the executive offices today for a half-holiday in the country and another try at the trout of his Maryland preserve.

AIR CORPS MOVES ON OHIO

Nation's Military Aeronautic Power Concentrates for Maneuvers to Start Wednesday

COLUMBUS (O.) May 11. (AP)—The pride of the nation's military air power—the crack units of the Air Corps—is moving on Ohio tonight to take part in the air-ground maneuvers, from next Wednesday, to the 25th inst.

The concentration will include more than 200 airplanes, the greatest peace-time gathering of armed aircraft in the nation's history. They are winging their way from Pacific and Atlantic seaboards, from the North and South, to Wright Field, Dayton, O., and Norton Field, Columbus.

Along with aerial tactics, and bombless bombing raids, there will be aerial reviews and spectacular demonstrations as features of the mimic war.

These features include a long-distance, nonstop bombing raid on New York, a daylight bombing raid on Cincinnati by the entire sky fleet, and a demonstration of the fire power of machine-gun-equipped planes and bombers at Wright Field, Saturday afternoon, the 25th inst.

Ohio has been divided into two States—the Red and the Blue. The boundary is an irregular line running south from a point west of Toledo to a point on the Ohio River approximately midway between Cincinnati and Portsmouth. To the east lies the Red State and to the west the Blue.

The problem for the maneuver is the attack of the Blue army on Columbus, O., the capital of the Red State.

Preceding the air-ground phase of the maneuvers, the air forces of the Red and Blue armies, about 100 planes each, will execute an aerial maneuver from the 16th to the 21st inst. without ground troops.

While the air forces of the two "hostile" armies will be represented by actual men and ships in the air, the ground troops will be mostly hypothetical.

TWENTY-ONE PLANES ON WAY TO MANEUVERS

LAWTON (Okla.) May 11. (AP)—Twenty-one planes of the United States Army Air Service en route from Rockwell Field, California, to Wilbur Field, Dayton, O., where they will participate in air-corps maneuvers, arrived at Post Field, Fort Sill, Okla., tonight.

NEW CONTROL IN RADIO URGED

Caldwell Advises Regulation to Halt Monopoly Trend

WASHINGTON, May 11. (AP)—Lewis G. Caldwell, former counsel for the Radio Commission, told the Senate Interstate Commerce Commission Committee today that a "trend toward monopoly" calls for establishment of a general commission to regulate point-to-point and foreign radio communication.

Caldwell said he regards radio "as one our most valuable natural resources" and declared that "without rigid regulation there will be anarchy."

He denied, however, that there is a "tendency toward monoply" in the broadcast field.

"The broadcasting chains," he declared, merely are selling their programs to stations that want to buy them."

COMMITTEE FINISHES WITH CASE OF VARE

WASHINGTON, May 11. (AP)—The Senate's Campaign Funds Expenditures Committee, which investigated the 1926 primary campaign of Senator-elect Vare of Pennsylvania, agreed at a special meeting today that further proceedings touching Mr. Vare's right to a seat devolve upon the Senate itself.

VETERANS' MEASURES ADOPTED

One Provides for Home Purchase Bonds and Other for Emergency Council

SACRAMENTO, May 11. (AP)—Two bills in the war veterans' program of legislation were passed by the Senate to the Governor today. The measure provided for a $30,000,000 bond issue to continue in effect the Veterans Farm and Home Purchase Act of 1921 and the other authorizes creation of a State emergency council to act in times of public disaster.

Both bills were introduced in the Assembly by war veteran members. The farm and home bills would enable the State Veterans Welfare Board to continue its work of rehabilitating veterans in the purchase of lands and residences. The State would be reimbursed for such expenditures through payments made by the veterans.

The emergency bill authorizes the governor to appoint nine persons members of the body to take charge of aid operations at scenes of disasters. One member of the council would be the head of the State department of finance, others the heads of the department of public works, department of public health, members of the American Legion, American Red Cross, one would represent transportation interests of the State, one the business organizations and one would be a peace officer.

It would be the duty of the council to prepare a general plan and designate ways and means for meeting any great emergency, such as floods, fires, tornadoes, earthquakes, pestilence and similar conditions.

BRITISH WAR ACE KILLED IN CRASH

Capt. Ronald Smith Falls to Death Testing Plane

LOWELL (Mass.) May 11. (AP)—Capt. Ronald Smith, British wartime aviator with five enemy planes to his credit, was killed here today as the Moth plane he was testing ended in a tail-end maneuver with a dive into a marsh at the edge of Lowell Airport. The plane was demolished.

Frank M. Smith, general manager of the Moth Airplane Corporation, American successor to the British Moth-De Haviland Company, issued a statement after an investigation saying he attributed the crash to Smith's having attempted a tail spin at too low an altitude. The plane was carrying what is known as a "full load" of sand ballast.

Capt. Smith came to this country as a test pilot for the British Company. When the American company was formed he elected to remain here as its chief pilot.

During Capt. Smith's service in the British Air Force he participated in many aerial battles, downing five German planes and being himself thrice shot down, once seriously wounded. He was 38 years of age and married.

"I was all out of fix from head to foot before I got hold of Sargon. My stomach gave me all sorts of trouble, and after every meal I would feel miserable. I took a lot of medicines, but kept getting worse. Then my good friend Charlie Haynes, who had taken Sargon, got me started on it, and right from the start I knew I had a real 'honest-to-goodness' medicine. DEBT EXPERTS HIE TO COUNTRY

Conferees Take Day Off from Reparations Parley

Schacht and Stamp Will Have Meeting Tomorrow

Former Makes Fast Trip to Essen for Confab

PARIS, May 11. (AP)—Fresh air proved a powerful attraction for the experts of the reparations conference today and most of the delegates left Paris early in the morning for the country. Headquarters of the second Dawes committee was deserted.

Dr. Hjalmar Schacht and Dr. Voegler of the German delegation made an overnight trip to Essen, Germany, but headquarters of the German delegation appeared unable to give any exact information as to its purpose.

In any case the chief German delegate has an urgent appointment with Sir Josiah Stamp of the British delegation on Monday morning to resume work on the experts' report. The other experts will enjoy a day or two of golf and other country pleasures.

Resumption of the committee's general work is waiting on the results of efforts by the British and German experts to arrive at something likely to prove acceptable to their colleagues.

As far as chances of success in solving the German reparations problem are concerned, the situation appears unchanged. Everything depends on the nature of the German conditions as incorporated in the report which Sir Josiah Stamp now is drafting.

If they prove acceptable, the only remaining difficulties would be Belgium's demands for the revalorization of the marks left in Belgium at the end of the war and the question of reparation of the annuities. It is probable that both problems will be referred to the governments. In that case the final report of the committee will register agreement on the annuities unless the German conditions are such as cannot be accepted by the creditors.

ESSEN CONFERENCE CONCERNS BANK ISSUES

ESSEN (Germany) May 11. (AP)—Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, chief German delegate to the reparations conference at Paris, and his colleague Dr. Voegler arrived here unexpectedly today from Paris for a consultation with Karl Rambeau, manager of the local branch of the Reichsbank.

They reached Essen at noon, after traveling overnight from the French capital, and immediately called Herr Rambeau into conference with them at their hotel.

The purpose of the visit, according to the Rhenish Westphalian Gazette, principal industrial organ of Western Germany, is to discuss with local interests how to apply the Reichsbank's credit restrictions, which Dr. Schacht inaugurated recently, without hurting Germany's industrial nerve center. Essen is at the heart of this nerve system.

The Gazette explains that in this emergency it was felt that Dr. Schacht's personal touch would be indispensable. The main point is to make sure of avoidance of any stoppage of work as a result of the credit restrictions, since any labor trouble would be highly undesirable at the present moment.

It appears that some of the local branches of the Reichsbank have been having difficulties in screwing down industrial credits to the level ordered by the main bank at Berlin, although they say they exercised every care to eliminate all credits that were obviously destined to finance the hoarding of foreign exchanges or speculation on the Bourse.

Dr. Schacht's presence here doubtless will serve to bring home to the local industrialists the necessity of applying measures dictated by the needs of the hour, while Dr. Voegler, who is on the directorates of most of the iron and steel enterprises here, will add his personal influence in handling the local situation.

DISABLED BUDDIES TO BE HONORED

Legion Members Will Visit Wounded Veterans in Hospitals Today

SAN FRANCISCO, May 11. (Exclusive)—Wounded and disabled World War veterans throughout California will be honored by their comrades tomorrow, which has been set aside by the government as hospital day, according to an announcement sent to the 300-odd posts of the American Legion in this State by State Commander F. N. Belgrano, Jr., of the ex-servicemen's organization.

Special pilgrimages will be made to each of the government hospitals according to plans outlined by State Commander Belgrano and James K. Fisk, State Adjutant of the American Legion.

At the United States Veterans' Hospital at Livermore, Katherine Simmons, director of the American Red Cross there, has arranged a special program, including a band concert by the Richmond municipal band, which will be brought to the institution by the Richmond Lions' Club.

Programs will be arranged for the veterans' hospitals in Southern California, at Palo Alto and locally.

DROUTH REIGNS IN WASHINGTON

National Capital Startled by Arid Functions

Jones Law Severities Held Cause by Some

Sentiment for Lawkeeping Growing, However

WASHINGTON, May 11. (Exclusive)—The drastic nature of the Jones law, designed to increase prohibition violation penalties, has had a number of unexpected reactions in Washington.

It seems, for instance, to have made it more difficult for so-called "wet-drinking, dry-voting" legislators to find enjoyable thirst quenchers in diplomatic quarters.

Gossip has it that at luncheons and dinners under embassy or legation auspices there is a tendency not to embarrass dry-voting Senators or House members who happen to be among the guests by even offering them alcoholic stimulants.

MANY SEE SLAM

It is only natural that some observers should see in this custom, if it can be called that, an ironical desire by diplomatic hosts to impose penalties of their own on personally wet but politically dry legislators.

What is far more likely to explain greater safeguarding of the use of diplomatic liquors is fear that servants who are Americans or subject to American law might get into difficulties under the rigid aplication of the Jones law.

That would be mighty embarrassing to the diplomats themselves, and they seem to have taken warning from the rather fruitless raid on the Siamese Legation liquor truck.

At least, it is understood there has been much conversation among diplomats on the desirability of keeping drinks off the table at embassy and legation functions where American officials are present.

The dinner given by Ambassador Davila of Chile and around which turned much of the story of the social precedence to be given Mrs. Gann as hostess for her brother, Vice-President Curtis, was a case in point.

It was totally and completely dry and there are apt to be a lot of similarly arid diplomatic functions in Washington from now on.

CLUBS GETTING DRY

Another stratum in Washington life—unofficial, this time—reported to have moved since the Jones law went through toward greater dryness, is the country club fraternity.

There are numerous such organizations in and near Washington, and some of them, like the Congressional, and the Army Navy and Marine Corps Club still in the making, have a sort of semiofficial status.

Within the last few weeks some of these clubs frequented by Washington golfers have posted notices that drink "set-ups" to service private locker liquor stocks no longer will be in order.

Whether club managements were moved by hints of impending police raids is not definitely known.

The Siamese Legation incident and one or two other local happenings may have been taken as signs of the times.

In talking with members of some of these clubs, however, it was learned that they feel that an actual movement for better observance of the dry laws in Washington social circles has something to do with it.

New Instrument Records Storms 500 Miles at Sea

NEW YORK, May 11. (AP)—Recording storms at sea on extremely delicate seismographs is reported by S. K. Banerji of the Bombay Observatory.

Some of these storms were 500 or more miles distant in the Bay of Bengal.

Mr. Banerji says the instruments recorded three distinct types of ground tremors, identified as coming from the storms, presumably from the pounding of waves. These were the southwest monsoon storms in the Bay of Bengal or the Arabian Sea, and local disturbances.

Banerji, in writing to the British scientific journal, Nature, predicts that this use of earthquake-recording instruments will open to meteorologists a new method of forecasting storms.

He says the vibrations appear as soon as a storm forms and do not cease until it has passed completely inland.

Crew Reported Held by Savage Tribe of Eskimos

The skeleton when mounted will stand 18 feet high. Its teeth are as large as a human skull.

JUNE BUG EPIDEMIC FORCAST THIS YEAR

NEW YORK, May 11. (AP)—A widespread epidemic of June bugs is predicted for this year by scientists connected with the New York botanical garden.

These large brown or greenish beetles appear periodically. The insects spend years as white grub worms crawling beneath the ground, and eating the roots of grass. When they are ready to reproduce, they emerge as winged June bugs, lay their eggs, and soon die.

STATE WARRING ON FRUIT PESTS

Mediterranean Fly Could Ruin Trade

Director Hecke Cites Danger of Quarantine

Prevention of Entry Urged Instead of Control

SACRAMENTO, May 11. (Exclusive)—"From 80 to 90 per cent of California's fruit and vegetable crops each year is sold outside the State. The total annual value of these crops is nearly $200,000,000. Should it become necessary, as it has in Florida on account of the Mediterranean fruit fly, for Federal quarantines to be imposed against us," says Director Hecke of the State Department of Agriculture, "consider what the dire result would be. Our fruit industry simply must be protected against invasion of pest and diseases from the outside.

"Prevention of entry of plant pests is far more efficient and far more economical than control of pests after they have once entered and become established.

"For more than fifty years the fruit growers of this State have been imbued with the sound principle of plant quarantine protection. The idea originated in Sonoma Valley in 1874 when a committee was chosen to petition the Legislature for quarantines to control phylloxera (grape vine plant lice.) Sentiment for organized protective effort to control the spread of injurious insects continued to grow until in 1889 the first general quarantine law in California was enacted. Federal quarantine laws were first enacted in 1912 and the Mediterranean fruit fly was one of only three insect enemies specifically mentioned.

STATE TAKES LEAD

"Agencies for the protection of agriculture through quarantines have steadily become more highly developed. California has taken the lead from the very beginning, and the pioneers of the horticultural industry of this State cannot be given too much credit for their wisdom and foresight. In this State authority has been ample and enforcement agencies have always had the support of public sentiment in general and of the agricultural interests particularly.

"The wide diversity of California's fruit and vegetable products furnishes especially favorable conditions for injurious insects to become established here. Yet so strictly have our quarantines been enforced and observed that entry of the most vicious pests has been prevented up to this time.

"Constantly the quarantine inspectors at the California ports are intercepting pests of the most dangerous sort, quite frequently including the Mediterranean fruit fly from Hawaii.

PESTS TRANSPORTED

"In countries where Mediterranean fruit fly is native enemy parasites are also present. Effort has been made to transport parasites to other parts of the world in order to gain the benefit of such a natural control. The Hawaiian government sent entomologists to all parts of the world searching for insect enemies which might be propagated to feed upon Mediterranean fruit fly, and while they were successful in finding a number of parasites which prospered and multiplied rapidly in Hawaii, the fruit fly, due to the number and abundance of wild and cultivated host fruits, was able to propagate more rapidly.

"In Australia, New Zealand and the Halaiian Islands tremendous sums of money have been expended by those governments for the control and eradication of the Mediterranean fruit fly, all of which effort has been without success.

HOPE FOR SUCCESS

"We sincerely hope that the eradication campaign in Florida, backed with the financial strength of the United States Department of Agriculture and its large corps of experts, besides all the resources of the State of Florida administration, may be successful.

"Congress has appropriated $4,250,000 and Florida $300,000 to carry on the control and eradication effort.

"California has increased the budget of the State Department of Agriculture to increase its inspection and quarantine forces.

The fly is slightly smaller than a house fly, and is strikingly beautiful, is of the same general shape, except that the abdomen ends in a sharp point. The general color is yellowish, with beautiful black and white markings on the raised rounded thorax. At first glance, the most characteristic feature that would probably be noticed by the average grower, and which would quickly distinguish this species from the common house fly, is the peculiar banded wings, which are partly transparent, and each one marked with four irregular yellowish-brown blotches, one at the base, and the other three on the broad part. The abdomen is dull yellow, with two silvery or light-purplish bands crossing it. The whole body is more or less hairy, and the adult carries its wings in a peculiar drooping manner. The eyes are dark-purplish, and the legs are dull yellow.

STATE SENATE SPEEDS WORK

Sixty-nine Bills Disposed of in Saturday Session

Number of Vexing Problems to Come Up This Week

San Francisco Harbor Rule One of Biennial Topics

BY C. A. JONES
"Times" Staff Representative

SACRAMENTO, May 11. (Exclusive)—The Senate today held the first Saturday session of the year and managed to reduce by sixty-nine the number of bills on its files. Nothing but uncontested measures were taken up, the work generally being local salary measures and county government bills.

There remain but three working days, with adjournment fixed for Wednesday, with about 500 bills to be acted on by both houses. Many of these will die on the files. Among the contests expected are those on control of San Francisco Harbor, resumption of hydraulic mining and water-conservation bonds.

Control of San Francisco's harbor is a biennial fight. At present the State runs the harbor and San Francisco wants it herself. The bill originated in the Assembly and went through the lower house in a hurry. Gov. Young has announced his intention of vetoing the bill. The measure then went to the Senate, where the Commerce and Navigation Committee throttled it. It was withdrawn from the committee last week by a vote of 22 to 16.

ANOTHER BATTLE

Hydraulic mining is another ancient cause of battle. The mountain counties want this industry resumed, while the valley counties oppose it. Assemblyman Seawell of Roseville has managed to get it through the Assembly and it now is in the Senate Finance Committee with a bitter contest due in that committee Monday morning. The bill calls for an appropriation for the construction of dams to restrain the tailings from hydraulic mining operations.

The Assembly Constitutional Amendments Committee has recommended favorably the proposed bond issue of Senators Swing of San Bernardino and Sharkey of Martinez providing for $15,000,000 State aid to Santa Ana River flood control and $15,000,000 State aid to the salt-water barrier across San Francisco Bay. A minority report from the committee attacks the amendment, terming it an effort to destroy the State-wide water-conservation plan. It originally was planned to place a bond issue of $120,000,000 before the people, but this amendment died on the file.

VETERANS' FUND

The Senate today approved a measure submitting to a vote of the people next year a $20,000,000 bond issue to provide additional funds for the continuation of the work of the Veterans' Welfare Board in assisting war veterans in obtaining farms and homes through loans from the State. These loans are to be repaid with interest by the veterans.

The Senate also passed a measure introduced by Assemblyman Roberts of Los Angeles, which provides that the names of the Presidential candidates of the major parties be placed on the ballot along with the names of the electors.

A commission of nine to study the laws relating to county government is created in a bill passed by the Senate. As it is now, all of the counties except the six charter counties, must come to the Legislature to make each minor change in their form, even to a $10 rise for some deputy clerk.

The Assembly next Monday will take up the bills of Senator Fellom of San Francisco, which are designed gradually to eliminate toll bridges from private ownership and merge them into the State highway system. The northern part of the State as well as the territory about San Francisco Bay is in a frenzy on this topic, which has a very slight bearing on Southern California.

State Bar Will Fight Measure

SAN FRANCISCO, May 11. (Exclusive)—Members of the State Bar Association will fight vigorously against Assemblyman Hornblower's bill taking from the board of governors, the bar examiners and the State Supreme Court the power to establish educational qualifications in bar examinations, it was announced here today.

Headed by President Thomas C. Ridgeway, a delegation including members of the board of governors will protest the passage of the bill tomorrow night before the Senate Judiciary Committee in Sacramento.

Arizona Names Edison Test Day

PHOENIX (Ariz.) May 11. (AP)—Competitive examinations will be conducted by the Arizona State Board of Education in Phoenix the 20th inst. to select the boy who will represent Arizona in the Thomas A. Edison scholarship contest, it was announced today at the office of Gov. Phillips.

Under terms of the competition, each high school in the State will be entitled to send one contestant to the State test. Schools having a student body in excess of 700 will be allowed one candidate for each 700 students or major fraction thereof.

ABALONE MEASURE PASSED BY SENATE

SACRAMENTO, May 11. (AP)—The limit on Abalones in Humboldt county was fixed at ten by a bill passed by the State Senate today, convened in the first Saturday session of the Legislature. Senator Nelson also obtained passage of Fisher's bill relating to the use of crab nets in the Humboldt district. Both bills were sent to the Governor.

EMPLOYERS WARN SYMPATHY STRIKERS

NEW YORK, May .9. (Exclusive) Unless the mechanics a. iated with the Building Trades Council who are on sympathetic strikes in support of Electrical Workers' Union, No. 3, are returned to the jobs, the Building Trades Employers' Association will order a lockout of the 75,000 men in their employ next Wednesday, according to a statement today by C. G. Norman, executive head of the employers' association.

RUSSIA'S BREAD SHORTAGE TOLD

Dr. Julius Klein Cites Soviet Plight in Radio Talk

All Cities Declared Rationed and Prices Mounting

Necessity for Heavy Imports of Grain Set Forth

WASHINGTON, May 11. (AP)—A serious grain and food shortage in Russia was described tonight by Dr. Julius Klein, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, in a radio talk over the National Broadcasting Company chain.

"Clearly, a rather serious plight exists within the soviet union," he declared. "The gravest problem arises from the undeniable shortage of grain and a consequent scarcity of bread. All social elements are affected. Every city is rationed, prices are mounting, peasants are leaving their farms."

Russia will be compelled to import grain before the spring harvest, Dr. Klein said, adding that estimates of the amount needed go as high as 500,000 tons, of which much will be imported from Argentina.

Book Reveals Shorthand Used Many Years Ago

AUSTIN (Tex.) May 11. (AP)—The stenographer's art is an old one. Evidence that shorthand existed more than a century ago has been found in Spanish text-books at the University of Texas library.

One text, published in 1811 by its author, Don Guillelmo Atanasio Xramillo, relates that it was a modified form of a shorthand book he once studied. Reference to public examination indicates that shorthand was of somewhat general importance.

Another text, written in Spanish and published in 1821 by Don Francisco De Paula Marti, says there were more than fifty methods of shorthand in French and English at that time.

MEXICO TO END BOARDS' LIVES

Efficiency and Tariff Units Die on June 1, Next

Plan to Place Railways on Sound Basis Studied

Candidates Get Free Sway in Their Campaign

MEXICO CITY, May 11, (Exclusive)—The efficiency and tariff commissions of the National Railways of Mexico, created by the Lamont-Pani agreement for the purpose of working jointly with the valuation commission created by the same agreement on a plan for the rehabilitation of the railways, will cease to function after June 1, it is announced by the Ministry of Finance. The abolition of the two commission, now that the valuation commission ended its labors last month, is being brought about with the approval of the international committee of bankers, the Ministry announces.

That the commissions no longer are needed is the reason given for the decision reached. An important part of the statement declares that the government is studying a plan of administrative and financial reorganization of the railways to put them on a solid basis. This has created the opinion here that the government now is nearing the completion of this reorganization plan which will be allied with the pending new agreement to be made with the international bankers on the resumption of interest payment on the foreign debt.

CANDIDATES GET PLEDGE

Absolute liberty of speech, thought and action is to be accorded Presidential candidates in the race to succeed him in office next February, President Portes Gil has made known in a statement issued by Felipe Canales, acting Secretary of the Interior. With the rebellion over, the Mexican political caldron is beginning to brew, although it is not now generally anticipated that it will boil over as election fervor reaches fever heat next November. This is due to the damper put on overanxious politicians by the defeat of the March insurrection.

Canales's statement was prompted by the arrest Thursday of a group of followers of the independent candidate, Jose Vasconcelos, who were charged with having attacked several government officials. All those arrested were released immediately by order of the President, who is quoted in the Canales statement as desirous of expressing his disapproval of the action taken by the police.

With Gilberto Valenzuela, former Minister to London, believed to be virtually eliminated from the Presidential race by virtue of his presence in the State of Sonora when the rebellion broke out and Antonio Villareal eliminated because of his active participation in the uprising, Vasconcelos remains with at least one and possible two opponents in the field. Pascual Artiz Rubio, former Ambassador to Brazil, seems to be favored in the betting as he generally is credited with the support of the National Revolutionary party to which both former President Calles and Portes Gil belong.

Aaron Saens, former Secretary of Foreign Affairs, has not definitely outlined his intentions and at the moment it is not known whether he will run. The directors of the Antire-Electionists party have resigned their posts and this group which might be called the government opposition seems to be tottering between a desire to continue its activities or drop out of the struggle entirely.

Noted Geologist Supports Theory That [illegible] Hurled From This Planet

WASHINGTON, May 11. (AP)—Tidal action [illegible] which wrenched away a portion of crust from the [illegible] into space to form the moon, caused the world's [illegible]

That is the opinion held by William Bowie, chief of the division of geodesy, United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, in backing the hypothesis advanced by Osmond Fisher.

Fisher contended that the disruptive force was either a violent explosion or a tidal action. Bowie, from his research, discounts the explosion, stating that there is some doubt whether the scattered pieces could have assembled and formed the moon, while tidal action, aided by bodily oscillations of the earth, is easily creditable.

The hypothesis, according to Bowie, is the best explanation of why granites were pushed or pulled into piles as they are on the earth. Under the planitesimal theory there is no accounting for the collection of such granites in certain spots.

Lifting the veil of the past, the earth is seen as a dense, molten mass slowly being covered with a shell as lighter material rose to the surface and cooled. The coating was of granite while the inner part was made up of basaltic material like lava.

The vast force which disrupted the crust ripped off [illegible] the Pacific Ocean [illegible] large granite [illegible] rope and Africa [illegible] and South America [illegible] gradually drifted [illegible] them, like a [illegible] ocean formed.

MEXICO SIGHTS CHURCH PEACE

Negotiations Believed to be on Road to Success

Portes Gil's Offer Results in Flood of Comment

Archbishop Believed to be Backed by Vatican

MEXICO CITY, May 11. (Exclusive)—While the optimists and pessimists seem to be about equally divided on President Portes Gil's statement in which he expressed his willingness to enter into negotiation with the Archbishop of Michoacan, Leopoldo Ruiz y Flores, present head of the Mexican Catholic church, which might lead to a solution of Mexico's vexing religious conflict, the opinion is expressed in well-informed quarters that possible settlement of the religious question looms brighter now than it ever has since the religious laws were made effective August 1, 1926.

Because of previous failures to reach such an agreement, however, any report of renewed negotiations in this direction is inclined to be received with skepticism in Mexico City.

It is not believed that former President Calles will use his influence to prevent any such negotiations. As a result of a canvass made in quarters in a position to know both the government's and church's attitude, the view is expressed that where there is a will there is a way and in this case it appears that both the state and church desire a settlement of the long-standing deadlock that has torn Mexico asunder in civil war during the last three years and which is admittedly one, if not the major, problem of internal importance to the welfare of the republic.

DIPLOMATS WATCH

Diplomatic circles have shown themselves keenly interested in the President's statement and hope that the desired results will be obtained.

A high member of the church explains the Mexican Episcopacy's situation with Latin phrase and canonical saying: "Roma locuta est causa finita est," which translated means that with Rome speaking the cause is defined, or in plain English that what the Pope declares is law to the members of the Mexican Episcopacy who have been accused abroad as leaning toward a solution of their own problems in their own manner even if not quite in accord with the Vatican's wishes.

It was explained that both Monsignor Ruiz y Flores's statement and the President's reply came as a complete surprise to the local members of the Episcopacy, the majority of whom are in hiding here.

BASIC ISSUE

It is also pointed out that Monsignor Ruiz y Flores would hardly have taken the steps he has if he had not first received the Pope's approval. The resignation of priests which the church has steadfastly objected to with the same determination as the government has shown, in a contrary sense is the basic issue that has to be worked out in some form in which neither side will lose its prestige. This same high member of the church mentioned St. Thomas when he doubted Christ's resurrection and said: "When I see it, I shall believe it," when asked whether he believed some results would be obtained as a result of the President's action.

What attitude will be assumed by the militant Catholics and Cristeros, as the religious revolutionists are commonly known, if an agreement is reached which does not include the revocation or amendment of the existing religious laws, is a question that is the subject of considerable speculation here. Only a revocation of the laws, the Cristeros have maintained, can result in a permanent settlement of the church conflict. La Prensa editorializes on both the President's and Archbishop's statements with the remark that both statements are of the greatest transcendental importance, in which can be seen "serenity, nobleness and love for Mexico." The article ends: "Mutual spirit of conciliation and good faith within the mandates of the constitution will make easy the solution of this problem, which is bleeding the moral and economic situation of the country."

WOMEN HURL BABIES AS GYPSIES STAGE BATTLE

VIENNA, May 11. (Exclusive)—Eight persons were seriously injured and one is dead as the result of a battle between two rival gypsy camps in Kimpolung, Rumania.

The battle started when a Lothario of one camp eloped with his gypsy sweetheart from the other. The camp objected to the elopement which deprived it of its most beautiful girl, singer, dancer and fortune teller, through whose abilities a large part of the camp revenues was obtained.

The battle was true to all gypsy traditions, even the women participating by pulling out each other's hair. The battle became so heated after all possible objects were thrown at each other the women resorted to throwing infants at one another.

what I have learned in lands they have never visited.

Energy and self-reliance are dominating characteristics of the high-class Japanese—little bodies, but big intellects. I suspect that they are convinced they are the intellectual superiors of the Anglo-Saxon, and that, when they have mastered his surgery, hygiene and mechanical appliances their dominance will be undisputed.

ADROIT IN DIPLOMACY

But they know they are yet scientifically, mechanically weak, that they must be adroit in diplomacy until the day comes that they are powerful enough to be arrogant. As I recall my many conversations, I also recall how they accepted without belligerent protest the treaty imposed upon them by the united foreign powers at the close of the Chinese war, how secretly but assiduously they worked to build and equip a powerful army and navy, how they diplomatically isolated Russia from the other great powers before they attacked her.

I am convinced that the Japanese are sincere, for the present, in their desire for peace; but I wonder whether it is a permanent peace, or only a prolonged armistice. The Japanese of my generation are planting the seeds, and begetting sons to gather the fruit.

But this does not necessarily mean a future war of races. Peace for a generation may be fatal to dreams of future conquest. These dreams may pass with the generation that won the Chinese and Manchurian wars. How many generations of French and English dreamed of mutual conquest! Yet the end was an alliance and peace.

Our duty, as I envision it, is to aid in so organizing a majority of the world for peace, to so consolidate the victories for peace already won, that future wars of aggression from any source will be doomed in advance to failure.

"Yamato Damashii"—the soul of Japan—how carefully hidden from prying foreign eyes!

"The aggressive and invincible spirit of Japan," a phrase implanted in the breast of every Japanese boy with his mother's milk, may find its dominant expression in terms of peace!

QUIET, LIKE NOISE, ANNOYS

Scientific Studies Reveal That Silence May be as Disagreeable as Racket if Pitch is Wrong

NEW YORK, May 11. (AP)—Scientific studies on reducing unpleasant noises reveal that mere quieting of racket is not sufficient, and may even aggravate the annoyance.

This report was made today at the first convention of the newly organized Acoustical Society of America. The society was created at the American Association for the Advancement of Science, meeting here last winter, and its membership includes scientists, builders, architects and manufacturers.

Their initial convention opens the first nationally organized scientific drive not only against unnecessary noise, but to combat deafness and to study all forms of acoustics. The aim is for fundamental discoveries which later may be applied in practical fashion.

The report, showing the possible inadequacy of attaining the condition that goes by the name of "quiet" in modern surroundings, was made by Dr. Donald A. Laird, director of the psychological laboratory of Colgate University. It was based on experiments in a special sound room with more than a dozen Colgate men trained as observers.

"In some acoustical installations," said Dr. Laird, "it is observed that a small reduction in loudness is accompanied by a distinct feeling of relief, while under other conditions a much greater reduction in loudness is not followed by a proportionate feeling of relief. In consequence of these widely observed reactions many acoustical workers have suspected that the annoyance experienced by workers as a result of noise was a function of pitch as well as of intensity.

"The annoyance reaction to an auditory stimulus is similar to that experienced by rubbing one's finger over coarse sandpaper, or in biting into a piece of grit in candy or in hearing peanuts shelled during an overture.

"It is of considerable theoretical interest that those pitches which man himself makes in speech are the least annoying to him.

"Most commercial sound-absorbing materials have their highest efficiency between 256 and 2048 cycles, while it appears to be the pitches below and above these that are the most annoying and obviously should be reduced the most."

"Given the right pitches," he said, "a room can be relatively quiet but still annoying."

TEXTILE PLANT BUILDING BURNS

Third Outrage Laid to Union Men on Strike

All Property Now Patrolled by National Guard

Tennessee Executive Firm in Stand for Law

ELIZABETHTON (Tenn.) May 11. (AP)—A third outbreak of violence in as many days in connection with the strike of textile workers here took place tonight when a barn within 100 yards of the main unit of the American-Bemberg silk plant was destroyed by fire which, officers said, was "undoubtedly of incendiary origin."

The plant resumed operations a few days ago with nonunion labor.

Capt. R. T. Johnson of a National Guard unit on strike duty said an automobile loaded with men who fired guns drove away just before the barn burst into flames. The barn, filled with lumber, was reported to be the property of the mill.

A military guard was thrown about all property within two miles tonight.

Early today another barn was burned and a note left near by threatening the lives of two workers. Yesterday an explosion wrecked the home of a union striker.

Replying to protests from W. C. Bonbright, secretary of the State Federation of Labor, and Maj. George L. Berry, president of the International Pressmen's Union, Gov. Horton tonight at Nashville reiterated his intention to keep troops here "as long as any faction threatens to prevent employees who desire to do so from working in the textile plants."

Famous Scipio Tombs in Italy Will Be Opened

ROME, May 8. (Exclusive)—After fifteen centuries of neglect the famous tombs of the Scipios on the great Appian Way are to be opened to the public. Built by Appius Claudius Caecus, 312 years before Christ, these tombs were for five centuries the burial place of the noblest Romans.

Cicero and Livy both mentioned the Scipio Tomb, giving its exact position, and the poet Ennius celebrated it in his verses. In the days of the Roman republic it was regarded as one of the most magnificent of burial places.

Lucius Scipio Barbatus was the first Scipio buried there; in 259 B.C. He was followed by many others, until the line became merged in that of the Cornelian family.

Free access will be given to the public to the underground galleries and crypts by the principal entrance on the Via Appia. This entrance also had been long concealed.

CITY SUPPLIES HEAT

ST. LOUIS, May 11. (Exclusive) Heat and light for public buildings in St. Louis is now being supplied from the new $1,000,000 Municipal Service Building which was completed recently.

Herat Captured by Abdur Rahim

SIMLA (India) May 11. (AP)—Troops of Emir Bacha Sakoa under Abdur Rahim have captured the important town of Herat in Northwest Afghanistan from a force under Ghaus Mahomed, it was declared in news dispatches received here today.

The troops of Ghaus Mahomed refused to fight when Abdur Rahim's soldiers aproached the city.

TACNA-ARICA ROW RUMORED SETTLED

LIMA (Peru) May 11. (AP)—A reliable authority here today said that President Hoover in his capacity of arbitrator very probably next Monday will make announcement of settlement of the Tacna-Arica dispute between Chile and Peru. The last difficulties in phrasing the document were said to have been erased by the conferences today between President Leguia and the American and Chilean Ambassadors.

BOY SCOUTS HOLD RODEO

Six Hundred to Participate in District Event

American Legion Sponsors Celebration

Program Takes Place on Chaffey Campus

ONTARIO, May 10.—Six hundred Boy Scouts of Old Baldy Council, embracing La Verne, Claremont, Pomona, Chino, Fontana, Upland and Ontario, will assemble on Chaffey Union High School athletic field and campus Friday and Saturday, the 17th and 18th inst., for the annual rodeo and pageant, sponsored by the American Legion posts of the respective communities.

Friday will be devoted to the rodeo proper. In the evening the boys will pitch their tents and camp on the athletic field, and on Saturday they will compete in scout contests, demonstrations and games.

Several thousand adults are expected to be attracted to the field during the two-day scout jamboree.

The rodeo is divided into two divisions, the junior and senior. In the junior division the boys will compete in a first-aid contest; a water-boiling contest in which specified articles are to be furnished, including only two matches for lighting the fire, and a knot-tying relay.

The senior division contest is divided into four classes. Scouts from each troop will engage in a tent-pitching contest. A team of eight Scouts from each troop will engage in a bridge-building contest. One scout will represent each troop in a fire by friction contest, and the various troops will be represented by four scouts each in international Morse signaling competition. The boys will compete as individuals and not as troops in knot tying, archery and fire by friction.

The rodeo general committee is—P. F. Hunnewel, chairman, Ontario; A. L. Davenport, Ontario; Earl Marsh; Upland; Dr. Scudder, Pomona; Jack Bailey, Chino; Dr. LeRoy St. Clair, LaVerne, and K. R. Baughman, Claremont.

General chairman of the various committees are—concession, T. C. Howleton, Upland; stunts, Capt. R. R. Bacon, Claremont; tickets, Jack Dorrity, Ontario; arrangements, Don Craig, Ontario; treasurer, Bob Quayle, Ontario.

Five hundred scouts will participate in a gala pageant Friday evening, depicting all phases of scouting from the tenderfoot rank to the eagle rank.

Proceeds of the rodeo are to be used in repairing the Scout cabin and property at Lake Tulakes in the San Bernardino Mountains.

Committee of Citizens Favors Library Bonds

MONTEBELLO, May 11.—In order to have the need of a city library building, which will necessitate a $30,000 bond issue, thoroughly understood by the voters before election, June 11, next, a "committee of fifty," made up of prominent citizens, representatives of the Rotary Club, Lions Club and Woman's Club, will meet at the Chamber of Commerce Building Monday evening to consider plans for publicizing the needs of the community.

The city owns a parcel of land adjacent to the City Park with 150 feet fronting on Whittier Boulevard, which will be used as the library site, thus materially cutting down the amount of the bond issue.

Approximately four years ago the citizens of Montebello voted against a city library. The bonds failed because the people were not properly informed; therefore, the "committee of fifty" intends to make the facts and figures known and it is believed the bonds will carry by a big majority. At the present time the city is being served by a branch of the Los Angeles county library system.

OBSERVE MOTHER'S DAY

HUNTINGTON PARK, May 11.—Mother's Day will be observed in Huntington Park tomorrow, when the pastors of the various churches will devote their Sunday services to delivering sermons of mother. Many of the Sunday-schools will also observe this day.

Last night the local lodge of Elks gave a Mother's Day program, at which Rev. S. S. Sampson, was the speaker. Rev. Dr. W. T. Hilton was the speaker yesterday noon at a Mother's Day program given by the Kiwanis Club.

AZUSA, May 11.—In quo warranto proceedings against Mayor A. L. Meier and Councilmen Walter A. Johnson and Joe C. Muehe brought by Mrs. Dora Z. O'Neal, Dr. John E. Hill and Mrs. Carrie E. Beck as representative of the Azusa Citizens' Protective Association to establish the legality of the election of the Councilmen, Judge Tappaan late yesterday rendered a decision in favor of the Councilmen, according to their attorneys, P. J. Tscharner and Leslie Hewitt.

The court held the present officers are legally established, taking the case under advisement for a week. Attorney Roy A. Linn represented the plaintiffs, who first presented the case before Atty-Gen. U. S. Webb. The Attorney General granted permission for the suit to be filed on the grounds that the case was unprecedented as far as could be learned by documents of the law, and that the decision rendered by the court would go down o nrecord as a part of law.

The case had its inception in November following a wholesale reorganization of the City Council to prevent the recall of then Mayor C. H. Howard and Councilman E. E. Dilley. The recall petitions were circulated by members of the Azusa Protective Association following defeat of a sewer bond issue which the Councilmen favored.

According to the records, the Councilmen after learning of the proposed recall, filed their respective resignations on the afternoon of November 27, last, and called a special session that night at which they acted upon the resignations and appointed successors, one by one. Councilmen T. A. Smith and R. B. Demitt, the latter of whom was the only member not resigning, were not present at the special session.

The remaining members of the board, Howard, Dilley and Fred Stone, appointed Muehe to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of the absent member.

After qualifying immediately, Muehe participated in the proceedings of the special meeting, as did Johnson and Meier, following their appointments to the board.

Mrs. O'Neal in speaking for the association, stated that they intended to appeal the case to a higher court.

"We haven't lost our fighting spirit one bit," Mrs. O'Neal declared, and we'll fight 'em to a finish.

WOMEN PROTEST HAND-BILL NUISANCE

ONTARIO, May 11.—Housewives of Ontario are to decide whether the practice of flinging advertising matter on the porches, lawns or in automobiles is to continue or whether a new ordinance is to be drawn up to stop the practice. Directors of Ontario Business Men's Association, according to F. H. Wallihan, secretary-manager, have decided to place a ballot in the hands of every housewife of Ontario with request that she vote her opinion against the handbill practice and return her ballot to the association. The directors feel that the wish of the majority of the householders of the city should prevail in the matter, as they are the ones who must in most cases rid the lawns and porches of the printed matter.

DECK HAND MISSING

Sailor Who Disappears from Tug at San Diego May Have Been Knocked Into Sea

SAN DIEGO, May 11.—Efforts to locate the body of Charles Schindler, 38-year-old deck hand on the tug Palomar, who disappeared from the tug at noon yesterday when the tug was nearing the harbor entrance following a trip from San Pedro, have proved fruitless, according to Carl A. Bruington, superintendent Star and Crescent Boat Company, the firm operating the Palomar. Diligent search for Schindler was made within a few minutes after the deck hand's disappearance by Capt. Manuel Moniz, of the Palomar and during the afternoon by Bruington and Capt. O. J. Hall, head of the boat company, Bruington said.

Schindler is believed to have been struck by the cable being used by the Palomar to tow a barge, a theory having been advanced that the cable whipped over, knocking Schindler unconscious and throwing him overboard. Three minutes before Schindler's disappearance Capt. Moniz was talking with him, the pair standing near the rollers which guide the towing cable, according to Moniz, who said that he then was called to the pilothouse and then when he returned Schindler had vanished.

More than an hour's time was spent by Capt. Moniz in searching for Schindler's body before the Palomar put into port, according to Bruington. The accident occurred just off the light buoy at the harbor entrance. In addition to the search made yesterday afternoon by Capt. Hall and Bruington, search also was made again by Capt. Moniz, accompanied by Deputy Sheriff J. B. Martin. Schindler, who had been employed by the boat company for three years, is survived by his widow and one child.

NEW OFFICES AT BORDER

Government to Spend Large Sum for Building

San Ysidro Gives Site for Structure

Construction to be Started Immediately

SAN DIEGO, May 11. — Announcement that the United States government will begin construction of the customs and immigration buildings at San Ysidro as soon as the county has completed the necessary road and other improvements was made this morning by Orville McPherson, executive manager of the Chamber of Commerce. An appropriation of $105,000 is available for the project.

McPherson has just returned from a three weeks' business trip to Washington where he conferred with government officials on various Chamber of Commerce activities and projects in which the city is vitally interested. His primary mission was to follow through on the work of Maj. Theodore McAuley regarding the San Ysidro gate and buildings.

Upon the recommendation of Frank Dow, Commissioner of Customs, and the supervising architect's office, the site offered by San Ysidro for the new government buildings was accepted by Seymour Lohman, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. In addition to voicing his approval of the San Ysidro site, Lohman revoked the order which would have authorized the opening of Gate No. 2. McPherson was assisted in this work by Senator Shortridge and Congressman Swing.

The executive manager of the chamber voiced the belief that San Diego will secure both the $5,000,000 naval airship station at Camp Kearny and the $3,000,000 army air corps repair depot.

Following a conference with Assistant Postmaster-General Glover, McPherson was assured that when the southern air-mail route is inaugurated next year, San Diego will be placed on this route. The Chamber of Commerce has been working on this project for more than two years and has received the enthusiastic support of chambers of commerce in communities extending along the proposed airway as far east as El Paso.

EXPERT DISCUSSES INHERITANCE TAX

SANTA BARBARA, May 11.—"California is the cheapest place in the United States to die and also the best, so I don't see why all the rich people do not come here to spend their last days," declared R. W. Smith, tax expert of Los Angeles, addressing the Rotary Club yesterday noon.

"California has the finest system for gathering taxes and the best basic revenue plan in the entire system of States," he continued.

"Florida in abolishing the inheritance tax has not made it any cheaper for a rich man to die there, as the government collects the full tax from those who inherit the estate. In the case of California the inheritance tax paid the State is deductible from that paid to the national government, so it costs the relatives no more to pay part to California than if they had to pay it all directly to the United States."

TOWN SEEKS TO DODGE PHONE TOLL CHARGES

OWENSMOUTH, May 11. — The local Chamber of Commerce has been advised by officials of the Pacific Telephone Company that they cannot reduce phone rates in this section unless authorized by members of the Railroad Commission. In its complaint, the local chamber pointed out that Owensmouth was a part of Los Angeles, paying city taxes and assessments, and entitled to more than the high rural rate. For some time all towns in San Fernando Valley have been seeking a gradual elimination of toll charges, between themselves and Los Angeles. At various times, phone officials have pointed out that the time was not yet ripe for any change of rate schedule.

FACTORY GOES TO INGLEWOOD

Company to Build "Nite Coaches" Erects Large Building

INGLEWOOD, May 11. — The Pickwick Nite Coach Company plant has been secured for Inglewood, it was announced today by President A. E. Chamberlain of the Inglewood Chamber of Commerce. Work will start in the immediate future on the first unit of the concern, which is to cost, with equipment, approximately $100,000.

The company will manufacture a motor coach equipped with sleeping berths, the same type as was shown at the International Exposition at Mines Field last summer and several of which are now in operation by the Pickwick Stage lines.

The dimensions of the building for the first unit will be a one-story structure, 300x150 feet. It is anticipated that at least 100 men will be employed from the start and this number, according to estimates of expected business throughout this and other countries, will be rapidly increased to a much larger number.

The Pickwick plant will be built on a site just south of Mines Field and immediately adjoining that of the Moreland Airplane factory, recently completed.

The plant was secured through the industrial committee of the Inglewood Chamber of Commerce, of which George L. Veatch is chairman; Secretary James H. Dalton of the chamber, working in co-operation with W. E. McMillen, an official of the Santa Fe Railroad. The Pickwick company was represented by A. Watson, traffic manager for the Pickwick Stages. Others on the industrial committee of the chamber are: George Holman, Ralph F. Lamb, Mayor Hugh B. Lawrence, Ernest M. Mansur, A. B. McLeod and Mr. Chamberlain.

SCHOOL HEADS MEET IN STATE CONFERENCE

WHITTIER, May 11.—Today closed a three-day conference of the superintendents of the various State institutions held at the Whittier State school.

K. J. Scudder, superintendent of the local school, was host to the assembly which for the purposes of conferences was divided into three groups, namely, superintendents, managers and social workers.

Earl E. Jensen, head of the State Institutions Department, was general chairman of the meetings. One of the interesting features of the sessions was the clinic, showing how the boy was directed and programmed for training. This clinic was conducted by Dr. Norma E. Fenton, research director at the Whittier school.

The first evening of the conference, the delegates were entertained by the State school boys who put on an interesting sketch entitled "The Man Without a Country." This was so well received that the boys are again putting it on for the townspeople and other friends Monday evening.

PATIENT'S SLEEP WORRIES DOCTORS

SANTA BARBARA, May 11.—For the past forty-eight hours, a man, thought to be C. A. Smith, 4229 Taylor street, North San Diego, has lain in a heavy sleep in the County Hospital, and for at least twenty-four hours before he had been in the deep slumbers in the county automobile camp near Buellton.

Efforts of Dr. H. G. Hanze of Solvang and the Sheriff's night patrol failed to awaken the man, and a cold night ride down the highway failed to disturb his slumber. With a normal pulse, a normal temperature and apparently no injuries, the slumbering man has baffled doctors in the County Hospital.

It was several days ago that the man drove a dilapidated car into the camp. The keeper did not take any particular notice of the driver until he found him asleep in the car. The San Diego address was found in the automobile. Sheriff Ross sent a wire to Sheriff Cooper of San Diego in an attempt to learn some clew of the man's identity.

AGITATION INJURES VALLEY

Speaker Tells Imperial Ranchers That Banks Are Afraid of a Community That Cannot Agree

EL CENTRO, May 11.—Unless Imperial Valley citizens end their agitation and factional strife, they cannot expect much assistance from State and Federal banking officials in their effort to secure Federal farm loans for their lands. This prediction was made by J. J. Deuel, manager of the law and utilities department of the California Farm Bureau Federation, during a dinner given in his honor here last night.

controversy now going on among valley residents over the question of voting $2,100,000 in bonds for the installation of five small hydroelectric units in the irrigation canals. This plan is sponsored by directors of the Imperial Irrigation District.

"Imperial Valley's credit was impaired during the period when Boulder dam legislation was pending, by incessant controversy and unfavorable publicity. I had hoped that when the Swing-Johnson measure finally was passed local agitation would cease, and credit again be restored. But now I come again to the valley and find your people agitating a new issue. You cannot expect much help from leaders in the banking and business world if you cannot agree among yourselves as to what you want."

Deuel quoted figures furnished by the Farm Bureau's engineer, L. S. Wing, to show that the $2,100,000 power bond proposal offers little chance of being a profitable investment. "Then under the most favorable circumstances, this $2,000,000 investment could not make a net return of more than $50,000 annually," he said. "I believe that your ranchers could spend their time and capital much more profitably if they would devote their attention to the problem of cutting down the profits of the middlemen who are relaying their products to market."

Bearing out this opinion, Deuel cited figures recently taken from the books of a commission firm dealing in perishables from Imperial Valley, with practically no capital investment. This firm one month realized a profit of $14,900 plus large salaries for its operators. According to the speaker there are scores of middlemen reaping similar profits which should go to the farmers under a more favorable system of distribution.

Deuel told those present that application will be made next week for a further reduction in electric rates charged in Imperial Valley by the Southern Sierras Power Company. The company is now realizing 14.47 per cent on its investment. This figure will be reduced to 7 or 8 per cent when the facts are placed before the State Railroad Commission, he said.

Homer L. Chaillaux, commander of the post, presided, and the meeting was opened by Stuart Wilson, president of the 20-30 Club. Mayor Hugh B. Lawrence also spoke and lauded the Legion for its civic accomplishments.

Then came the final event. The play, "The Brat," presented at the high school auditorium. Miss Inish Russell had the lead in the play which was directed by E. R. Nichols, head of the speech department of the university.

Santa Monica Strongly Favors Proposed Harbor

Says Breakwater is No Promotion Scheme

Improvement Vital to All of California

SANTA MONICA, May 11.—Characterizing a story and editorial in this morning's edition of the Los Angeles Hearst paper as "another fabrication such as have been running for the past two or three weeks," Ed R. Conliss, vice-chairman of the Los Angeles Santa Monica Recreational Harbor Association, declared today that the proposed yacht and pleasure harbor in Santa Monica Bay would not cost anything like the sum named in the editorial.

"It seems strange," Conliss said, "that the Hearst newspapers have suddenly evinced an interest in Santa Monica and its surroundings. Up to this time, all Mr. Hearst has done for Santa Monica has been to appropriate, for his own use, 519 feet of beach sand, upon which he has built a palatial mansion, and fenced in the rest of his portion of the beach, thus denying the public the right to more than a city block and a half of beach frontage.

ENCOURAGES "SHACKS"

"He owns several miles of beach frontage extending from Santa Monica Canyon to Las Flores Canyon, and on this property his agents are leasing the beach for a term of years to those who wish to build shacks which cost $100 and up. These shacks are what travelers on the Coast highway see when coming through to Santa Monica.

"The real issue before the people of Southern California is: Can Mr. Hearst deprive us of our right to build a pleasure yacht harbor simply because he doesn't want boats in front of his mansion?

NO PROMOTION SCHEME

"Contrary to the editorial statement this morning there is no one promoting this breakwater with the idea of making a dollar out of it. The citizens of Santa Monica, Brentwood Heights, Beverly Hills, Pacific Palisades, West Los Angeles and Hollywood, who are backing this project, are doing it strictly from unselfish motives and for the good of all Southern California. We want it distinctly understood that it is not exclusively a Santa Monica proposition, but a Southern California proposition which, in the judgment of those who are qualified to speak, will be the greatest forward step that has been taken since the building of the great commercial harbor at San Pedro.

IS NOT COMMERCIAL HARBOR

"The people of this district do not want, and will not have, a commercial harbor. The bill which passed the Assembly 51 to 1, absolutely prohibits any commercialism within this harbor when it is built.

"All the citizens of this district ask for is the right to vote on this project, and that is all the bill provides for, notwithstanding the distortions and methods which have been used by the Hearst newspapers in opposing it. The people of this district are thoroughly aroused and are fully acquainted with the so-called ideals of the Hearst newspapers. We are combatting an effort to throttle us with all the force at our command."

Conliss added that the cost, which competent engineers have estimated at approximately $1,000,000, would be accurately determined before the proposition was submitted to a vote in the proposed district.

CHINA MAY PURCHASE ARMS

Nationalists Can Get War Material of America But Rebels Refused as in Mexico

NEW YORK, May 11. (Exclusive)—In the late Mexican rebellion the [illegible] turned in favor of the government by the action of the Washington administration permitting the Federals to obtain whatever war [illegible] they could buy in this country and rigidly keeping the rebels from getting them. Superior artillery, airplanes and armored motors [illegible] part in turning the tide of battle in the few engagements [illegible].

The policy of discouraging revolution and upholding a recognized government is now to be applied in a much broader field. Through American influence, backed by that of Britain, the diplomatic body in Peking has abrogated the 1919 embargo on the exportation of arms to that country; and the Washington government has announced we are ready to furnish the Nanking government with whatever arms it may need to defend itself against revolutionaries.

This action is of first-class significance in the development of Asiatic affairs. It completely brushes aside the theory adopted by the imperial nations after the war—in which we then had to acquiesce—that China must be kept in subjection and never be permitted to arm its hundreds of millions. The "yellow peril" idea goes formally to the discard. The promise of a stable government in China, backed by America, which can be[illegible] the rebuilding of that country, with American industry participating on a vast basis, is now held out.

[illegible] OF STRENGTH

In the background of this change of attitude by the powers lie certain significant events of recent months which have had their effect in bringing it about. Coupled with the [illegible] asserted by Washington and London in favor of the Nanking government have been evidences of its own strength.

It has been able to conduct a swift and decisive campaign in the Yangtse Valley which has crushed the opposition armed and organized. It has crushed a rising in Shantung by the formidable Chang Tsung-chang, who had at least the tacit countenance of the Japanese. Canton has refused to be made a base for operations for its overthrow and is co-operating with it in friendly fashion for the restoration of the country.

WAR CLOUDS HOVER

So while there are still threats of civil war from various sources—including the mysterious movements of Feng Yu-hsiang, the "Christian General"—the country at large is showing remarkable solidarity behind the Nationalists. There is, in fact, a strong turn away from anarchy and toward cohesion.

This unity is being forwarded by the growing financial strength of the central government. Under the new tariff rates money is becoming available for necessities, particularly for the pay and outfitting of the standing army. With the consolidation of the whole Yangtse Valley [illegible] the revenues will [illegible] and the central military force [illegible] even more efficient. America and Britain are [illegible] this consolidation and, if [illegible], will not permit any [illegible] power to interfere with it.

REVERSAL BY JAPAN

Japan has been so impressed by these conditions that she has made a complete change of policy. Shantung is to be evacuated by the end of this month, without the apology that was demanded and virtually without any compensation for the loss of Japanese property. Not only that, but assurance is given to Nanking that there is to be no further encouragement of [illegible] intrigues for rebellions in that province. Chang Tsung-chang, who was harbored in Japanese territory in Manchuria while he arranged his last descent on Shantung, has found he cannot go back there to prepare another coup. The Japanese government is giving the Nanking government assurance that it wants to be on terms of complete friendship with the Nationalists.

SEVERAL REASONS

There are several reasons for this change: (1.) Japanese agitation against the costs of the occupation and the damage done to trade by the Chinese boycott. (2.) Full realization that Japan must have American and British help in financing her own industrial development and development in Korea and Manchuria. (3.) Recognition of the fact that China is making vast strides in military development and that continuation of a policy of stirring up internal strife will in the end create a Chinese army which will be able to sweep the Japanese out of Manchuria and Korea.

There is also the factor that pressure [illegible] brought on Nanking, [illegible] from Japanese influence, [illegible] as it used to be brought [illegible] Peking, close to Manchuria and Shantung.

It is paradoxical, but true, that the third consideration had much to do with the attitude of Britain and America—and some other powers—when they urged the abrogation of the arms embargo. Far-sighted [illegible] have seen that it will be [illegible] to have a strong central government and a reasonable army in China than to encourage [illegible] and the growth of large [illegible] armies. Because one day these [illegible] might be united by an able [illegible] and used against others. [illegible] it has been the idea of the British, Japanese and French [illegible] and diplomatic leaders [illegible] safety lay in keeping China [illegible]. But that idea has had astonishing military results. It is only [illegible] years since Chinese armies [illegible] which excited more [illegible] than fear. Even Chiang Kai-shek's forces, which marched up the Yangtse Valley two years ago, were the butt of foreign ridicule.

[illegible], however, as the result of [illegible] civil strife and the foreign [illegible], the armies are beginning [illegible] a modern atmosphere. [illegible] are learning how to handle [illegible] guns, motor fighting, artillery and aircraft with efficiency and [illegible] are becoming very efficient fighting machines which [illegible] high spirit and courage.

[illegible] there is a constant [illegible] toward consolidation of [illegible]. In place of about a [illegible] of factions holding their various [illegible] ten years ago, there [illegible] only five real factions. How [illegible] be only one central [illegible] will absorb all—if the [illegible] goes on—and what [illegible] do in the direction [illegible] Indo-China or India, or even Siberia, if it found itself with several millions of well-trained soldiers eager to go on fighting?

America, in particular, has seen the danger of encouraging China to be militaristic; and our policy has been determinedly directed toward the creation of a solid government which could get its energies toward the rehabilitation and modernization of the country.

This idea is now reinforced by the awakening of our business and financial leaders to the possibilities of China as a market for our modern wares and our constructive abilities. Already our business commissioners are on the ground looking into the possibilities of constructing roads, railroads, new cities and manufactories. Big financiers are already planning what can be done to back up a government which is stable enough to assure the safety of loans which may be made.

MUST HAVE ORDER

Before we can do anything along that line it will be necessary for the central government to establish real order. It will have to take over the present railroads, devastated by the civil wars, and get them to running properly. It will have to reorganize traffic on the inland waterways and stop the local interferences with trade. For that task it will need the arms which can now be supplied to it; but once well-armed there should be a good prospect of bringing about order.

It will be several years before the thing can be done—if it can be done—but once that is accomplished there will be a vast opportunity to supply the wants of a population awakening to modern life. It is an intelligent and hard-working population, inherently honest, and we will be in the best position to supply the wants.

CRISIS THIS SUMMER

There will probably be a big demand for an arms supply from the Nationalists this summer, for they must face a crisis. They have cleaned up the danger in the Yangtse Valley, so far as the old Kwangsi faction—from the south—is concerned. Canton is bent on putting down disturbers so the city and its tributary region can go on with great work of development.

But Feng Yu-hsiang, who wanted Shantung—and is said to have been promised it— sits with his strong army in Honan, a key province from which he can strike at Hankow, Shantung or Peking. He holds the second important railroad trunk-line—from Hankow to Peking—and connecting railroads running east and west along the valley of the Yellow River. What he will do remains to be seen; and how far he may be involved with the Russians in upsetting the plans of the western powers also remains to be seen.

ANOTHER MYSTERY

There is mystery also in the attitude of Yen Hsi-shan, the "model tuchun" of Shansi, in the mountains to the west of Peking. To him was allotted the northern provinces when the Manchurians were driven out of Peking last year and he is supposed to be disaffected because he was not made the absolute ruler in the north. He also has a fine and well-armed military force.

Lastly there are the Manchurians, ostensibly acting with the Nationalists but not trusted. They might take advantage of the falling out of the others to try to regain Peking.

These doubtful situations must be clarified before the Nationalists can assert full power. If it were not for the backing the Nationalists are getting from America and Britain they might be too much for the Nanking regime. With that backing they may prove soluble without disaster to Chinese unity. For Nanking will have the command of most of the national income and now it can get the arms.

PAUL KELLY PAROLE TO BE DEBATED

Prison Board Expected to Take Up His Application at Week-End Meeting

SAN QUENTIN PRISON, May 11. (Exclusive)—Application for a parole for Paul Kelly, Hollywood motion-picture actor, today was indicated for consideration by the State Board of Prison Directors at the week-end conference.

Kelly, serving a sentence for manslaughter, has been eligible for parole since last month. He was convicted of causing the death of Ray Raymond, actor, as a result of a fist fight over Raymond's wife, Dorothy Mackaye, an actress. She was paroled early this year.

Mrs. Tunney Has Recovered From Serious Illness

BRINONI (Italy) May 11. (AP)—Mrs. James Joseph Tunney, the former Polly Lauder, has recovered from a serious illness that for a time threatened her life.

It was learned today that she underwent an operation on April 30 for the removal of an old undiscovered appendix abscess.

Mrs. Tunney's life was saved by the chance fact that two Berlin specialists Dr. A. W. Meyer and Dr. Fritz Meyer, were spending a vacation on the Island of Brinoni. When they learned how serious was Mrs. Tunney's condition they agreed to undertake the case.

It is said here that only their skill saved her life.

HEAT-LEAKING HOUSE OF PRE-CELOTEX ERA

Behind the Bars of the Past

TAKE a last look at these household imps of the pre-Celotex era!

It is a sight that warms the heart of every home-owner and prospective home-owner in the country!

Securely imprisoned behind the bars of the past, these pests can no longer infest your home with sickness and discomfort.

For they thrive only in old-fashioned, heat-leaking houses. And since the appearance of Celotex, thinking people will not tolerate heat-leaking construction.

In contrast with the dramatic change it has brought to American home life, Celotex is a simple, practical insulating material. It is made from the long, tough fibres of southern cane. These fibres are felted into big, strong boards,

When you buy a house look for the Celotex sign.
It is your assurance of greater home comfort.

4 feet wide, 7 to 12 feet long and 7-16 of an inch thick—or the new "double-thick" boards that measure 7/8 inch. As a heat-stopper, Celotex is 3 times as effective as wood, 8 times plasterboard, 12 times brick and 25 times concrete.

When used on the outside of houses, as sheathing, Celotex adds structural strength . . . makes walls tighter and more permanent.

And on inside walls and ceilings, you can obtain finer, smoother plastered surfaces with Celotex Lath. This new lath, 18 inches by 48 inches and 7-16 of an inch thick (or "double-thick", if preferred) is especially designed to reinforce against plaster cracks and eliminate lath marks.

As interior finish, Celotex adds new beauty to homes through its natural tan color and pleasing fibre texture. Celotex is used in old homes as well as new; for insulating roofs; for lining basements; attics and garages; for making comfortable extra rooms from waste spaces.

As insulation, Celotex is not an expensive extra item, because it replaces other materials and in later years saves you hundreds of dollars in fuel bills.

Ask your architect, builder or dealer for further information on Celotex—and send in the coupon below for our free booklet.

Celotex Lath used throughout in this Forest Hill residence

"In choosing Celotex for this new residence," says Harold G. Stoner, the architect, "I had in mind both coolness in summer, and protection from winter cold and dampness."

The Lang Realty Company who erected the home is even more emphatic. "We are thoroughly convinced that Celotex is a wonderful investment in the saving of fuel", they say. "We highly recommend Celotex Lath not only as a plaster base, but for its insulating and sound-quieting values".

Cooking Speeded by Radiant Heat, Gas Experts Say

NEW YORK, May 11. (AP)—Development of a method of broiling meats by radiant heat, claimed to speed cooking 25 per cent, is announced by the research committee of the American Gas Association.

Radiant heat is the kind felt on the hand when it is held in sunlight, as contrasted with the heat from warmed air. It is reflected heat.

The effect is obtained by burning gas projected through minute perforations in a specially devised alloy called alundum.

Gas ordinarily has very little radiant heat. The tiny openings of the alundum, however, turn red hot and develop a surface heat which, the committee says, measures more than 2000 deg. Fahrenheit.

This heat is largely radiant; that is, it passes through the air by radiation, without waiting to heat the atmosphere completely to its own high point.

It is claimed that the radiation lays a temperature of about 1300 deg. on the meat, and that its effectiveness in rapid cooking is due to greater powers of penetration.

What Wonderful Place for Irish

MOSCOW, May 11. (AP)—Russians engage in 1,[illegible],000 fist fights each year, in which, quite naturally, at least 2,000,000 persons take part, according to Dr. Leibovitch of the Moscow Institute of Criminology.

Official statistics show that in Moscow alone there were 1044 persons hurt in fights during March, 1928, and 1608 in April. The increase in the latter was due to Easter holidays' vodka.

The statisticians even gave social correlation to the fighters. They said that 35 per cent were neighbors, 15 per cent husbands, 6 per cent former husbands, 7 per cent relatives, 6 per cent "friends," 5 per cent acquaintances and 26 per cent perfect strangers.

NOTAS TELEGRAFICAS

Va a Aplicarse en China la Politica Norteamericana para Méjico

NUEVA YORK, Mayo 11.—En la última revolución mejicana, se inclinó la balanza en favor del gobierno de Méjico debido a la política del de Washington, consistente en permitirles a los federales mejicanos obtener en este país cuantas provisiones de guerra necesitaban y podían comprar, y en impedir que los revolucionarios pudieran conseguirlas. En las cuantas batallas de importancia que en aquella república se libraron, fueron factores determinantes para triunfo del gobierno de Portes Gil, la superior artillería que éste tuvo a la mano así como los aeroplanos y los automóviles blindados de que pudo disponer.

Ese programa de poner trabas a las revoluciones y sostener los gobiernos reconocidos va a ser aplicado ahora en forma mucho más amplia. Por medio de la influencia norteamericana, apoyada por la de Gran Bretaña, el cuerpo diplomático acreditado en China ha abolido el embargo que se dictó en 1919 contra la exportación de armas al Celeste Imperio; y el gobierno de Washington ha anunciado que estamos listos en este país para suministrarle al gobierno de Nanking todas las armas que pueda necesitar para defenderse de los revolucionarios.

Esta actitud es de capital significación en el desarrollo de la política asiática. Hace añicos la teoría adoptada por las naciones imperialistas después de la guerra—teoría a la que tuvimos que adherirnos—de que era menester mantener sujeta a la China y no permitirle nunca armar a sus cientos de millones de habitantes. Ha quedado definitivamente descartada la idea del "peligro amarillo". Ahora se destaca la promesa de un gobierno estable en China, apoyado por los Estados Unidos, el que podrá comenzar a reconstruir el país, con la ayuda de la industria yanqui, que tendrá allá una vastísima representación.

Tal Vez se Resuelva el Conflicto Religioso en Méjico

CIUDAD DE MEJICO, Mayo 11. Hay casi igual número de optimistas que de pesimistas en lo que se refiere a las intenciones del presidente Portes Gil de componer la cuestión religiosa. El alto funcionario citado declaró estar dispuesto a entrar en negociaciones con el arzobispo de Michoacán, Leopoldo Ruiz y Flores, actual jefe de la iglesia católica mejicana, negociaciones que pudieran acarrear la solución del enojoso problema eclesiástico de Méjico. En fuentes bien informadas se oye la opinión de que la esperanza de arreglar la cuestión religiosa es ahora más viva de lo que ha sido desde que entraron en vigor las leyes religiosas, el 1 de Agosto de 1926.

Debido a los previos fracasos, reina bastante escepticismo respecto a las nuevas negociaciones de que se viene haciendo mérito.

No se cree que el ex-presidente Calles interponga su influencia para estorbar dichas negociaciones. Una averiguación llevada a cabo entre personas enteradas de la política de! gobierno y de la actitud de la iglesia, ha hecho ver que la mayor parte de ellas opinan que en este asunto, como en todos, querer es poder. Ahora bien, tanto el Estado como la Iglesia desean la terminación de este largo conflicto, que ha mantenido por tres años la guerra civil en Méjico, y que ha sido el obstáculo para conseguir el bienestar de la república.

En los círculos diplomáticos se demuestra gran interés en la declaración del Presidente, y se tiene la esperanza de que se alcance el resultado deseado.

Un alto miembro de la iglesia explica la actitud del episcopado mejicano con este lema canónico: "Roma locuta est causa finita est", lo que quiere decir en romance que "cuando Roma habla, la situación queda definida". Las declaraciones del Papa son ley para los miembros del episcopado mejicano, y no es exacto que éstos se hayan inclinado a resolver el problema de Méjico a su modo, aunque se pusieran en conflicto con el Vaticano.

Asegúrase que tanto la declaración reciente de Monseñor Ruiz y Flores, como la respuesta del presidente, han caído de sorpresa a los miembros del episcopado mejicano, que se hayan, en su mayoría, ocultos en este país.

Incendio a Mediodía, que Acarrea una Pérdida de $40,000

Un incendio de gran espectáculo, que se declaró a mediodía de ayer, y que lanzó al cielo, desde el corazón del barrio industrial de Los Angeles, una gran columna de humo, acarreó la destrucción de la mayor parte de la fábrica de muebles "National Furniture Manufacturing Company", sita no lejos del cruce de la calle Quince y la avenida de Santa Fe.

Si bien se desconoce la causa precisa del incendio, el jefe Enos, de la oficina de prevención de incendios, dijo que creía hubiese provenido éste de alguna chispa despedida por la máquina recogedora.

Cerca de dicha máquina se iniciaron las llamas, y antes de que los obreros pudieran hacer algo eficaz contra ellas, se extendieron por todo el salón.

El edificio de la fábrica es una larga construcción de ladrillo de un piso. Antes de que se presentara la primera bomba, las llamas salían ya por la techumbre y toda la parte sur de la fábrica era una hoguera. Los primeros bomberos llegados a la escena del siniestro telefonearon a dos parques para que les enviaran refuerzos.

A pesar de lo mucho que había ganado el incendio, los bomberos pudieron limitarlo a la fábrica y a los departamentos de material; por tal modo, se salvaron los cuartos de exhibición de muebles y las oficinas. Según informes proporcionados al policía Caldwell de la división de Newton Street, las pérdidas materiales en el edificio, el equipo y la existencia de muebles alcanzan la cifra de $40,000. El seguro cubre en parte esa pérdida.

PARIS CITY COSTS BELOW NEW YORK

PARIS, May 11. (P)—Paris, with half the population of New York City, gets along on about one-third the money, $100,000,000. That is a big sum here and the Municipal Council, through its dean, ... sought to explain that cities, like people, suffer from the high cost of living.

What seems odd to some is that most of the 25 per cent increase of four years is for more police protection and more charitable work, although France has almost no unemployment.

SORORITY AT LONG BEACH SPANKS GIRL

Nine Other Co-eds Ousted as Result of Initiation; Two Boys Also Suspended

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

LONG BEACH, May 11. (Exclusive)—Promise of more suspensions if necessary was made today by School Superintendent W. L. Stephens, following the Board of Education's suspension last night of twelve high school and junior college pupils. This action was taken following a complaint made by Joel Lindsay of 2167 Atlantic avenue that his daughter, Margaret Lindsay, 18 years of age, a pupil of Polytechnic High School, had been paddled in a sorority initiation.

Supt. Stephens said he will clean up the fraternity situation in the Long Beach schools if it necessitates suspending every pupil who is a member of a fraternity or sorority in violation of State law and city school board prohibition. The suspensions last night were voted by a margin of one, the members favoring the punitive action being Mrs. J. M. Edgar, Eugene I. Fisher and W. L. Clifton, while President Melvin Neel and Aubrey R. Parks voted against such action.

The wholesale suspensions were precipitated by the complaint in the case of Miss Lindsay. The father asserted Miss Lindsay was paddled during an initiation in a cottage at Redondo Beach and that she was unable to attend school for two days afterward. The school board suspended the girl, together with Lesta Frankhouser, asserted president of Gamma Gamma Sorority; Mary J. Mesisenheimer, Peggy Nance, Lenore De Coudres, Dorothy Williams, Mildred Dail, Mildred Einunz, Ruby Chattle and Louise Quinn.

Two boys suspended are Collins Smith, accused of being a member of Alpha Sigma Lambda, and James Ray, of Mu Omega Beta. Ray's mother made the complaint involving him.

Pickwick Will Start Air Line to San Francisco

Thomas Morgan, vice-president and general manager of Pickwick Airways, yesterday announced the inauguration today of a regular air passenger service between Los Angeles and San Francisco. Rates have been cut, the round trip being $49.50 between Grand Central Air Terminal and Mills Field, San Francisco. Today's inauguration provides the second link in Pickwick Airway's Coast service. The company, closely identified with the Pickwick Corporation, was formed last December and on March 29 it inaugurated its thrice-daily service between Los Angeles and San Diego, with four trips a day on week-ends. Planes on this line are operating at 60 per cent capacity.

Pickwick Airways announces that it will extend operations to Dallas, Tex., via Phoenix, Ariz., as soon as practicable.

Thibault Makes Movietone for News Service

Champions Depart Today Homeward Bound

BY JOHN S. DAGGETT

Visits to the motion-picture lot and the sound stages of Universal Pictures Corporation at Universal City yesterday formed the big thrill of their stay in Los Angeles for the champion State high-school orators who participated Friday night in the Pacific Zone grand finals of the Sixth National and Fourth International Oratorical Contest on the Constitution. Seven of the contestants were escorted all through the big picture plant on a tour which formed one of the highlights of their trip to Los Angeles.

Wilbur Thibault, winner of the contest, was taken to a wooded knoll where a Fox-Movietone unit made a sound news reel of him delivering an excerpt from his prize-winning oration on "The Constitution Today."

"I have had more happen to me in the last sixteen hours than the average boy gets in the first twenty-one years of his life," said the 18-year-old high school pupil of Portland, Or., after he had been pictured and his voice recorded on the hilltop.

TOUR BEGINS

At Universal the gateman telephoned and, presto, Jay Strauss of the publicity department appeared. He called for Florence Mack to act as hostess to Mary Katherine Morris of Nevada and Dorothy Mensel of Utah and the tour began.

Miss Adeline Reis of Honolulu, who had won the hearts of everyone connected with the contest, left at noon for Hawaii and missed the big thrill.

It was typical California sunshine under which the visiting party walked down between the long, bare-walled buildings that reflected the heat almost as intensely as the big floodlights of the studios. But Arizona and Nevada did not mind. Lavon Sorensen of Idaho mopped his manly brow.

Up three wooded steps into dusk the party went—refreshing and cool, but mysterious and almost uncanny with its labyrinth of snaky lines leading all over the floor. Weaving forward through stand lamps, reflectors, odds and ends of furniture and paraphernalia, the visitors passed what seemed a city block of darkened sets, caves, interiors, building fronts and garden plots. It became lighter and the sound of voices lent encouragement.

SCENE BEING SHOT

Then a drawing-room scene flashed into view, heavily flooded with light, and there was Laura La Plante being "shot" in a scene for "In Evidence" with William Wyler. Three times it was repeated with sweet music drifting in from side wings, a violin and a portable organ.

This has all been described before, many times, but for the young orators it was in each case his or her first experience.

Miss La Plante left the set, stepped outside the building and graciously greeted the students and congratulated Thibault.

"Yes, the sound stage can be seen—if you will pledge yourselves not to make a sound," said Mr. Strauss.

"And when you hear 'Silence, please!' shouted, it means you must not move hand or foot and breathe quietly," added Miss Mack.

Another block of California sunshine and box-walled buildings, up three more steps and past a uniformed watchman.

"Whir-r-r-r."

"What was that?" asked Samuel Adams of Arizona.

It sounded, for all the world, like a whistle.

"Silence, please!"

The party all came to such a sudden halt that Leonard Horvitz almost fell over.

WHISTLE BLOWS

Away down at the far end of the building a scene was being shot. Probably three minutes passed, although they seemed much longer, and then again came the scream of the whistle.

"You may advance now," and the party crept forward like the point of an attack in war maneuvers at training camp.

Yes, they saw it all, even the interior of the sound-proof box from which the shooting is done and the interpretation which Huntley Gordon was giving in a scene with Josephine Dunn was fascinating. A half-hour later in the studio restaurant, the visitors met Mr. Gordon and found him very affable and pleasing and not a bit like the cold-blooded man he had seemed to be in the sound stage.

The State oratorical champions are leaving for home today. The natural disappointment for those who lost the coveted trip to Washington, and the tour of South America had entirely given way yesterday to a unanimity of hope and encouragement for Wilbur Thibault.

"I do not know what I shall do after I graduate from high school. I did not intend to go to college, for I really ought to go to work, but

Laura La Plante Greets Constitution Orators

On Visit to Studio

Participants in Pacific Zone grand finals in Los Angeles, Friday night, of the Sixth National and Fourth International Oratorical Contest on the Constitution—Samuel Adams, Wilbur Thibault, Lavon Sorensen, Leonard Horvitz, Mary Katherine Morris and Dorothy Meusel—are greeted at Universal Studios by Laura La Plante, film star.

LIMIT PLACED ON JUDGES

Sentence in Motor Act Cases Must Not Exceed That Recommended by Jury

When, in accordance with the provisions of the State Motor Vehicle Act, a jury recomends a definite sentence for the convicted defendant, the court has no authority to pronounce a sentence in excess of that recommendation. This is the gist of a decision and order written by Justice Conrey in the District Court of Appeals yesterday and concurred in by Justice Houser and Work.

The case involves the application of Holland McVeity for a writ of habeas corpus. McVeity was convicted in the San Diego Superior Court of driving an automobile while intoxicated and, on recommendation of the jury, was sentenced by the court to ninety days in the County Jail.

McVeity applied for and was granted probation, the court stipulating, however, as one of the terms of probation, that McVeity pay a fine of $500 or serve one day in jail for every $2 in lieu of payment. Failure to pay the fine would keep the defendant in jail for 250 days, a term in excess of the original jail sentence, McVeity contended in his application for a writ.

The Appellate Court upheld the contention and ordered that McVeity be remanded to jail and brought before the trial court "for admission to probation under appropriate conditions to be prescribed by the court not in conflict with this decision," or for the court "to give judgment on the conviction as the court shall determine."

The Appellate Court decision is to the effect that "an appropriate order may be made without causing the defendant to suffer imprisonment in the County Jail for more than ninety days."

WAIVING OF TRIAL CLARIFIED BY RULING

It is not sufficient for counsel for a defendant in court to waive trial by jury for his client, even though the people's prosecutor concurs, it is held in a decision on file in the District Court of Appeals yesterday, the first passing on this particular angle of the jury-waiver law adopted in 1927. For counsel to offer such waiver without the client making an open, verbal waiver before the court, is held to be judicial error. The fact that a defendant did not object to his trial proceeding after his counsel and the prosecution had stipulated to waiver, does not bar him from recourse to a new trial, Justice Craig declared. Justices Works and Thompson concurred.

The decision grew out of the case

FIRE CAUSES LARGE LOSS AT FACTORY

Furniture Plant Damage Placed at $40,000 After Noon-Day Conflagration

A spectacular noon-day fire that shot a great column of smoke up from the heart of the Los Angeles industrial district destroyed the greater part of the National Furniture Manufacturing Company's plant near Fifteenth street and Santa Fe avenue yesterday.

Although the exact cause of the fire is not known, Chief Enos of the fire prevention bureau expressed the belief that a spark from the picking machine may have started the blaze.

The fire seemed to start in the neighborhood of the machine and before the workmen near by could do anything effective toward combating the fire the entire room was ablaze.

The building housing the plant is a long one-story structure of brick. Before the first fire apparatus had reached the scene the flames had burst through the roof and the entire south end of the plant was blazing fiercely. Two additional calls for help were turned in by the first fire fighters arriving at the fire.

Despite the great headway gained by the fire, the firemen confined the flames to the factory and stock rooms of the plant, the display rooms and business offices being saved. According to reports made to Patrolman Caldwell of the Newton-street division the loss on building, equipment and stock is partly covered by insurance. The loss is placed at about $40,000.

BUSINESS MEN TO MEET

The Gardner Business Men's Association will meet Tuesday at the La Quinta Inn, 7614 Sunset Boulevard, at 12:15 p.m. Several contemplated improvement projects will be discussed.

LOUISIANA OUTBURST REGRETED

Confederacy Daughters' Leader Here Discusses Attacks on Lincoln

California's United Daughters of the Confederacy, through their State president, Mrs. M. L. Stannard of 202 South Harvard Boulevard, yesterday expressed regret at the attacks on Abraham Lincoln's memory, voiced Friday at the convention of the Louisiana Daughters. Because the organization adheres, in its conduct, to the southern doctrine of States' rights, the president of the California division did not take issue with the individuals of the Louisiana division who spoke slightly of the Emancipator. She merely stated that such sentiments are not held by the California division.

Mrs. Stannard's statement follows:

"The California division has just held its State convention in Fresno. We returned home happy over results, and regret to learn of the lack of harmony in the Louisiana State division meeting and that a matter concerning only a few individuals should have become a divisional matter. We are grateful and happy that the army led by Jefferson Davis was given recognition by our President in his inaugural parade. In California we are being assisted by northern as well as southern citizens in caring for our needy veterans in our home provided for them at San Gabriel. Under the leadership of Dr. John Parks Gilmer of San Diego, Sons of Veterans' camps are being organized all over the State."

The California Daughters have a membership of 1423. Their Fresno convention was held the 7th to 9th inst. Mrs. Stannard came to California from Atlanta, Ga., twenty-one years ago, and is serving her second term as president of the California division.

MRS. NETH IMPROVING

Friends of Mrs. Frances L. Neth, founder and director of the Girls' Corner Club, yesterday were assured by her secretary that she is improving as rapidly as can be expected, following an operation. Mrs. Neth, who lives at the Hotel Cordova, suddenly became ill at the conclusion of last Tuesday's meeting. She was rushed to California Lutheran Hospital where Wednesday she was operated on for appendicitis by Dr. E. C. Moore and Dr. P. G. White.

THREE DEATHS TRAFFIC TOLL

Motorcyclist Killed When Hurled from Machine

Two Succumb After Injury in Head-on Auto Crash

Four Other Mishap Victims May Lose Their Lives

Three persons are dead and four injured, probably fatally, as a result of traffic accidents yesterday. One of the dead is Jackson Bates, 20 years of age, who was thrown from his motorcycle in Long Beach when his machine hit a dip in the road.

Two others who died were the victims of a head-on collision between two automobiles at Wilmington avenue and San Pedro Road. They are Mrs. Ermia Martin, 1547 West Sixty-fifth street, and Earl Mallette, 111 West Sixth street, San Pedro. Mrs. Martin died in the San Pedro General Hospital and Mallette died at the Georgia-street Receiving Hospital.

OTHERS INJURED

Others who were injured in the head-on crash are Walter Martin, husband of Mrs. Martin; Marlys Holly, 3 years of age, who was in the charge of Mrs. Martin, and L. B. Bristol, 1233 Lackme avenue.

According to witnesses, Bristol was driving alone on San Pedro Road when a large car driven by Martin swerved to the wrong side of the street and struck the smaller car. All of the occupants of the machines were hurled to the street and were unconscious when the ambulances arrived.

SECOND CRASH

The police assert that a few moments before the head-on collision Martin's car had crashed into one driven by L. J. Reinhardt, comptroller of the Los Angeles Shipbuilding and Dry Dock corporation, and bent his fender. Reinhardt witnessed the second collision. The adults who figured in the mishap all have fractured skulls and the baby has several deep gashes on her head and face.

Nine-year-old Abie Agronsky, 2730 Ganahl street, sustained a fractured skull when he ran into the street and was struck by a car driven by Frank Arioski, 435 South Daly street. The boy was taken to the Pasadena-avenue hospital, where it was said he may die. Arioski was not held by the police.

ALUMNI DINNER FRIDAY

R. P. Hill of 2504 Vineyard avenue, secretary of the Lafayette Alumni Association of Southern California, yesterday announced that former collegians of the Indiana institution will have their annual dinner at 6:30 p.m., the 17th inst., at the University Club.

The Lancer

by Harry Carr

AMERICAN talkies have sent a shudder of alarm through the British Empire.

Just suppose—they say—this terrible film example should start the young peers of the realm talking like Chicago gunmen or Vermont Yankees.

Of course that would be pretty bad; but imagine how awful it would be if it started the London bus drivers all talking like John Barrymore or the charwoman answering back in the low, thrilling tones of Pola Negri!

This is a terrible world. We just stagger through one crisis when a new one bobs up from some unexpected quarter.

HOW AWFUL!

The British are a great people, but they have a tendency to think only of themselves. They also have talkies. If our ice man some morning fixes a monocle in his port-side lamp and addresses me in the patronizing manner of the Sir Beerbohm Tree school of acting I shall know just where to lay the blame.

SO EMBARRASSING

Summer being upon us, some one has clipped the long, curly wool off our Scotty—Mister McTavish. He looks like a bologna sausage with a long, solemn head fastened onto one end.

Jupe, the Airedale, is altogether too impressed for the comfort of McTavish. Where Scotty goes Jupe follows him. Every time McTavish stops Jupe sits down and surveys him with wondering astonishment. McTavish growls and snarls and tries to hide. But it's no use. Jupe waits until he crawls out from under the couch, then he makes a slow circle around him, and goes apart to sit on his haunches to consider the wonders of nature. I shudder to think of what may happen the first time he laughs.

WOMAN SLASHED ON BEACH TRIP

Attractive Widow Accuses Escort of Attack

Companion Arrested After Night of Gayety

Victim in Serious Condition from Knife Wounds

A few drinks and a round of night clubs with a man she had known only four days ended in an attractive Los Angeles widow being slashed with a razor and penknife, following a journey to the beach just before dawn yesterday, in the hands of her companion who became infuriated because she resisted his advances, according to the police report.

The woman, Mrs. Mary Sherrill, 29 years of age, who says she lives at 2749 San Marino street, is in a critical condition at the Methodist Hospital suffering from stab wounds on her head and hands.

MAN ARRESTED

Her asserted companion, Matthew D. Guidera, 20, who says he is a New York real-estate dealer, was arrested on a charge of assault with intent to commit murder.

The attack occured on an isolated stretch of the beach near the Bel-Air Bathing Club. The couple were driven there by a Los Angeles cab driver, Strauss Pettit, of 357 Witmer street, who had been their chauffeur during the evening, he told police. The man said he was ordered to "drive around awhile and return for them."

A few minutes later a night watchman was attracted by screams of a woman. He called the police. Capt. Curtis, Detectives Cody and Wiehl of Sawtelle rushed to the scene where they found the woman bleeding from stab wounds and the man talking incoherently a short distance away.

She told a hysterical story of having been beaten by the man with a cane and then attacked with a razor and penknife. The man admitted to the officers, they reported, that he walked down the beach with the woman. There, he said, they sat on an automobile robe. He stated to the officers that he was seized with a sudden frenzy of anger against her and does not remember what happened afterward.

PARTAKE OF LIQUOR

Both admitted partaking of liquor during an evening of festivities that included a visit to her apartment, a Venice cafe and a Hollywood Boulevard restaurant. Mrs. Sherrill told the officers that she met Guidera through a friend at her apartment Tuesday night. He had arrived from New York a few hours before, he said. They had gone out together every day since the meeting, she stated.

Guidera said he came to California because of threatened prosecution over a $2000 option he had sold a Brooklyn company on a New York garage lot that he could not deliver. He registered at a local hotel as Frank S. O'Hara, he stated. He told Capt. Curtis that his money gave out and he bought the razor Friday, intending to end his life. Before this act, he wanted to spend one more evening with Mrs. Sherrill, he declared. While at the beach they quarreled and the trouble resulted.

Guidera said he lives at 3502 Ninety-sixth street, Jackson Heights, New York, with two unmarried sisters. Mrs. Sherrill is said to have been bequeathed about $25,000 by her husband, who died a year ago.

After his arrest, Guidera told several conflicting stories of his life to the officers before he confessed what they said they believe to be the truth.

YOUNG VOYAGER SAILS ALONE

Boy 6 Years of Age Goes to Hawaii

Capt. A. A. Sawyer and Irving Gleason, Jr.

SIX-YEAR-OLD Irving Gleason, Jr., yesterday set up a claim to the title of youngest trans-Pacific traveler when he embarked all alone on the Lassco liner Calawaii for Hilo, T. H.

Irving's grandfather, J. M. Muir, is tax collector at Hilo. His father is special representative of the Union Tank and Pipe Company of Los Angeles. The youngster wanted to visit grampa, he gravely informed ship news reporters, but his father was unable to spare the time to take him to the islands.

So the entirely capable youngster was put aboard the Calawaii yesterday; introduced himself to Capt. A. A. Sawyer; bid good-by to his parents and when last seen as the liner steamed away was busy instructing the deck steward just where he wished his deck chair placed.

DEDICATION SET FOR TODAY

Ceremonies at New Wing of Children's Hospital Scheduled to Begin at 3:30 P.M.

Dedication of the new east wing of the Children's Hospital, which is maintained by the Community Chest, will take place this afternoon. The didicatory ceremony will begin at 3:30 o'clock in front of the building, which is on Sunset Boulevard just east of Vermont avenue.

Rt. Rev. John J. Cantwell, Catholic bishop of Los Angeles and San Diego; Rt. Rev. W. Bertrand Stevens, bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church; Dr. E. P. Ryland, secretary of the Los Angeles Church Federation, and Rabbi Edgar F. Magnin will represent Los Angeles' major religious groups, and will make brief addresses.

DEDICATORY ADDRESS

The dedicatory address is to be delivered by Dr. Langley Porter, dean of the Medical College of the University of California. He will make the trip from Berkeley to attend the ceremony.

There also will be a musical program, followed by a tour of the hospital. The general public is invited. The event also will serve to commemorate National Hospital Day and Mothers' Day, both of which fall on Sunday.

The new wing will increase the bed capacity of the hospital from 125 to 250. It will not be thrown open at the present, however, as the hospital's present budget does not contain enough funds to secure the medical staff necessary for operating the new wing. Although the Children's Hospital will receive $221,575.41 from the Community Chest for the fiscal year, this amount was not expected to take care of the additional facilities.

ONE OF LARGEST

The new structure makes the Children's Hospital one of the largest institutions of its kind on the North American continent. The hospital executives hope to have the wing in operation within the coming year.

The Children's Hospital was started twenty-eight years ago by a group of Los Angeles women. Operated entirely by women since its beginning, it has grown to huge proportions, with wings being added from year to year. Mrs. Albert Crutcher has been president of the institution for twenty years.

Hawaiian High Court Justice Visiting Here

Charles A. Parson, associate justice of the Supreme Court of Hawaii, and former United States Attorney at Honolulu, is a guest at the Biltmore, where he arrived yesterday on a vacation trip from the islands. He was one of the passengers on the Lassco liner City of Los Angeles, which docked Friday.

Justice Parsons was a practicing attorney in Los Angeles from 1895 to 1898. He went to Hawaii in the latter year and has visited Southern California but three times since then, he told reporters yesterday.

"I am here on a combined pleasure and health trip," the island jurist said. "I intend to remain in Los Angeles about one week, before going to Washington, and shall then return to Honolulu."

Justice Parsons declined to comment on conditions in Hawaii, other than to say the islands are prosperous and progressive.

FUNERAL CONDUCTED FOR PIONEER WOMAN

Funeral services were conducted at the Little Church of the Flowers yesterday for Elizabeth Mary Carrick, pioneer resident of Los Angeles, who died Thursday at her home, 1338 North Berendo street. Interment was at Forest Lawn Memorial Park. Mrs. Carrick, who was 84 years of age, came to Los Angeles 38 years ago from Woolwich, Eng. She leaves a brother, Henry Carrick, a nephew, Harry Carrick, and two nieces, Bessie H. Carrick, and Ida E. Carrick. Cunningham & O'Connor were in charge of funeral arrangements.

BROKER SUICIDE, JURY DECLARES

Infatuation for Banker's Daughter Told

Miss Drexel's Quarrel With Williams Related

Police Describe Situation After Shooting

A Coroner's jury yesterday found tha Frank J. Williams, broker found mortally wounded in a bungalow at 5638 Sunset Boulevard Tuesday night, came to his death from a self-inflicted bullet wound of the head, fired with suicidal intent.

The verdict of the jury was arrived at after various witnesses had testified to the following asserted facts:

That Williams, who was 53 years of age, was infatuated with Peggy Troxel, 18, one of four girls that lived in the bungalow, and that they had quarreled a few days previously.

After writing and mailing a will last Tuesday, Williams went to the bungalow and asked the other girls to leave him alone with Miss Troxel. Two shots were heard almost immediately. The girl was shot through the eye and Williams through the head.

GUN IN HAND

Harold Chinn, Sacramento optician, testified at the inquest that he received by mail the will written by Williams shortly before the shooting.

Police Officers Jaggers and Lynde testified that they answered a call to the bungalow and found Williams unconscious on a divan with a revolver clutched in his hand. A knife lay on the floor in front of him.

F. S. Youll, 1948 North Van Ness avenue, told the jury he was driving his automobile near the bungalow at the time and two girls rushed out, one bleeding profusely, and that he took them to the Dickey & Cass Emergency Hospital. On the way, the witness declared, the Troxel girl said that Williams had shot her and killed himself.

Detective Lieutenant Robinson of Hollywood division said that he discovered Williams's automobile and therein the container for a revolver, part of a bottle of synthetic gin, and other evidence that the man intended suicide.

QUARREL RELATED

Helen Grant, hairdresser, and one of the other three girls who occupied the bungalow, testified that she understood that Peggy Troxel and Williams had been close friends for some time, but that Williams had slapped the girl's face some time previously and that she had said that she "was through with him; he was older than her own father."

The Grant girl said that she was in the next room when she heard the shots, and helped Peggy to the hospital.

Ruth Grant, sister of the first woman witness, testified largely in corroboration of Helen's assertions. The Troxel girl is still in a hospital and could not be present. Funeral services will be held for Williams tomorrow.

Alice Turner has been assigned the role of Electra and Mora Martin has been chosen as an alternate. Jack Finer and Paul McKelvey are studying the part of Geron, while Hale Sparks and Jack Robinson will prepare for the role of the messenger of Orestes.

Others in principal roles will be Sylvia Goldberg, Freeman Ambrose, Leon Blunt, Vardry Williams, Graeme Crane, William Dublin, Barney Kisner and Ida Soghor.

TOURISTS GIVEN NEW INVITATION

Two-Week Summer Vacation Trips Outlined

All-Year Club Ads Appear in Eastern Cities

Educational Campaign Has Three-Year Goal

An intensive advertising campaign is being conducted by the All Year Club in newspapers and magazines throughout the Middle West and East to show millions of persons who have only a two weeks' vacation annually, how they can visit many points of interest in Southern California during that period.

It is pointed out how the trip, replete with pleasure features, can be made on an economical basis. Discussing plans to create this new summer tourist business, which is expected to bring additional millions of dollars every summer to Southern California trade channels, W. P. Jeffries, chairman of the executive committee of the All Year Club, said yesterday:

MILLIONS BROUGHT

"Before 1921 tourists had little desire to visit Southern California in summer because they were of the erroneous impression it was unbearably hot here during that season. Seven years of national advertising by the All Year Club has brought several millions of tourists and the cumulative effect of this advertising has created a desire in the minds of thousands of others to make the trip.

"Of those who now desire to visit California millions have only a two weeks' vacation and they think a month and a large purse are necessary for the trip. Therefore, in the advertising now being published in other parts of the nation, the All Year Club is showing these vacationists just how an enjoyable trip can be made with low summer fares to this section and return at a reasonable cost in two weeks, with seven to twelve days here to see principal points of interest.

TRIP OUTLINED

"Arrangements usually can be made to start these vacations Friday evening. Leaving on that evening the visitor from Chicago arrives here Monday morning and has until Thursday of the following week, or ten days, for California sightseeing, arriving back in Chicago on the next Sunday night, ready to report for work Monday morning.

"A three years' educational campaign will be required before the maximum results of this new business can reasonably be expected. It is conceivable, however, that this two weeks' vacation class, intelligently and systematically 'sold' on the plan, will become an important source of summer tourist business, which added to our present total of more than 500,000 visitors annually during this season will increase greatly our summer revenue from transients."

BABIES VISIT "ALMA MATER"

Hospital Host to Former Residents

Billy Duffy and Virginia Wheeler

BABIES born in the California Hospital in the last three years rounded up their mothers yesterday afternoon to celebrate National Hospital Day and the birthday of Florence Nightingale, Supt. G. W. Olson of the hospital presented each little visitor with a whistling doll in memory of the occasion.

More than 2500 babies have been born at the California Hospital, 1414 South Hope street, in the past three years. All who could be reached were invited to visit the hospital yesterday, and some 700 appeared.

While National Hospital Day actually is celebrated today, the baby reception was advanced a day for the convenience of the visitors. That this day also should commemorate the birth of Florence Nightingale, mother of the hospital movement, and Mother's Day is a happy coincidence, Supt. Olson observed.

Every hospital will keep open house today, and visitors will be shown through every department. The maternity department was especially featured at California Hospital yesterday.

A brief service also will be conducted at 9:15 a.m. tomorrow at the funeral chapel of Cunningham & O'Connor, 1031 South Grand avenue. Interment will be in Calvary Cemetery.

GEORGE H. O'DONNELL

The pallbearers will be Fire Chief Scott, F. C. McDowell, deputy Fire Chief, and Assistant Chiefs J. C. Johnson, Ira Truesdale, Frank O. Edwards and Bert M. Blake.

Mr. O'Donnell, whose father owned the first foundry in Los Angeles, entered the Los Angeles Fire Department as call man in 1890. He served as assistant Chief for eighteen years and retired, after thirty years of continuous service, in 1920. Mr. O'Donnell was the son-in-law of the late Thomas Strohm, former Fire Chief, who died six weeks ago.

Mr. O'Donnell leaves his widow, Mrs. Anna Strohm O'Donnell, and his daughter, Lorraine O'Donnell.

HIGH-SCHOOL PARTY ON TROJAN CAMPUS

Engineers' day was celebrated at the University of Southern California campus yesterday with Trojan students in the college of engineering entertaining 500 high school guests. Demonstrations in physics, chemistry and civil and electrical engineering were given and after a luncheon in the Student Union Building an entertainment was presented. Among the demonstrations given in electrical engineering were the operation of the oscillograph in X-raying the human voice and the operation of a miniature electric motor in melting metal through induction. In the department of physics Vincent Meyer, a graduate student, demonstrated a harmonic synthesizer which he has been constructing during the past year in working for his master's degree.

HARBOR-UNION MEET PLANNED

New Interest Manifest After Election

Unified Management Up for Disposal

Opposition Expressed to Further Delay

BY CHARLES C. COHAN

With the primary elections over, it is felt that the Los Angeles-Long Beach port-unification project is past the danger of being made the football of politics and there is a new season of activity at hand to further it. Arrangements are being considered for a meeting during the current week of intercity representatives who materially have advanced the project.

While the project-hearing before the Federal Board of Army Engineers has been postponed until next November, the consensus is that the expeditious adjudication of various points having to do with the plan is essential in that it will enable the presentation of a well-rounded set-up to the Federal authorities at the designated time.

The requisite unified-port management, as the principal detail to be settled, is receiving the chief attention. It already has been the subject of much consideration from the bicity representatives.

EQUITABLE PLAN

The purpose is to devise a plan of unified management that will comply with Federal stipulation and at the same time accord equitable representation for both cities.

From the standpoint of sentiment there is ample belief that, however constituted as to municipal representation, the unified board will safeguard every right of both places. Color is lent to this view by the emphasis placed on the character of the port unification. Though combining the harbors of the two cities into a single port, the project is squarely on a national port basis, which means that its importance goes far beyond community benefit. It must be considered in its broad aspect of forming a mighty waterway portal for all of the West.

However, the unified management is a matter of political economy and there are phases of equitable representation on it that require careful analysis.

SOLVABLE PROBLEM

Care in solving the proposition does not mean undue delay. There is no question about the ability to solve it, but to carry it along beyond the definitely stated time limit would be to imperil the whole project.

On that score, special emphasis is timely concerning the candidly expressed official opposition to any further postponement from the November hearing.

Likewise there is the tacit promise made in the postponement request that a well-defined plan for materializing the project will be ready for the Federal board's consideration at the appointed time.

The bicity representatives unquestionably have evolved a good idea as to unified management on which to base a definite plan. This is one of the outstanding reasons why the project's progress looks so encouraging.

MRS. MARY WEBSTER FUNERAL TOMORROW

Funeral services for Mrs. Mary J. Webster of 914 South Alvarado street, will be conducted at 10 a.m. tomorrow from the Peck & Chase chapel, 1213 South Figueroa street. Mrs. Webster died Friday at her home, following two years' illness. She had been a resident of Los Angeles since 1885, coming here from Detroit. She was the widow of S. M. Webster, who was associated with the Union Hardware and Metal Company, and later with the Schroder-Johnson Company. She leaves two sons, H. B. Webster, a contractor, and L. B. Webster of W. P. Fuller & Co.

MARKEY ENGAGEMENT DENIED BY INA CLAIRE

Rumors to the effect that Ina Claire, stage actress, who became the wife of John Gilbert, screen actor, a few days ago in Las Vegas, was engaged to marry Gene Markey, artist and writer, before her marriage to Gilbert were denied emphatically yesterday by the actress. "Owing to the embarrassing stories which are beginning to appear involving my friend, Gene Markey, I should be grateful if you would deny that I was engaged to marry him," Miss Claire said. "Mr. Markey and I were never other than very dear and great friends and shall remain so."

CITY WILL UNITE TODAY IN HONORING MOTHERS

Throughout the nation today the queen of the American home will be offered special honors by her sons and daughters and never in the history of Los Angeles have such elaborate preparations been made for observance of Mother's Day. Nearly all of the programs were announced in full in yesterday's church section of The Times.

A feature of the day will be the California mother's tree-planting program at 2 p.m. at the southwest corner of Exposition Park. The program, to which the public is invited, will be under the auspices of the American Green Cross and Barbara Bayne, tree historian of America. White birch trees (the national mother's tree) will be planted. George H. Barnes, chairman of the board of governors of the American Green Cross, will preside and the trees will be dedicated by Frederick Warde, Shakespearean actor. Dist.-Atty. Fitts will shower down flowers from an airplane, to be piloted by Lieut. D. S. Tomlinson. Instrumental music will be furnished by the Jinnistan Grotto Band and solos will be rendered by Mary Fabian and Elmer Bramel. John S. McGroarty will speak on "Early California Trees." The Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts and Campfire Girls also will participate in the program. Soil from Martha Washington's tomb, from the White House grounds and from Redding, Pa., in which city the first mother's tree was planted, will be used in bedding the tree.

At 11 a.m. today Dr. James Gordon will give an address on "Angel Spirits" at the Ambassador and will distribute free copies of "The American Home" and other books by Dr. Gordon.

Hollywood war mothers, including many Gold Star mothers, will be guests of honor at a service at 11 a.m. today at St. Thomas's Episcopal Church. Dr. A. H. Wurtele will speak on "Glorious Motherhood" and readings will be given by Alec B. Francis, screen player.

Music appropriate to Mother's Day, as well as selections from Verdi, Sousa and other masters, will be rendered by Harold W. Roberts and his Golden State Band at Lincoln Park, beginning at 1:30 p.m. today. The program will be free to the public.

Another entertainment of interest will be the Rosh Kodesh and Mother's Day program to be given at Temple Sinai at 8 p.m. today. An address will be given by Dr. L. G. Reynolds, president of the congregation, and the young people will present a dramatic sketch by Solomon J. Rabinowitch.

ADMIRAL VISITS AIRPORTS

New Battle Fleet Commander Commends Southland for Advance in Facilities at Many Points

Rear-Admiral Henry V. Butler, who on the 21st inst. assumes charge of the aviation squadron of the battle fleet of the United States Navy, yesterday made an aerial tour over Southern California inspecting airports and airway markings.

"Southern California has made wonderful progress in airport development and in the marking of its cities and towns for the guidance of aviators," he said when he returned.

A distinguished guest with Admiral Butler on the tour was Dr. Robert A. Millikan, president of the California Institute of Technology and western director for the Daniel Guggenheim Fund for the Promotion of Aeronautics. Both have made extensive air tours throughout other parts of the United States and in Europe, but yesterday was the first time either had made a complete observation of Southern California from the air.

OTHER GUESTS

Among the other guests on the trip were F. H. Bivens and A. F. Bridge, vice-presidents of the Southern Counties Gas Company, which has recently completed the most elaborate series of airway markings provided by any public utility in the world. Also in the party was Walter D. Thurber of the aeronautic committee of the California Development Association, and other aviation enthusiasts and press representatives.

The trip was made in one of the giant passenger planes operated by Western Air Express. It included a tour over Los Angeles, Santa Monica, Long Beach, Newport, Santa Ana, Orange, Anaheim, Fullerton, Pomona, Ontario, Monrovia, Pasadena, Hollywood, Glendale, the San Fernando Valley, Ventura, Santa Barbara and then back along the coast to Vail Field.

SEE SIXTY AIRPORTS

The air travelers were given a glimpse of approximately sixty airports and landing fields and in every town visited it was shown that adequate airway markings have been provided, mainly by the Southern Counties Gas Company.

During the tour only three stops were made. At Clover Field, Santa Monica, the aerial party was met by a brass band and a committee headed by Mayor Michel.

At Long Beach the reception committee included City Manager G. L. Butt, Chief of Police Yancey, Councilmen C. P. Jones and Robert Hicks, President J. M. Stevens of the Chamber of Commerce, Lieut. Leslie Arnold, Lieut. E. B. Koher, Capt. William Frye, Tommy Tomlinson and others.

At Santa Ana the reception group included City Manager W. G. Knox, Clyde Jenkins, Stanley Goode, Jack Wallace, Berle Northland, C. E. Rutledge, W. F. Crowley, John Ortt and others.

JAPANESE TO LECTURE

Ken Nakazawa is to lecture on "Democratic Tendencies in Modern Japanese Literature" at 7 p.m. tomorrow at university college, in the Transportation Building, Seventh and Los Angeles streets, under the auspices of the department of comparative literature of the University of Southern California.

Britain is broadcasting Shaw's plays.

Soldiers Escape From Fort Jail

Six asserted deserters from the United States Army who had been assembled in the guard house at Fort MacArthur awaiting court-martial escaped last night by picking the lock of their prison, army officials reported to police. The men are believed to have waited until the guard passed on his rounds and unfastened the lock with crude tools they had made from wire found in the guard house. They are dressed in brown denim, officers said.

Their names are A. Benson, R. Hall, W. Allen, C. McKnight, H. Haley and T. Bangsley. Police and army officials are searching in the vicinity of the fort for the men.

Junior College Topic Discussed

The relation of the junior college to the university and the four-year college was the subject of a round-table discussion of a score of eminent educators at the College Union at Occidental College yesterday. The discussion marked the close of the yearly meeting of the Southern California Association of Colleges and Universities.

Dean Thomas G. Burt presided and the views of all those present were voiced. The present system of credits allowed to junior colleges was declared to be satisfactory by the majority.

TRIAL PLANNED IN GIRL'S DEATH

Two Accused Physicians in Court Tuesday

Special Agent Hunts for Others Held Involved

Stories Told About Parties Now Being Checked

Plans for the prosecution of two Glendale physicians now charged with the murder of Delphine Walsh, 22-year-old dancer, as the result of an asserted illegal operation, will be worked out tomorrow at a conference between Dep. Dist.-Atty. Kemp and William A. Byrne, special agent for the State Board of Medical Examiners.

The physicians, Drs. R. S. Lanterman and P. S. Traxler, will appear in Glendale Municipal Court Tuesday morning for preliminary hearing. Both are at liberty on $15,000 bail each and have retained counsel.

While preparations are under way for trial of the two medical men, Special Agent Byrne declares he will continue his hunt for the man responsible for Miss Walsh's condition and for the person who either took or directed her to the two Glendale physicians.

Several other persons who heretofore have not appeared in the case are scheduled to be questioned. Byrne said, and some who have been interrogated will be called in again to clear up asserted discrepancies in the various stories related by different witnesses regarding parties asserted to have been attended by Miss Walsh and her friends.

A San Francisco party, the officer said, particularly is under investigation at this time, as well as information that Miss Walsh received a letter containing money from a Vancouver (B. C.) man a week before the operation was performed.

DRAINAGE AREA WANTED

The County Surveyor has sent to the City Council and asked that body to adopt a resolution granting the Board of Supervisors authority to proceed with the formation of a drainage district in the Compton Creek watershed which would include some territory within the Los Angeles city limits. The matter has been referred to the City Engineer and the Council's Public Works Committee.

NEW LINE-UP OPPOSED IN STATE NOW

Committee Favors Delay Until After 1930 of Any State Redistricting

William Eric Fowler, chairman of the Republican County Central Committee, yesterday announced that the organization's special committee on Congressional reapportionment has reported, opposing any action by the Legislature, having for its object redistricting the State until after the 1930 census is taken. In amplification of this stand, he submits comment by William J. O'Brien, chairman of the special committee. After reviewing efforts to gain California's withheld quota of Representatives since 1920, he recites that Senator Vandenberg of Michigan has introduced a bill to fix the House membership permanently at 435. The President is to apportion membership among the States after each census.

"We will not know until after the President has acted, how many members this State will have," said Mr. O'Brien. "It is reasonably certain we will have more than seventeen, the number the Fenn bill would have given us."

After reviewing Senator Swing's bill in the State Senate, he comments: "Even if the membership to which California will be entitled was known at the time, it would be impossible to redistrict until the 1930 population of every Assembly district is known, for the Constitution provides that congressional districts shall be made up of compact and contiguous Assembly districts . . ."

He added that even if the Vandenberg bill fails and Congress gives California additional representation, we should oppose redistricting now. Congressmen-at-large could be elected to fill out the additional quota allowed by any provision, he contends, until the 1930 census gives a basis for redistricting.

OSTEOPATHS WILL DINE

The Los Angeles Osteopathic Society announced a dinner for tomorrow night at the College of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons to welcome Dr. Cyrus J. Gaddis of Chicago. He is editor of the Journal of the American Osteopathic Association, and a health lecturer. Appearing on the program with him will be Dr. R. R. Daniels of Denver, nutritional consultant. Dr. Hermon E. Beckwith is president of the organization.

Today's Bible Text

Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee. Isa. xlix:14 and 15.

JUST DRIVING AROUND

And yet if the parking facilities were better, people would not see nearly as much of Los Angeles.

BE NOT ENVIOUS

Men may get some sort of a kick from most of their vices, but for the vice of envy there is no return. It just eats its own head off without any form of recompense.

WATCH YOUR BUTTONS

Washington robbers stole a couple of valuable police dogs that were on guard at a police station. President Hoover might see if the mint is properly anchored. The capital is a great place for pick-ups.

SLOW WORK

Representatives of the powers are mighty slow and deliberate in making terms for world disarmament. The idea of some governments about disarmament is to turn it over to some kid with a screw-driver and let nature take its course.

OPERA OR FARM

Marion Talley insists that she is going to desert grand opera for the farm, but it is casually admitted on the side that she still has a fat three-year contract to warble records for a phonograph company. It was suspected that there was something between corn rows.

THE GAS BILL

Looks as if California motorists were paying one-tenth of the total gasoline tax garnered in the nation. We are putting up $30,000,000 on a billion gallons of the juice and this is more than the New Yorkers are doing. That is what we get for having so many places to go.

PLACE AUX DAMES

Mrs. Leslie Carter still carries her fiery top and her courage. She has the audacity to play girl roles, although she played women of the DuBarry type nearly forty years ago. Even now she is like to invade Hollywood and show some o' the new generation how to behave on the stage. She is on her way.

LOOKS THE PART

One of the blithe damsels in a New York musical show is suing somebody for $150,000 damages because she was called an adventuress. Off-hand it might seem that the little lady was qualifying for a verdict for the defendant. It is quite an adventure to take a case of this proportion into any American court.

IN THE RAW

Another explorer asserts that there are several dusky tribes in the Amazonian wilderness in which neither the men nor women wear a stitch of clothing. Yet their morals are unblemished and faithlessness unknown. Thus indicating that virtue is not a matter of raiment or the lack of it. It is in the upbringing and the viewpoint.

CURING THE DEAF

The American Otological Society seeks to raise a fund of $2,500,000, to be used in research work in the prevention of deafness. An otologist, by the way, is an expert in the care and custody of the human ear. Officers of the society intimate that deafness is increasing in America. That ought to mean more business for the otologists, anyhow. Why should they raise a fund for anybody else. This is a noisy world—full of jazz, static and soprano singers. Maybe some folks prefer to be deaf.

WITH BUM BOMBS

Most of these bombs that bandits use in daylight bank robberies seem to be made of vaseline or some equally impotent agent. The next time a tyro highwayman bursts into a bank with a threatening phial in his hand the cashier will be reasonably safe in taking possession of the bottle by main force and pouring the contents down the invader's throat. Robbers are not likely to be blowing themselves to destruction—as they would have to do if they made good their threats.

SLANDER BY RADIO

Up to the present time there has been no statute in California adequate to prevent the employment of the radio for the broadcasting of slander, and unfortunately the honor of those who use the radio for publicity purposes has not always been of a sufficiently high caliber to prevent the abuse of this privilege of the freedom of the air. Under the circumstances State Senator Rochester has introduced a bill at Sacramento to correct a condition which is intolerable to the public and which leaves open avenues for venting unrestrained spleen and spite against individuals by methods that would be actionable in any other form.

Senator Rochester's bill, No. 460, would amend the Penal Code by making slander an offense punishable by a fine not exceeding $5000 or imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment. Such slander is specifically defined in the provisions of the bill as follows:

"Slander is a malicious defamation, orally uttered, tending to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or to impeach the honesty, integrity, virtue or reputation or disclose the actual or alleged defects of one who is living, and thereby to expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. The injurious utterance of slander is presumed to have been malicious save when it is a communication to a person interested therein, by one who is also interested, or by one who stands in such relation to the person interested as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive for the communication innocent, or who is requested by the person interested to give the information." Words uttered by an official in the proper discharge of his duty are not deemed a slander.

A careful examination of the wording and intent of this bill discovers in it nothing but a worthy effort to protect public or private citizens from cowardly attacks delivered by irresponsible assailants in a manner that may cause them damage or distress and against which they have no legal redress. Nothing is so abominable in the eyes of decent people as the use of slander whether for public profit or private gain. There is no more contemptible offender than the wanton character assassin.

The radio has offered a new field for spreading information that has made it, properly directed, one of the most valuable agents for reaching the public. Those who use it and those who listen to it should be alike interested in keeping its operation clean from the dirt and backyard gossip eschewed by all upright and honorable men and women. Opposition to Senator Rochester's bill, therefore, would obviously imply that such objectors are anxious to employ it as a vehicle for slander as defined in the terms of the bill. A protest against the State's adoption of this defense of personal character can only be construed as a vote for the continuance of slander and an indorsement of the meanest attribute of human nature.

No legitimate user of radio can object to the Rochester bill.

MARKET ECONOMICS

A new explanation of why many stock-market prices seem to be pegged at a point above what is considered the intrinsic value of the securities, has been offered by Charles E. Mitchell of the National City Bank and Federal Reserve Bank of New York. It is the reluctance of large winners in the market to take profits, because of the income tax that would have to be paid on them. Heretofore the nation has been told that widespread "public participation," a vast volume of funds not provided by banks, and various other factors were combining to hold prices up. Mr. Mitchell's explanation seems as rational as any.

He will not be followed so far, however, in the remedy he suggests—which is to repeal the income tax on "capital accretions" obtained in this manner. This, he thinks, would enable holders of these securities to sell out and thus provide a volume of stocks to be traded in. His intimation is that stock purchasers unconsciously have created a corner, making the market a difficult one for bear traders to operate in and that the normal speculative forces thus do not have free play.

But making stock-market profits nontaxable obviously would make speculation still more attractive than it is. Speculation, like agriculture, already is overexpanded for the good of the country. The diversion of funds needed for commerce and industry to further market inflation would make matters worse.

Mr. Mitchell could see a lot of objections to his suggestion were it turned around so that stock-market losses were made nondeductible while the tax on stock profits was retained! This would put a real brake on the market, with a vengeance. Such a scheme is not suggested here seriously, though it is quite as reasonable as that made by Mr. Mitchell.

THE ANCHOR HOLDS

Creeds are changing, but religion remains. In an age of transition of thought, not only in secular but also in church circles, that fact stands firm. Prof. Betts of Northwestern University has just issued a volume titled "The Beliefs of 700 Ministers"—in which he has tabulated the result of a questionnaire sent out to ministers and students of twenty different Protestant denominations. An analysis of the results attained is illuminating. If they predicate a revolt from orthodoxy they also establish an agreement on fundamentals.

The first and certainly the essential article in all religious faiths was embodied in the first question, "Do you believe that God exists?" To this the reply was 100 per cent in the affirmative from ministers and students alike. In the twenty-six other questions, all bearing directly on once cardinal points in Christian doctrine, there was no such unanimity—the students departing far more widely from the old beliefs than the ministers.

Next to a belief in God the assurance of immortality holds the leading interest for all professing Christians. To the question, "Do you believe that there is a continuance of life after death?" 97 per cent of the ministers and 89 per cent of the students answered "Yes." Yet "the resurrection of the body" was rejected by 69 per cent of the students and the "one final judgment day" by 77.

Answers to other less vital reactions demonstrated the liberal trend of younger religionists. Ninety-four out of every hundred of them believed the idea of evolution consistent with belief in God as against 61 per cent of their elders; 76 per cent of the students registered their disbelief in "hell as an actual place," while 53 per cent of the ministers accepted it. The greatest departure from the orthodoxy of the last century, however, was nonacceptance of the creation of the world as recorded in Genesis, to which 89 per cent of the students and 48 per cent of the ministers refused to subscribe.

Prof. Betts's questionnaire, of course, only represented a small cross section of the whole religious thought of today—yet it was an important cross section. Belief in God, in the immortality of the soul and the teachings of Christ has withstood the assaults of the materialists and has grown stronger and more deeply rooted in the light of revealed science. The anchor holds. If doctrines and dogmas and human interpretations of the Scriptures are being relegated to a secondary position by the coming leaders in our religious life, in that very circumstance we see a better hope for the advent of the universal Christian church which is the spiritual need of the world.

CITY BEAUTIFICATION

What may be done in the way of the rapid beautification of a bare tract of city land has been shown in that triumph of expeditious landscape gardening, the handsome parterre on the south side of the new City Hall. It has been only a little more than a year since the splendid building was completed for occupancy and yet flowers, shrubs, trees and grass have replaced the dun barrenness of the plot and have made it a joy to the visitor's eye.

In many other parts of the city, particularly the grounds of the annexed municipalities, the Coliseum and the colleges and high schools, palms, dracenas and acacias are waving, banks of flowers gleam brightly in the sunshine and green lawns carpet the generous spaces beside the walls. Along many of the new thoroughfares or the extensions of old ones young trees are branching out, and there are long vistas of flowering shrubs. As of yore, the beautifully parked West Adams street is a delight to the eye, as are also other parked thoroughfares. In the yellow May sunlight the lake parks never looked more fresh and lovely.

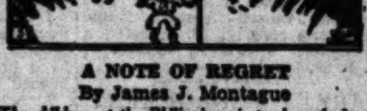
When the Shriners come they will find the city more beautiful than ever in its green and bloom. They do not find royal palms and Canary Island dracenas in many of the cities in which they hold their yearly conventions.

Our people are becoming more beauty-conscious year by year. This season many of them are not burning the dead wild oats and weeds on their vacant lots, but are mowing them off—a more difficult and expensive means of destroying them, but the result is far more pleasing to the eye than to leave a black, burned-over surface from now until the autumn rains.

On the whole, landscape gardening in this city, particularly where it has been well studied or advised by experts, is becoming a fine art. No wonder that Los Angeles is known all over the length and breadth of the land as the City Beautiful.

NAVAL PARITY

Does Brittania or Hollywood rule the permanent wave?



A NOTE OF REGRET

By James J. Montague

The children of the Philippine pirates have in large numbers joined the Boy Scouts

I always have harbored a sneaking regret
That the Kidds and the Blackbeards and Hooks,
And other great pirates whom often I met
In the pages of soul-thrilling books,
Had long to a merited rest passed away,
That the last Jolly Roger is furled
And that we, who partake of existence today
Must abide in a pirateless world.

I rejoiced to discover a few years ago
That far out in the Philippine Isles,
Where the spice-laden breezes sing softly and low
And where summer eternally smiles,
That a few daring spirits go forth on the sea
The neighboring ports to invade,
Living lives that are lawless and daring and free
While they follow the piracy trade.

But now I am told that the timorous whites
Are teaching these folk to refrain
From tasting the wild and untrammeled delights
Of theft on the billowy main.
They train the young children in civilized arts,
Lay down laws which they bid them to keep
Till they're wholly unfit for the glorious parts
Which their fathers have played on the deep.

Alas for the days of unbridled romance;
No more shall a skipper turn pale
When he views on the ocean's gray rolling expanse
A rakish piratical sail.
These pirates of whom, since the brave days of yore
There has been a deplorable dearth
Soon will figure in novels and stories no more;
They've been civilized off the whole earth.

LEE SIDE o' L·A

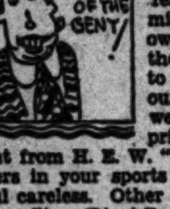
ANGELUS National Forest runs along the edge of or clear into some of our foothill towns, and one result is such protection of wild life as would astonish the people of most settled communities in other parts of the country. Many visitors to the recent wistaria fete in Sierra Madre were astounded to see large coveys of quail running and sunning themselves on the lawns of homes they passed. And we know a man who makes a business of trapping wild animals in an area in which, if he chose, he could anchor every one of his traps to the post of a sign advertising town lots for sale.

Pretty Bad Slip



WAL, I NEVER HEEARD OF THE GENY!

We never mind 'fessing up to the mistakes of our own paper (when they happen not to have been in our colyum) so we cheerfully print this complaint from H. E. W. "Them headline writers in your sports department is awful careless. Other day they had the headline, 'Rival Pugilists Train Al Fresco,' over a story in which there wasn't the slightest mention of anybody named Fresco. They better do better, or folks'll think they don't know much."

Why Not?

Lee: I see that the government has collected $60,000,000 more income taxes the first nine months of this fiscal year than during the same time last year, largely because of stock-market winnings. Not knowing much about gambling myself, I ask you: Is that what they call the "kitty?"—Ernest Dubb.

Who sees the night's first evening star;
The day in all its glory, too,

In every city face you see
A vagabond at heart, like me.

Our special cactus medal for the grouchiest conductor is awarded to one on a W car. A crowd was boarding the car, northbound, on Broadway when a timid, worried-looking elderly woman, with arms full of bundles, obstructed the entry.

"Does this car go to Lincoln Heights?" she asked.

"Whadya mean, Lincoln Heights jail?"

She shrank back in a way which suggested that he had guessed rightly. Still, there was no need for him to bawl it that way.

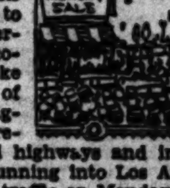
Improved California Variety

The luckiest man we know of in Southern California is Carey F. Fly, manager of the Beaumont Fruit Company, who has just announced the findings of a survey covering cherries, peaches, apples, plums, prunes, apricots and pears in the Yucaipa-Beaumont district—and yet, so far, seems to have escaped being called "Fruit Fly."

Passing of Blue Monday

Blue Monday has been completely erased from the trade calendar of Los Angeles. Taxicab drivers, chauffeurs and traffic officers tell us that Monday is consistently the heaviest traffic day of the trade week, though pleasure drivers may make Saturday afternoon and Sunday outrank it. And if one tries to walk down Broadway from First to Eighth on a Monday afternoon it will take him much longer than on any day except Saturday. The streets and the stores are full of shoppers and the number of out-of-town people in town that day is amazing.

"The Sunday newspapers are largely responsible," one store manager tells us, "though of course it's the merchants deserve most credit. Figuring that Monday would be an especially good time for sales because so many people read their Sunday papers at leisure and have all their last week's pay to budget, the merchants have co-operated to make Monday a day of real sales magnetism. The result is that all highways and interurban trains running into Los Angeles bear heavy traffic on Monday."



HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE

BY CHARLES COKE WOODS

In this year of grace, 1929, Mothers' Day falls upon Sunday, May 12. It is the great home day of the nation. It ought to have a national meaning and a national ministry to all our people. It ought to result in giving 10,000,000 children a better home chance. The day ought so to be observed as to release over the entire country great social and spiritual values. It ought to have a sobering and settling influence on a million shaken homes.

Mother's influence on statesmanship has been seriously splendid. What a name to conjure with is that of Hulda Minthorn Hoover. "The hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world." We may not claim world rulership from Washington, but the influence of Mother Hulda Minthorn Hoover is certainly felt now by President Hoover, and through him it is felt by the American people. Mothers and statesmen have living relationships. Oliver Cromwell was more influenced by his mother than by any other. He made a home for her in the Royal Palace of Whitehall and when she died he laid her sacred dust in Westminster Abbey. Every school boy knows that Lincoln said, "All I am or ever hope to be I owe to my angel mother."

Mother's influence has been a mighty power in literature. The writings of John Ruskin are as forcible as the spring freshets among the hills. They will never cease to be full of information, inspiration, and beauty. He was asked where he got his style of utterance. He answered simply, "From early childhood at my mother's knee when she read to me the Scriptures and helped me commit to memory whole chapters." His literary style did not happen. It was builded on power, purity and beauty. His mother's spirit runs like a radiance through all of his writings.

Thomas Carlyle was one of the greatest writers of his age, or for that matter, of any age. He and the flaming Hebrew prophets would have felt at home together. Carlyle shot thunderbolts from his pen. His pages are flames of fire. The eagle of his soul literally tore through the meshes of his flesh. And what a mother had Thomas Carlyle! Patient, strong, tender, true. Her love for her son was all but divine.

When she was 70 years of age she learned to read so that she might write letters to her great son who was sorrow stricken with the troubles of a suffering world. On his fifty-eighth birthday he wrote her a full-hearted love letter. It runs: "Dear old mother, weak and sick and dear to me, let it ever be a comfort to you, however weak you may be, that you did your part honorably and well, while in strength, and were a noble mother to me, and to us all. If there has been any good in the things I have uttered in the world's hearing, it was your voice essentially that was speaking through me, essentially what you and my brave father meant and taught me to mean, that was the purport of all I spoke and wrote. May God reward you, dearest mother, for all you have done for me. So long as I have the power of thinking I will pray God's blessing on you now and always." The spirits of great mothers have guided the pens of great writers.

The mother influence has been powerful in religion. Bishop Simpson was one of the greatest religious counselors of President Lincoln. But he said his ministry was the outgrowth of his mother's teaching and prayers. Litre, the brilliant French infidel, said to his wife, the mother of his little daughter, "You bring her up in your Christian faith till she is 16, then bring her to me." Years passed and the mother and loyal wife brought the beautiful daughter to her father's study on the child's sixteenth birthday and reminded him of the request he made some years before. He looked at the mother, saying, "But why should you bring her to me? Your faith has made of her a beautiful creature. Would you have me spoil it all with my theories?" Then he bade them go on down the years in their peace and happiness. After a certain young man had listened to an infidel pronouncement against Christianity, an agnostic friend turned to him and asked sarcastically, "What have you left now?" The youth answered, "My mother's life." A man was asked which translation of the Bible he preferred. His simple answer was, "My mother's translation." Henry Ward Beecher said that no devout Roman Catholic ever saw so much in the Virgin Mary as his childhood's vision and dreams saw in his mother. Her influence on his life ran through the years of his powerful preaching and writing.

The Mother ministry has gotten into the world's wisest philosophies. It has sung in the sweetest songs and thrummed the most musical harps. Its eloquence has spoken from the orator's tongue. It is always back of and in the mightiest and most useful movements of men. It has been so and will be for a thousand years to come that "The hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world."

If Mothers' Day could put more honor into our homes, more genuineness into our goodness, more loyalty into our loves, and tone us up nationally to higher living and deeper serving it would be worth more to the country than a radio message to Mars or a flying machine that would mount to the moon. We may need some new gold mines, more oil wells, bigger crops, more cattle upon a thousand hills, more fun, more fortunes, more fame, but we do not need any of these perishing things half so much as we need better fathered and better mothered homes. Loyal love makes the home. At any material cost let us have that. Home keeping hearts are happiest. There is no place like home.

IT SEEMS TO ME

BY EUGENE BROWN

Seems to me that any fussing over the choice of seats at the table is absolutely witless. We used to think that any place within reach of the beans was fine and dandy. Nobody wanted to be parked next to the boss. He might be watching. To be staked out within range of the biscuits was perfectly all right.

But this wrangle in Washington society is taking on all the earmarks of a Kentucky feud. Of course it has been settled two or three times—both ways, for that matter, but it won't stay dead. It climbs out of the casket and begins to play with fireworks. That's because the women are running it.

It seems to me that, if Alice Roosevelt Longworth won't go to any parties or dinners where the Vice-Presidential hostess has the high chair, the Kansas sunflower is out of luck. You see, Alice has been a personage for quite some time. She was the juvenile wonder of the White House. As the daughter of a two-time President and the wife of a three-time Speaker she would be near the head of the parade anyhow—even if the League of Nations was putting on the show. But that isn't all. She is a sort of a queen in her own right. She has not only "it" but "those." Take it from me she knows more about the ins and outs of high politics than any woman in America. She is also thoroughly familiar with the moods and manners of world diplomacy. Therefore, she is the bright particular star of Washington society. If Alice graces a dinner or reception with her presence that function is a howling success. If she sends her regrets the hostess is in the dumps.

Seems to me then that unless Alice voluntarily gives place to Mrs. Gann and recognizes her superior rank in the social life of the capital that Washington is going to be dull. The ladies in diplomatic, Cabinet and high official circles won't care to give any spreads while the war is raging. Folks who crave excitement will just hang around on the chance of catching Tom Heflin eating corn pone in the Senate restaurant. The Washington correspondents say the affray is much like the War of Roses. Pick your colors. There is the Gann green and the Alice blue.

Seems to me if I were guessing a winner I would take the Alice blue.

WHERE CAN I LEARN

Auto Electrics?

BY LOUISE L. TEMPLE

[Prepared in co-operation with the Los Angeles evening high schools. Questions concerning free evening classes will be answered if stamped addressed envelope is inclosed. Address, Louise L. Temple, care of The Times.]

"Factories are turning out cars so rapidly," says Ernest W. Leeper, eight years in the trade in Los Angeles, "that all of the electrical parts are not entirely proven. Often cars have some electrical appliances that could be made better." On Tuesday and Thursday evenings, Leeper teaches a free class in auto electrics at the Garfield Evening Adult School, 5101 East Sixth street. The hours are 7 to 9 p.m.

The auto plant of the school has recently been increased to handle 1000 people. Men may come to this shop to try to increase the efficiency of the present-day ignition systems of modern high-speed engines, to make them perform better, or to find some individual characteristic of their cars. Often there is a certain way of serving the car, or adding some small part, that greatly improves the ability of the car.

In three months, studying twice a week, a person can become familiar with the general electrical equipment of his own car so as to make minor repairs. A man can also train here to become a general service or garage man, at $30 to $60 a week. Even the skilled technician can benefit by this class, where he has the privilege of using, free, the splendid shop equipment in making his laboratory research experiments.

GRAFTING CONSTABLES

Reports from motorists indicate that grafting village constables and justices of the peace are taking at least their usual toll from motorists who venture off the city pavements. The methods pursued by the constables vary. Sometimes senseless local ordinances which are certain to be violated are enacted, which enable the constables to arrest almost any motorist who passes their beats. Sometimes even this obvious subterfuge is not adopted and arrests are made on charges which are palpably false. It all comes to the same thing. The motorist is forced to pay a fine when haled before the village justice, for the alternative is likely to prove even more costly in legal fees, bail and delay.

Motorists have generally come to believe that the majority of these modern road agents are corrupt. The constables and the so-called justices are not engaged in maintaining good order on the roads so much as in operating a toll road, the proceeds of which they divide in the back room after the victim has been fleeced.—[Chicago Tribune.

RADIO PICTURES NOW PIONEERING

First Television Crude But Satisfactory

Many Tests Being Made for Perfection

Process Opens Tremendous Entertainment Field

BY HAROLD A. LAFOUNT
Federal Radio Commissioner

The next logical step in the advancement of radio is the perfection of picture broadcast. No development in this scientific age has more effectively captivated the public's imagination. A waiting world of enthusiasts are looking for the time when their radio receivers will entertain and instruct them, not only through the medium of the ear but also through the eye.

Consideration of its possibilities, both social and economic, gives rise to flights of fancy and conjecture. The field of radio pictures possesses unbelievable possibilities for those who feel the experimental urge, and for those who seek entertainment in a new and most fascinating form.

PICTURES BROADCAST

Your first picture may be distorted, its outlines so blurred that you can hardly recognize the face, yet you enjoy and appreciate it for you are a pioneer in radio picture reception. You will be placed in the same category as those who heard KDKA's first broadcast in 1920.

The day is actually here when both motion and still pictures are being broadcast by stations in different cities, the reception of which is reported by many enthusiasts in different part of the country. Adding the visual element to broadcast will create a new interest in radio reception.

There are many systems of visual transmission in the experimental stage. They are known to possess serious technical limitations which have impeded their progress. However, the degree of success which has rewarded the efforts of a number of inventors justifies belief that perfection is in sight. It may be a few years before its commercial possibilities are generally recognized but certainly the fundamentals are well established and only details remain to be worked out.

MANY TESTS AFOOT

C. Francis Jenkins, of Washington (D. C.) gave his first public demonstration of radiovision and radiomovies in June, 1925. This was given world-wide publicity. The Jenkins laboratories have improved their equipment by inventions of their own until they are now able to broadcast successfully radiomovies daily.

WOR began broadcasting pictures on November 5, 1927, the results of which were gratifying. So successful have these broadcasts been that others have undertaken the task with similar satisfactory results.

Many corporations and individuals are now engaged in making extensive tests and experiments at a cost of millions of dollars in the belief that the public will welcome this character of transmission when perfected.

It has been said the rapid development of apparatus for transmission of photographs by wire and by radio may now be confidently expected, because the public is ready for it. At this moment it is going through the same empirical process by which motion pictures arrived, and out of which finally the long film strip was born.

In motion pictures development there appeared the spiral picture disc; the picture "thumb book;" picture cards radially mounted on drums and bands; and the picture film continuously moved and intermittently illuminated.

OLD FILMS RECALLED

But finally the development resolved itself into a single, long, transparent picture film, intermittently moved in the exposure aperture of the projecting machine; and upon this has been built one of the large industries of the world.

Doubtless this will be the history of the development of electrically transmitted photograph and of radio vision, for many schemes have already been tried and more may yet be seen before the final, practical form shall have been evolved, and this new aid to business and entertainment shall have taken its place in human affairs.

The transmission of a photograph electrically, a portrait, for example, is not so much a matter of mechanism, once the tools are perfected and their operation understood. It is more a matter of blending of lines and tone, just exactly as it is with the artist. The great portrait photographer uses the same tools the amateur used, but an acquired technique of high order enables him to produce a superior portrait, free of chalky contrasts, and soft in tone and blending. Just so in radio photography, it is a matter of simple mechanism, and an acquired skill in its use.

There has been a veritable army of engineers engaged in the development of radio as a service to the ear, while relatively few engineers have been developing radio as a service to the eye.

When radio service to the eye shall have a comparable development with radio service to the ear, a new era will indeed have been ushered in, when distance will no longer prevent seeing our friend as easily as we hear him.

In due course, then, folks in California and in Maine, and all the way between, will be able to see the inaugural ceremonies of their President, in Washington; the Army and Navy football games at Franklin Field, Philadelphia; and the struggle for supremacy in our national sport, baseball.

Social leaders in New York City have decreed that debutant dances next season shall start at 10 p.m. and end by 3 a.m.

SURGEON'S KNIFE FOUND BY ABBOTT

Former Suspect in Torso Slaying Delivers It to Sheriff's Office

Leland Wesley Abbott, held for investigation for several days and then released in the search for clews in the Los Angeles River torso murder mystery walked into the office of Capt. Bright of the Sheriff's homicide squad with the missing surgical knife yesterday. He said he had found it in an old coat in one of his trunks.

The surgeon's knife was considered a possible clew in solving the mystery until Abbott explained his whereabouts during the days preceding the finding of the torso in the river last April. His ownership of a surgical knife and yarns he had told his fellow-workmen about "a wife giving him trouble in Lynwood" caused Abbott's difficulties with the law.

He was found by Detective Lieutenant Allen and Deputy Sheriff Modie in a government camp in Chilao. Several shotguns, a half-dozen pocket knives and his automatic pistol were located, but the knife was missing. When he appeared yesterday morning and turned over the knife, he was not detained.

News dispatches from Indianapolis, Abbott's former home, stated that he had been charged with abduction and robbery by Miss Mario Stevens of Marion, Ind., but no official word had been received by Capt. Bright. During the ten-day investigation of Abbott, Capt. Bright sent a dozen telegrams for information to the Sheriff and officials of Indianapolis, but none of them were answered.

Abbott returned last night to Camp Chilao, where he will continue his employment as a road grader. In the meantime deputy sheriffs are continuing their investigation of the torso mystery.

REPLIES BEING GRADED IN BYRD FLIGHT PUZZLE

Twenty checking clerks are completing the first stage of elimination and grading thousands of answers returned in the Commander Byrd South Pole flight puzzle which was dedicated by the Los Angeles Times to the expedition now in the Antarctic.

More than 15,000 persons from all sections of Southern California submitted papers hoping for the correct solution of the fascinating story of Commander Byrd. The atlas was the only guide and key to the missing words and according to officials of public libraries in the Southland thousands of persons sought information from geographies during the last five days that the Byrd puzzle appeared in The Times.

Cash prizes will be given the first twelve persons offering the neatest, best presented and nearest correct solution of the puzzle. The official judges of The Times contest announced yesterday that the winners will be announced in the next Sunday Times, the 19th inst.

Lindbergh Song Composer Gets Morrow Letter

Raoul Riverton, song writer and composer, of 630 Frontenac Way, has received letters from Ambassador Morrow and the Prince of Wales, acknowledging receipt of "Lindy's Wedding March," his latest composition. The original manuscript of the piece was sent to Miss Anne Morrow, fiancee of Col. Lindbergh, and a copy to Great Britain's popular son.

The number, which Riverton is publishing himself, recently was introduced on the air by Gordon Berger over KHJ, and has been praised widely. The composer is a graduate of the London College of Music. His other song creations include "Bells of San Gabriel," "In the Garden of San Juan," "A Desert Lullaby" and "On the Shores of Malibu," the latter two being now on the presses.

ADVERTISING WEEK BEGINS

Club Traces Year's Achievements in Exhibits and Tells of Great Tourist Gain

Featured by the largest exhibit of national and local advertisements ever assembled in Southern California, the Los Angeles Advertising Club will observe "Advertising Achievement Week," today, to the 18th inst., a week set aside to impress the public's consciousness of the great local benefits derived from advertising.

According to Warwick H. Carpenter, Pacific Coast representative, one of the greatest things advertising has done in this part of the country is to move two types of crops. One is the fruit crop. The other is the tourist crop. Advertising now is having great success with a new crop of industries moving to Southern California.

Don Thomas, advertising manager of the All-Year Club, says that after seven consecutive years of advertising in national magazines and metropolitan newspapers throughout the United States and Canada, 518,962 visitors were counted through a check of transportation channels in the summer of 1928 and a total of approximately 1,000,000 tourists for the year, an increase in annual number of visitors over 1921 of some 233 1-3 per cent. For statistical purposes visitors here less than three months are classed as tourists. In addition expenditures of visitors staying three months or more are computed at $136,576,929 annually, representing annual transients' expenditures of $344,667,036.

The tourists who return to locate here permanently, according to the Eberle Economic Service, receive a minimum of $125,000,000 annually as dividends and interest on eastern investments, which in the main is reinvested locally. This represents a total of some $469,667,036 of "new income" received by Southern California annually as a direct result of its tourist and long-stay transient business.

The exhibit which consists of more than 200 separate panels of the finest advertising produced through the year will be on display during advertising achievement week at Barker Brothers. The public is invited.

STORM DRAINS ADDED

On recommendation of the City Engineer and its Public Works Committee the City Council was voted to include storm drains in the plans for the proposed extension of Figueroa street through Elysian Park.

LECTURE ANNOUNCED

The University of Psychological Research yesterday announced that J. Frederick Richardson of Washington, D. C., will speak at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday before the class in personality at the classrooms, 126 West Third street.

NEED CITED IN JEWISH FUND DRIVE

Leader of Appeal Here Gives Idea of Importance of Work to be Aided

An idea of the importance of the work being done by the various institutions that are to benefit from the United Jewish Welfare Fund Appeal for $200,000 was indicated by Irving H. Hellman, president and director of the appeal.

Crop failures during the year in the Jordan Valley and the Valley of Jezreel are held responsible for the slow progress in a number of the settlements which necessitated relief to the stricken colonies. In order to offset the loss involved, the Palestine Zionist executive appropriated a special fund of about $90,000 for the erection of a series of new buildings in these settlements, the building operations being carried out by the settlers themselves, the wages thus earned by them providing a means of livelihood.

The report also declares that the Ruttenberg Central Power Station, in which the Palestine Foundation Fund is a heavy investor, within a year's time will be supplying all the settlements of the Jordan Valley and the Valley of Jezreel with electric light and energy. The irrigation of Jewish colonies will be facilitated through the central hydroelectrical power station on the Jordan.

Southwestern Engineering Estimates for Quarter

Earnings on Common Placed at $2.35 a Share

Sales Run 110 Per Cent Over Comparative Period

Officials of the Southwestern Engineering Corporation yesterday estimated net profits for the quarter ended March 31, last, at approximately $70,000 after all charges, including depreciation and Federal taxes, equal after deducting $14,037 in dividends on the 8 per cent preferred stock, to $2.35 a share on 23,719 common shares of $25 par value each.

On this estimate the company's earnings are now running at the annual rate of $280,000, or $9.40 a common share. This figure is nearly double that for the full year of 1928, for which the company reported net profits of $145,610, or $3.70 a share on the common stock. Excepting one or two periods the company has shown a consistent increase in earnings each year since 1916.

Sales of the company for the first three months of the current year reached an aggregate of $1,563,000, or double that reported for the entire first half of 1928. This also compares with sales for the first quarter of last year of $739,000 and represents an increase of $824,000, or about 110 per cent.

B. M. Snyder, secretary-treasurer of the organization, stated that the orders received for the first four months this year jumped more than 100 per cent over the orders for the same period last year, while sales for April were more than double April, 1928.

This increase Mr. Snyder largely attributes to the development of the company's foreign trade. This division of the business has run close to 50 per cent of the total business this year, while last year it was about 20 per cent.

The operations and activities of Southwestern Engineering are illustrated by Mr. Snyder's report on current orders. Practically all the equipment for a large oil refinery near Detroit which is now nearing completion was supplied. Orders for two large gasoline absorption plants have been placed by a midcontinent company, while a large shipment of refinery equipment has just been made to the Venezuela refinery of the Pan American company. Various other equipment amounting to more than $100,000 is being fabricated for shipment to the midcontinent oil field. Another order of the same value was recently signed with the Christmas Copper Company of Arizona for rebuilding a flotation mill. Five other milling jobs are scheduled for various parts of the United States, Canada and Russia.

"New equipment which has been placed on the market generally during the last four months should aid considerably in keeping the volume of business up to the high mark already established," Mr. Snyder said.

Wabash Railway Plans Approved by Commission

WASHINGTON, May 11. (AP)—Conditional approval was given by the Interstate Commerce Commission today to Wabash Railroad proposals for acquiring additional stock in the Lake Erie and Fort Wayne Railroad Company, which it now partially owns.

The commission laid down a set of conditions under which the Lake Erie and Fort Wayne Railroad will have to maintain an independent organization after its purchase by the Wabash.

SIMMONS ANALYZES LOANS

Stock Exchange Head Says Deflation Policy of Federal Reserve Has Failed; Questions Right

BY EARLE E. CROWE

For the first time the attitude of the New York Stock Exchange on the policy of the Federal Reserve Board relative to reducing brokers' loans was officially set forth the other night by E. H. H. Simmons, president, in addressing the members of the Chicago Stock Exchange. His illuminating discussion of the complexities involved, and his explanation of why the Federal Reserve has failed in its objective have provoked some interesting comment among speculators, investors and bankers.

Mr. Simmons says that it is obvious by this time that the methods chosen by the Federal Reserve to reduce stock market loans have failed. Loans, he points out, have increased instead of decreased since the spring of 1928, the increase mainly coming in the class of loans "by others." In the last twelve months this class of loans has increased more than $1,500,000,000.

DISTINCTION EXPLAINED

Inability of the reserve system to control loans "by others" is the crux of the whole question, Mr. Simmons contends. He charges the Federal Reserve Board in this connection with failure to comprehend the difference between "credit" loaned in the stock market by banks and "capital" loaned by individuals and business corporations. No one questions the jurisdiction of the reserve system over the use of credit, he says, but there is a serious question of the right to extend this jurisdiction to the flow of capital, representing the savings of individuals and corporations.

"Thus far, at least," Mr. Simmons observes, "the concrete results of the high money policy of the Federal Reserve system gives us no reason to believe that the Federal Reserve authorities have clearly grasped the real nature of their attempt to dictate the flow of capital in this case."

Elaborating his explanation of why he believes the Federal Reserve has failed, the stock exchange president asserts that the warnings and implied threats of the Federal Reserve have actually aided in the flow of capital into stock market loans. Owners of capital, becoming alarmed, have been impelled to place their funds in stock market call loans, described by Mr. Simmons as the safest form of loan known.

FLOW IRRESISTIBLE

"It is not the stock exchange," he says, "or the stock market, or even 'stock market speculators' who are opposing the Federal Reserve system policy—it is the continual generation of fresh American capital upon an absolutely unprecedented scale, and the inevitable tendency under present Federal Reserve policies for this capital to seek investment in the very call stock market loans which the reserve is apparently desirous of deflating."

Mr. Simmons is also unable to understand the "deep mystery" for the necessity of deflating brokers' loans, nor does he know how the Federal Reserve arrives at the conclusion that security prices are inflated. He cites banking statistics to show that there is no shortage of credit, and he wonders why stock market loans are discriminated against when the banks of the country report 25 per cent of resources invested in bonds, and also vast credits to producers, loans on real estate, installment credits and other forms of commercial lending besides the so-called legitimate commercial loan for the financing of goods in transit.

The constructive suggestion Mr. Simmons makes to the Federal Reserve concerning the making of security collateral loans eligible for rediscounting will find support among many bankers who have advocated this policy in the past. Mr. Simmons believes that less reserve credit would go into the stock market if such a policy were in force than is now the case.

Erratic Shifts Feature Week on Stock Mart

NEW YORK, May 11. (AP) — The stock market passed through an extremely trying week, with call money at 14 per cent on the first four days, and dropping precipitately to 6 on Friday. Prices eased off until Friday, when they leaped forward under the stimulus of reasonable money again, only to encounter rather heavy profit-taking today.

The unrelenting stringency of call money during most of the week was surprising and puzzling to speculators, as easier money had been expected this week, with the completion of the month-end shifting of balances. Ambitious pool programs, which had been instituted late last week with the elevation of price indices to record levels, were temporarily abandoned.

Bankers explained that there was little to account for the scarcity of funds save the belated return of the 1st-inst. interest and dividend payments, and that it was not unusual for the crux of the month-end credit requirements to come a week or ten days after the first, as time is required for the checks to make their way back to the banks for payment, and it is a few days before the return flow of funds offsets the outflow.

Utah Copper to Cut Wage Scale

SALT LAKE CITY, May 11. (AP)—A wage reduction of 25 cents a day, effective the 16th inst., was announced today by the Utah Copper Company, the reduction, which will affect approximately 3900 mine, mill and general workers, is incident to recent reductions in the price of copper. The wage scale will remain $1 a day higher than that of last September, since which time several wage increases have been granted by the company with the advancing price of copper.

The company's quarterly earnings report, made public today, shows net earnings of $10,862,404 after deduction of all charges but not of depletion and general taxes. Production for the quarter was 80,960,346 pounds, compared with 85,911,474 for the corresponding quarter of 1928.

TIRE PLANT OPERATIONS AT CAPACITY

Pacific Goodrich Will Install New Equipment to Boost Output

Pacific Goodrich Rubber Company, Los Angeles subsidiary of the B. F. Goodrich Company, reported for the first quarter of 1929 the production of 318,307 tires and 268,647 tubes, according to a statement issued by J. C. Herbert, secretary, yesterday. The present daily production is 5250 tires and 4500 tubes.

With the installation of additional equipment, the company expects to step this daily production up to 5500 tires and 5000 tubes within the next thirty days. The company's export business is growing rapidly, while throughout the eleven Western States it serves, the outlook for continued increased business is good, it was stated.

Equipment for the production of airplane tires, which is to be installed at once, will permit the addition of a new line that is expected to add considerably to the volume of business. Also machines for the manufacture of the Silverton De Luxe super tires are being added to the Los Angeles plant.

The concern is now employing around 1100 employees and the factory is running with three shifts. While no estimates were made as to the increase of business anticipated this year over the ten months' operations of 1928, the officials expressed the opinion that the increase would be substantial. In this connection they pointed out that the automobile registrations in the Western States served from the Los Angeles plant have increased about 11 per cent over last year.

Cotton Crop in Valley States Given Setback

MEMPHIS, May 11. (Exclusive)—The cotton crop of the valley States has become very spotted from the effects of cold weather, high winds and excessive rainfall. To the south of Memphis, as far as Natchez, Miss., and north to Louisiana and through Central, East and South Arkansas thousands of acres of young cotton withered beyond redemption from the adverse weather, and an additional large acreage of seed in the ground rotted beyond hope. Widespread replanting will be necessary in the valley States and so far the soil has been too moist to permit any of this. Farmers are impatiently awaiting favorable weather with none in sight at current writing, although the temperature is considerably higher.

Memphis seed merchants say that demand for cottonseed has doubled the past week, with the supply promising to become scarce if the demand holds up for a few days longer. Through the valley and in Georgia and South Carolina, where replanting is being done, seed is much scarcer and prices reported kiting.

There is still time to make a fair crop in the valley, provided weevil damage to a moderately late crop is not excessive. In the Memphis area cotton can be planted as late as the 20th to 25th inst., but at great jeopardy from weather and weevil.

Dispatches from North Louisiana say the crop in several sections was 30 to 40 per cent killed by cold winds, with seed scarce.

OLD BANK METHODS CHANGE

Guaranty Trust Official First to Introduce Idea of Closer Relations to Public

NEW YORK, May 11. (AP)—Francis H. Sisson, the Guaranty Trust Company's "secretary of state," decided many years ago that a touch of friendly, rocking-chair neighborliness would stimulate the cold, hard business of banking.

Today almost every big institution in Wall street has its "Sisson."

Newspaper man, writer, advertising man, public-relations counselor, banker and back to newspaper man completes the Sisson cycle.

DISPARAGES TITLE

He carries the title of vice-president, but insists that he is a newspaper man and that he has no aspirations to be anything else.

When he first was given the task of making the public think of one of the country's biggest banks as a friend instead of a money machine, the path ahead of him was a trackless jungle.

It was a feat that never had been attempted on a large scale. The very idea was heresy in the minds of most practical bankers.

Mr. Sisson's first contact with newspapers was in 1885 when he carried them in a canvas sack through the streets of Galesburg, Ill., and delivered them to his string of customers. He was graduated from Knox College in Galesburg and went to Harvard, where he specialized in English and economics with a view toward becoming a writer.

His first job as a reporter was with the old Chicago Inter Ocean. For five years, until 1898, he worked on that paper and several others before taking himself and his experience back to Galesburg.

He bought the Galesburg Evening Mail and put one toe in politics as secretary of the county committee. He was only 27 years of age, but had a taste for big game that landed him in the midst of a political and editorial fight with the Chicago-Lorimer faction.

ENTERS NEW YORK

Agents for the latter, by concealing their identity, bought the Evening Mail to get it out of the way and the future head of the Guaranty Trust's diplomatic corps came to New York as a member of the McClure publishing organization.

He became advertising manager for a real-estate firm, then vice-president of an advertising agency. It was only a step from being vice-chairman of this national enterprise to the new job of melting the frosty barriers between a big bank and its customers.

Recently, still pioneering, he organized a public-relations committee for the American Bankers' Association, supervised the publication of the American Bankers' Association Journal and is engaging in a variety of related enterprises.

Mr. Sisson has his own niche in banking, and it is large. In addition to speeches, magazine articles and organization work he is active in educational circles and a member of the court of arbitration of the Arbitration Society of America.

AIR INVESTORS ADDS FOUR NEW DIRECTORS

Air Investors, Inc., has increased its directorate with the election to the board of Robert Lehman of Lehman Brothers; William B. Stout of Stout Air Services, Inc.; W. W. Crocker of the Crocker First National Bank of San Francisco, and Seymour H. Knox of the Marine Trust Company, Buffalo. It was also announced that W. G. Herron, formerly vice-president of Boeing Air Transport Company, had been appointed to the staff.

Hiram Walker Stock Split

DETROIT, May 11. (Exclusive)—Stockholders of Hiram Walker, Gooderham & Worts, Ltd., approved the directors' proposal for the split-up of capital stock on a three-for-one basis and authorized the issuance of additional shares at $15 a share at a special meeting yesterday. The new capital, it was pointed out, will constitute a valuable instrument in the directing of the company's future activities.

A new rack warehouse is now in the course of construction at Walkerville which will increase the company's storage capacity by 2,250,000 proof gallons. The present total stocks in the Toronto and Walkerville plants and in excess of 11,000,000 proof gallons of spirits. The new warehouse is being paid for out of earnings, no bank loans for any expansion program projects being outstanding.

Loan Convention Hears Officials

SACRAMENTO, May 10. (AP)—Resources of California building and loan associations will probably pass the $1,000,000,000 mark in the next four years, George S. Walker, State Commissioner, predicted in an address here today before the twenty-fourth annual convention of the California Building-Loan League. The commissioner advocated both lower interest rates and lower loan rates as a forward step for the movement.

Danger in the continued increase in the cost of operating the State government was expressed to the 400 building-loan conclave delegates by Ray L. Riley, State Controller, who foresees building up the State expenses beyond the corresponding increase in values.

NEW YORK BOND PRICES

NEW YORK, May 11. (AP)—Week-end selling caused the bond market to resume its irregular lower trend in today's brief session despite the confidence inspired by easing of money rates yesterday. However, there was a steady undertone which benefited many issues.

Realizing was apparent in the convertible group, which moved unevenly with the rest of the list. American I. G. Chemical 5½s were firmer on continued demand. Alleghany Corporation 5s were heavily traded with the stock in expectation of an offering of rights, but sold off near the close on profit-taking.

The rail mortgages were listless and somewhat easier. The heaviest trading in this section was in two recently listed issues, Missouri Pacific 5¼s, a convertible, and Texas and Pacific C 5s, both of which commanded fractionally higher prices. Selling of Western Maryland 4s forced them down to their year's low at 72.

Most of the activity in the foreign list was centered in French Republic 7s, their early advance brought in offerings which cancelled a gain and they finished unchanged on a turnover of $156,000 par value. Rhine Maine Danube 7s recorded a gain of more than a point and Norway Kingdom 5½s were firm. The foreign division as a whole was dull, with narrow price movements.

United States government obligations, making further response to the week-end credit ease, were irregularly higher.

As a result of the decline during the past week in face of protracted high money rates, the Associated Press averages of forty bonds have declined to within less than half of a point of the year's low touched late in March.

The quotations represent sales of bonds (in thousands of dollars) and the high, low and closing prices in the order given. To expedite transmission the close is omitted when the same as the low, and both low and close when same as high.

Stock Prices Strengthen With Byron Jackson and Douglas Aircraft Featuring

With the volume of operations well sustained the week's closing half-day session on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange yesterday carried forward the strength exhibited the previous day without any signs of week-end liquidation. Byron Jackson jumped to the leadership of the trading activity and soared to a new peak with a sensational turnover while Douglas Aircraft was propelled to another new top.

Byron Jackson was transferred to the extent of nearly 9000 shares and shot up 2 3-4 points to a record high price at 43, where it finished the session. This move followed a similar advance on Friday and was generally attributed to pool operations. Douglas Aircraft, which has hit a new peak practically every day of the past week, spurted 3-4 point to achieve new heights at 45. The close was 44 1-2.

Southern California Edison also followed up Friday's advance with a gain of 1 3-8 points net to 57 1-4, with the rights up another 15 cents to 3.15. Both issues were fractionally higher earlier in the day. John Bean and Emsco Derrick each spurted 1-2 to finish at 54 and 40, respectively.

Excepting Standard of California, the petroleum board moved forward as a whole. Standard eased 3-8 to 79 5-8, while Signal A, Union and Union Associates, Richfield and Macmillan advanced fractionally. Macmillan scored a new top at 43, closing later at 42 3-4, up 1-4.

LOS ANGELES CURB

Considerable week-end profit taking developed in yesterday's trading on the Los Angeles Curb Exchange and served to cut back many of the substantial advances scored by the aviation issues over the past week. Fokker and Maddux, sensational traders of recent sessions, suffered to the greatest extent, while the market as a whole recorded small fractional recessions.

Fokker in the early dealings broke under an avalanche of selling orders and slumped more than 7 points to a low for the day of 54. From this position the stock rallied rapidly and closed the session at 57 1-2, off 3 5-8 net. Maddux, to a lesser degree, fluctuated in a similar fashion, hitting a low at 14 1-4 and recovering to end at 14 3-4, off 3-4 net. Lockheed, Kinner and Bach dropped off fractionally, while other aeronautics held firm with Consolidated Aircraft up 1-2 to 44 1-2.

Claude Neon Electrical Products again transferred briskly and, closing at 58 7-8, was down 5-8 net. Few other changes of consequence were recorded, the oil list remaining practically unchanged.

Sales totaled 87,293 shares, valued at $816,451.

NEW YORK CURB STOCKS

NEW YORK, May 11. (AP)—Efforts to extend the recent recovery of prices in today's curb market were only partially successful. Prices generally started upward at the opening, but the market ran into heavy selling in the last hour when doubts were raised as to whether Friday's 6 per cent call money rate could be maintained next week.

Public utilities were again turned over in heavy volume on reports of steadily expanding earnings, prospects of favorable dividend developments and rumors of new alignments in the industry. Electric Investors was the spectacular individual feature, soaring nearly 8 points to a new high record at 163½, or nearly double the year's low, and then losing half its gain on realizing. St. Regis Paper, which was heavy public utility holdings, crossed 150 for an extreme gain of more than 5 points, but lost all but a point. American Super Power issues also attained new high levels, but closed practically unchanged.

A break of about 6 points in Fokker Aircraft had a disturbing effect on speculation in the aviation securities. Aviation Corporation of America dropped 1⅜. Western Air Express 1⅛ and several other leaders yielded fractionally after showing signs of strength in the early trading. Douglas Aircraft crossed 45 to a new high.

Sentry Safety Control crossed 27 to a new high on buying influenced by statements of company officials that on 5000 installations of its motion picture equipment earnings should approximate $5 a share. Hazeltine Radio ran up more than 8 points to a new high at 60½ and retained nearly all of its gain. Royal Typewriter jumped 17½ points to a new high at 130 on a few odd-lot sales. U. S. Radiator issues also were in good demand.

The closing price is omitted when same as the low, and both low and close when same as the high.

A STOCK Which Should Double In Value
The stocks of certain sound expanding companies have been doubling in value. Electric Bond & Share, selected by American Securities Service and advertised by our associate service, Investory Supervisory Service, December 9, 1927, under the heading, "A Stock Which Should Double in Value," has since advanced, been split three for one, received rights which brings the old stock, then 75, to the equivalent of $286 a share.
Does anyone believe this country will now cease to grow and strategically situated companies expand?
Thorough investigation by our Staff now reveals another stock which we are willing to term, the same as we did in December, 1927, "A Stock Which Should Double in Value." Not a temporary speculation, but a sound growing stock of real interest to investors.
Send name and address and our latest selection of a stock which should double in value will be sent you free.

WEEKLY CITRUS REVIEW

California oranges continued to find falling prices at eastern and middle western auction centers during the past five days, averages compiled yesterday revealed. The fruit sold for an average of $3.64 a box, or 32 cents below the average set last week.

Some decayed fruit, especially during the latter part of the week, was an unfavorable factor in the price drop.

During the corresponding week of last year oranges sold for $7.04 per box, or $3.40 more than this week's price. In the same week of 1927 the fruit commanded an average of $4.41, or 77 cents more than the present average.

Lemons also slumped in values, dropping 36 cents under last week's averages and $2.65 below the mark set during the corresponding week of last year.

GOLD ACE MINING COMPANY
Made Its First Shipment of Gold Bullion May 7th
(OTHERS WILL FOLLOW REGULARLY.)
THE shipment was valued at approximately $2500.00, and was derived by barrel amalgamation from only 500 pounds of ore . . . averaging in the neighborhood of $10,000.00 per ton.
Arrangements are now being made to treat 1000 pounds of high-grade ore by this process daily. Meanwhile, the Company's 100-ton capacity mill is treating the large deposits of low-grade ore which will be "sweetened" by much higher milling ore just as soon as a track is laid to the new strike.
We have purposely withheld making statements regarding the possibilities surrounding Gold Ace's phenomenal ore strike until it could be determined whether or not it would prove to be only a small pocket. At this writing the extremely high-grade vein has reached a depth of 16 feet with a width of between 3 and 4 inches. Several tons of this high-grade ore are already sacked, to be amalgamated as soon as possible. Needless to say very high values continue in the vein on both sides of the high grade.
With the showing to date on the high-grade strike, together with the known low-grade tonnage, plus the possibility of further high-grade ore being discovered . . . we believe Gold Ace Mining Company's stock offers an extremely attractive speculation at present market.

OIL NEWS

BY HOWARD C. KEGLEY

General Order No. 3 has just been mailed to more than 700 oil operators in the California fields, by Umpire F. C. Van Deinse.

The order applies to all known oil-producing areas in the State and is effective from and after 7 a.m., the 19th inst., and supersedes General Order No. 2 at that time.

The new order contemplates a total curtailment of 190,264 barrels per day, based on the estimated potential output, the 1st inst., of all wells on production in the State after deducting the yield from new wells completed and placed on production subsequent to April 21, 1929.

Water Test Interests

Considerable interest is taken in Herbert MacMillan's No. 2 well, situated near the intersection of Forest and Little Lake streets, at Santa Fe Springs, because of the attempt to be made shortly to get a successful water shut-off.

MacMillan's well is down about 7054 feet, with six and five-eighths-inch pipe set to 6983 feet, at the top of the Clarke sand.

A "rat hole" has been made to locate the sand, and the pipe was run through the shale to the top of the sand. Where sand and shale meet at 6983 feet, is the point where the well will be cemented.

The Rohde No. 2 well of McAdams & Rohde, in the southwest section of the field was regarded as a freak when it made a successful water shut-off at about the same depth MacMillan's well is to be cemented. Extreme heat at that level is reported to be the cause of unsuccessful cementing jobs in wells belonging to George F. Getty, Inc., the Associated and Richfield oil companies.

Drilling Program Starts

The California Western Oil Company yesterday spudded in its Havenstite No. 1 well, on Sec. 17, 11-23, at Maricopa Flat. It is the first of a number of holes to be drilled in that area, according to reports.

California Western's new well is a short distance from the newest producer of the Signal Oil and Gas Company.

Fishing Delays

The Chanslor-Canfield Midway Oil Company is fishing for several hundred feet of two and one-half-inch tubing frozen in the Hobson No. E-4 well, in the Seacliff field.

Rotary is being moved in and drilling will be resumed as soon as the tubing is removed. Derrick for this well was destroyed four weeks ago when the well blew in during a production test. Bottom of the hole is down about 2813 feet.

A successful water shut-off test was made in the No. 6 well of Chanslor-Canfield Midway, in the Midway field. Bottom of the hole is at 2257 feet.

Wildcat Resumes

Drilling was resumed in the Keefe-Morrison No. 1 wildcat, down 1519 feet, and situated on Sec. 13, 32-22, in the Midway field. The well was tied up for three weeks because circulation was lost. It is situated about seven miles southeast of holdings of the Chanslor Canfield-Midway Oil Company.

Spuds Wildcat

The Shell Oil Company recently spudded in its Bastanchury No. 1 wildcat, on Sec. 28, 3-10, northwest of Fullerton. Bottom of the hole is down 1000 feet.

Shell is building derrick for its Bowman No. 1 wildcat to be drilled near the intersection of Redondo-Inglewood Boulevard and Center avenue, at Lawndale.

New Acreage Taken

The Prairie Oil & Gas Company, which is reported to have leased considerable acreage northwest of Montebello, is also said to have made location for the Hellman No. 1 wildcat, to be drilled on Sec. 32, 1-12, near Belvedere.

The activity of this company, one of the newer operators in Southern California, is being watched with interest.

Completes Two

The Texas Company yesterday completed two wells at Signal Hill. The Arnold Kent No. 9, finished at 7255 feet, is making approximately 105 barrels of 22.9 deg. gravity oil.

The Arnold Kent No. 5-A, completed at 6600 feet, is making 437 barrels of 21.5 deg. gravity oil a day.

Water Shut-off Test

A water shut-off test will be made today or tomorrow in the Bolton No. 1 well of the Western Drilling and Refining Company, at Huntington Beach. Seven-inch casing is cemented at 3683 feet.

Successful Cementing

The Richfield Oil Company is reported to have made a successful water shut-off test in its Elliott No. 2 well at Santa Fe Springs. It was standing cemented in the Clark sand at about 7611 feet.

Drilling will be resumed to deepen the hole about sixty feet before a production test is made.

Swabbing Roberts

The Roberts No. 1 well of the Plymouth Oil Company at Santa Fe Springs, is swabbing. Bottom of the hole is down 7670 feet.

Nearing Completion

Of eleven wells being drilled by the Bandini Petroleum Company at Santa Fe Springs, three are nearing completion, according to field reports.

The Bandini No. 8 is down 6180 feet; Bandini No. 10 is down 6212 feet, and Bandini No. 13 is down 6118 feet. All have penetrated the O'Connell sand.

RUBBER MARKET

NEW YORK, May 11. (Exclusive)—In an extremely dull market, accompanied by firmness throughout Saturday's short session, futures on the local rubber exchange advanced from 10 to 40 points. London cables, which reported a firmer tone there, inspired a little buying and took several deliveries up 10 and 20 points. London advanced ⅛d to 10⅜d.

Outside spot was up ⅛c at 21⅛c.

Steadier Tone Rules Trading on Grain Mart

CHICAGO, May 11. (Exclusive)—Evening-up for over the week-end was under way in the grain markets, and they showed a steadier undertone than of late. Values held within relatively narrow limits. Wheat finished 2¼c higher to ⅛c lower, with May 1.03⅝, July 1.07⅞ @1.08 and September 1.11½@1.11⅝. Corn eased toward the last on local selling and closed ⅜@⅝c lower, with May 83¾, July 87⅜@87¾, September 89½@89⅝, while December was 83⅜@83½. Oats finished unchanged to ⅜c lower, the latter on May, which closed at 45¼, while July was 43⅞, September 42½. Rye gained ½c, with July 88¾ and September 91⅜. There was no trading in the May.

Liquidation was on in all grains during the week, with all deliveries except May corn and oats selling at a new low for the season. For the week wheat lost 7@7⅝c, corn 4@5⅛c, oats 1⅝@2⅛c, rye 4@4¼c. Lard was off 2½@12½c, ribs 5@40c for the week, with bellies 27½c higher to 22½c, lower.

Wheat traders are more inclined to pay attention to the prospective winter wheat crop than of late as reports from the Southwest have been so flattering for weeks that any change in conditions would have to be for the worse, and there have been increasing claims of too much moisture. The map showed general rains in Kansas overnight, with more predicted, and a period of dry and warm weather is regarded as necessary. Floods were reported in parts of that State, while claims of Hessian fly damage are increasing from the soft wheat belt.

With wheat prices back to around pre-war levels there is a disposition on the part of the trade to go slow on the selling side. Winnipeg reported an excellent class of buying of futures there during the day, with houses with continental connections leading. There were intimations of large export sales, and based on reports from the seaboard during the week, it is possible that close to 10,000,000 bushels were sold.

Farm-relief legislation still looms as a market influence, as does the great disparity which prevails between wheat prices and the all-commodity index figures.

Heavy rains over a good part of the corn belt, which may delay planting still further, especially in the Southwest, were instrumental in bringing about a higher level of buyers. In addition there was an active shipping demand, with sales of around 200,000 bushels by local handlers, making about 1,500,000 bushels for the week, or far in excess of the arrivals. The trade looks for a good reduction to be shown in the visible supply.

Liquidation was on in May oats and prices dropped sharply, with a lack of aggressive buying on the way down. Short covering resulted in a rally from the inside figures toward the last. Charters were made for 260,000 bushels to Buffalo. Crop reports were generally favorable.

A good part of the trade in rye was in spreading between grain and wheat and corn.

Interest in provisions is light and centered mainly in lard. There were small deliveries and no particular pressure from either side, the close being 2½c lower on the active trading futures, while May was unchanged. Ribs were 5@10c higher. Bellies are 5c lower to unchanged.

LINER RESOLUTE DUE TOMORROW

Hamburg American Craft to Spend Day in Port

Vessel Nearing Final Lap of Extended World Cruise

Many Notable Personages on Long Passenger List

BY WAYNE B. CAVE

Hamburg-American Line's big passenger steamer Resolute is due from the Orient via San Francisco at 6 a.m. tomorrow on the next to last leg of a special globe cruise to terminate at New York after four and a half months, covering 29,000 miles and touching perhaps seventy ports in a score of countries. She will dock at Berth 60, outer harbor of San Pedro and will sail south at 6 p.m.

The passengers, approximately 400, will pass the day ashore in various pursuits, including airplane flights. For all who wish, a sightseeing program is offered by the line. This contemplates a drive along the western beaches to Santa Monica, through Beverly Hills and Hollywood. After luncheon at the Ambassador Hotel the drive will continue through Los Angeles' business section and return to the ship by way of the forests of oil derricks.

The 400 travelers represent almost as many walks of life; hail from eleven American States and ten foreign countries. Among the Americans are Judge Abram I. Elkus, former American Ambassador to Turkey; Murray M. Shoemaker of Cincinnati, former Governor of Iowa; Prof. Edward A. Leopold of Yale University; Henry Lee Norris, director of works at Columbia University; Max Epstein, president of American Car Company; Lute H. Johnson and Joseph H. Langer, Denver writers; Jack Moffitt of the Kansas City Star and Robert Mountsier of the New York Sun.

Ten European titles also adorn the passenger personnel. They are Count Hamel, Consul-General for Panama at Berlin; Count Woldemar Von Schwerin, Bohrau, Germany; Baroness Binia Von Steiger, Frankfort, Germany; Count Alfred Von Aldana Maldonado Westerholz, Munich, Germany; Count and Countess Josef Seilern-Aspang, Litschau, Austria; Baron Johann Herring-Frankendorf, Grunau, Austria; Mrs. Juliette d'Agramonte (Countess d'Menet,) Paris; Count Prokop Lazansky, Chyse, Czecho-Slovakia, and Marquis and Marquesa de la Felguera of Madrid, Spain.

Southern Californians include Mmes. Tennie B. Machin, A. R. Sampliner, J. B. Ficken, William A. Bradberry; also Charles Burnham, Mr. and Mrs. John E. Finnall, and Mr. and Mrs. Walter V. E. Thompson, all of Los Angeles. Others are Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Klamp of Hollywood, Mrs. J. Foster Flagg of Santa Barbara; L. N. Patty and M. R. Risser of Pasadena; Mrs. Sarah F. Stevenson of Santa Ana and Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Llewellyn and the Misses Helen and Mary L. Meyer of Long Beach.

At noon on the 15th inst. the last of the special globe cruisers, the Cunard Line steamer Franconia, will arrive here eastbound with approximately 400 travelers. She will sail the following day at 6 a.m.

COASTWISE TRAVEL HEAVY AT WEEK-END

Summer travel coastwise burst forth full fledged this week-end, with capacity bookings both directions. The Lassco liner Harvard brought in 465 travelers from San Francisco yesterday, the limit, and will carry an equal number north today. Friday saw an equal number sailing north on the sister liner Yale and she will be filled coming south today.

Among the intercoastal movements, the Panama Mail liner Guatemala sailed for New York and Central America with 125 passengers and capacity load of 5000 tons of freight. The Panama Pacific liner Mongolia is due from New York and Havana tomorrow with 400.

Lindley Winser yesterday was advanced to chief operator for the Mackay Federal marine radio station at Elysian Park. He succeeds H. D. Watson, who has joined the technical talkie staff of M.-G.-M.

Two hundred thousand pint bottles of ginger ale are due on the Panama Pacific liner Mongolia tomorrow. The consignment weighs 190 tons and is said to be the largest single shipment brought here by water.

J. W. Westerfield, Riverside capitalist, and Mrs. Westerfield occupied the bridal suite on the Calawaii, sailing with seventy-five passengers yesterday noon for Hawaii. Mrs. Westerfield was Miss Evalyn Bowman, librarian for Imperial county. They were married the 8th inst. at the Mission Inn, whose manager, Frank Miller, was at the dock to see them depart.

The Panama motor tanker Brunswick dry docked at the Los Angeles yards for voyage repairs yesterday, preparatory to loading gasoline for Australia for the Atlantic Union Company. Another strange tanker, the British steamer Virgilia, came in yesterday on her first visit here to load for France.

News of Ships and Sailings at Pacific Ports

SAN FRANCISCO, May 11. (AP)—Favored by ideal weather conditions, 400 passengers on the around-the-world cruiser Resolute arrived here early today. Seventy-eight debarked here, while the remainder were on the liner when she sailed tonight for Los Angeles, the Panama Canal, Havana and New York. The vessel is commanded by Capt. Fritz Kruse.

Possible readjustment in the membership of the United States Intercoastal Conference may be made in New York this week as a result of a protest filed with Chairman R. C. Thackara by the Luckenbach Line against the membership of the Quaker Line. The Luckenbach interests assert that the original Quaker Line no longer exists, and that its subsidiary lines are not members.

SEATTLE, May 11.—The American Pacific Whaling Company's fleet of seven steamers, carrying seventy men and an expert harpoon gunner on each vessel, will leave Lake Washington Wednesday for Western Alaska waters.

Two thousand sheep will be aboard the motorship Sierra of the Arctic Transport Company when she sails from Seattle the 20th inst. for Alaska.

First of the new fleet, the Oakland, now under construction in Europe for the Seattle service of the Hamburg-American Line, will leave Hamburg for this coast early in August, according to word received here today by Sudden & Christensen, agents for the service.

TAKING THE STATE PREP RECORD BOOK FOR A RIDE

Three California Interscholastic Federation records were smashed yesterday and two were equaled in the State prep meet yesterday at the Coliseum. On the upper left is Joe Marty, great Fresno High high jumper, clearing 6ft. 4¼in., to equal his own world's record and to shatter the mark of 6ft. 2 3-16in. held jointly by Van Osdel of Compton and Lassalette of Puente. The lad with the immense V on his bosom is Welch of Visalia winning the half-mile in 1m. 58.4s. for a new record. Lockhart held the old mark at 1m. 59s. Almost hidden by Welch is Ferris Webster of Webb school who placed second. Space of Huntington Park and Obergfall of Hollywood are in the background. The photo below shows Irvine Warburton, San Diego's surprise winner in the quarter mile. Warburton finished in the fast time of 49 3-5s. to equal Schiller of L. A. Poly's 1918 record. On the far side of the picture is Red Houck, next to him is Thorny Rogers of Hollywood, the legs behind Rogers belong to Carmichale of Jefferson, Hoobyar of Turlock is on Rogers's right.

BY PAUL LOWRY

Two pee-wee runners—Jimmy Willson and Irving Warburton—who between them captured the 100, 220 and 440-yard dashes, were the prominent figures in San Diego High School's march to the State interscholastic track-and-field championship at the Coliseum yesterday afternoon.

JIMMY WILLSON

The team from San Diego rolled up a total of 22 3-4 points, which was more than enough to win. Hollywood was closest with 16 1-2, Santa Ana, with 11; Jefferson, 10 1-2, and Los Angeles, with 9, trailed in the next three positions.

Of San Diego's winning markers, Willson accounted for ten with wins in the 100 and 220, Warburton five in the quarter-mile, Miller five in the pole, Reed 3-4 by a tie for fourth in the high jump, and the relay team two with a third place.

SPARKLING MEET

It was a sparkling meet in which twenty-one southern schools were represented and nineteen northern ones—a meet which saw the breaking of three C.I.F. records and the equaling of two others.

Those events which produced new records were the property of two boys from the north—Marty of Fresno, who leaped 6ft. 4 1-4in. to beat Darby Jones of L. A.; Poly Welch of Visalia, who clipped three-fifths of a second from the 880-yard mark, and Yancey of Compton, who broke the javelin mark.

Welch ran the half-mile in 1m. 58 4-10s. The old mark—1m. 59s.—was made by Lockhart of Sacramento in 1923. The old high jump record of 6ft. 2 3-16 in. was the combined property of Lassalette of Puente and Van Osdel of Compton, who made it in the State meet last year.

YANCEY STARS

Yancey of Compton is the new record-holder with the spear. He tossed the toothpick 182ft. 35-100in. to beat the old record-holder, McKenzie of Oxnard, who last year registered a toss of 174ft. 4 7-8in.

Willson in winning the 100 in 9 4-5s. and the 220 in 21 2-5s. equaled the record in the longer sprint which was hung up last year by Frank Wykoff of Glendale and Frank Lombardi of Los Angeles High School.

But it was Warburton's victory in the quarter-mile and the equaling of George Schiller's old record of 49 3-5s. which was the biggest surprise of the day.

Warburton placed fourth in

Tony Governor injured his ankle when rounding third and had to retire from the game. Brubaker was switched to the outfield and Jimmy Reese was sent in at second base.

Hollywood got its first tally in the eighth when Murray walked and Bassler doubled to chase him over the plate. Green, hitting for Johns, fanned, and Cook, running for Bassler, was

BENTON HANDCUFFS CUBS

Bill Wrigley's Fence-Busters Get But Two Blows and Drop 6-to-0 Game to Giants

NEW YORK, May 11. (AP)—Larry Benton and Bill Terry joined forces at the Polo Grounds today to turn back the Cubs by 6 to 0 before 45,000 fans in the second game of the series, which thus became even.

Benton doled out just two hits to McCarthy's murderers and Terry capped a busy afternoon by hitting a home run in the eighth with the bases full. Hal Carlson, who relieved Sheriff Blake, was the victim.

"SHERIFF" BLAKE

The Giants got after Blake for two runs in the first round when Terry's single drove one man home and this deficit caused the Sheriff to step down for a pinch batsman in the eighth. Terry's big blow off Carlson then placed the game beyond any Cub threat.

This was the first shut-out for the McCarthy clan and the first victory for Benton. Score:

TOLSON'S HOMER IN NINTH GIVES SERAPHS 7-6 WIN

Slug's Eleventh Circuit Clout of Season Scores Berger Ahead and Ruins Ducks' Hopes

BY BOB RAY

"Slug" Tolson, the hard-hitting gentleman from Washington, D. C., pulled a slightly singed ball game out of the fire for Marty Krug's ambitious Angels in the ninth inning yesterday when he belted one of Jack Knight's offerings into the right-field bleachers to score Walter Berger ahead of him and hand the Portland Ducks a 7-to-6 thumping.

It was a garrison finish to a wild and woolly encounter that saw the score tied on no less than four different occasions by the battling athletes. The Ducks had apparently cinched the game in their half of the ninth when Mack Hillis, who had singled and gone to second on Jahn's bunt, came home on Jimmy Cronin's one-base shot to put the Portland aggregation out in front, 6 to 5.

SLUG TOLSON

But Marty Krug's dynamite row, which blasted the Ducks right out from under a victory in the eighth inning Friday, once more came through nobly in the Angel half of the ninth. Walloping Walter Berger opened the final round by unloading a two-base shot to left. The ball was hit so hard that it nearly knocked Art Jahn's pins right out from under him when the Beaver left fielder attempted to make a shoe-string catch.

TOLSON BREAKS UP GAME

That brought Tolson, the man with the bat, up to the plate and, without appearing to be second-guessing, it looked like bad policy to pitch to him when there was a base open. Anyhow, Tolson leveled on the first ball pitched him by

The Navy junior varsity also scored for the old master by leading Syracuse Jayvees three-quarters of a length, although the freshmen crew from Ithaca took a length and a quarter decision from the Navy plebes.

Johnny Doeg Faces Ben Gorchakoff in Southern Caiifornia Tennis Finals Tod

OLD RIVALS TO FEATURE IN FIVE-SET STRUGGLE

Midge Gladman, Helen Marlow in Women's Event; Spectacular Tilts on Net Schedule

BY RALPH HUSTON

Ben Gorchakoff, captain of the Occidental tennis team, and Johnny Doeg, Stanford star, Davis Cup alternate last year, and eighth ranking player of the United States, will battle it out at 2 o'clock today for the Southern California net championship on the courts of the Los Angeles Tennis Club.

Three years ago this same pair struggled through five thrilling sets, two of which went to deuce, with Gorchakoff emerging victor. The following year neither entered the tournament, and it was won by Gerald Stratford. Last year Gorchakoff won over Clifton Herd in the final match.

The Gorchakoff-Doeg duel will be the feature attraction of a day that will see five championships decided. In addition to the men's singles, final matches in the men's doubles, women's singles and doubles and the mixed doubles are on schedule.

Gorchakoff won his way into the final round with a victory over Keith Gledhill, tall Santa Barbara State College freshman, 6-3, 6-3. The Oxy captain played beautiful tennis to win. After dropping the first three games of the first set, he rallied to win seven consecutive games, taking the first set 6-3, and starting fast on the second set. Gledhill took the second game of the second set, but Gorchakoff, with a brilliant display of topnotch tennis, ran the score to 5-1. He relaxed, and Gledhill took the next two games, to place the score at 5-3. Gorchakoff then won out on his own service.

The Tiger star had his drives and his service working brilliantly. He exhibited the best form he has shown this season, and apparently is just reaching his peak, preparatory to an invasion of the East in quest of the national intercollegiate title. Today's match is scheduled for the best three out of five sets, and if Gorchakoff is to win, he must do it quickly. He appeared to tire rapidly near the end of the second set, yesterday.

Doeg advanced to the finals with a clear-cut victory over Alan Herrington, 6-3, 7-5. The husky Stanford player had his drives working in rare form, but Herrington, playing to his opponent's forehand, forced him into numerous errors.

BLANKS RIVAL

Doeg broke through Herrington early in the first set, taking the third game at deuce and a 3-2 lead, and took his own service to make it 4-2. Herrington was trailing 3-4, as he finished serving the seventh game, and Doeg took the next two tilts without giving Herrington a point.

Doeg started out the second set by taking his third successive game at love. Herrington broke through Doeg's service in the fifth game and won the sixth to take a 4-2 lead. Doeg then won his own service at love and Herrington came right back, giving Doeg one point, and led, 5-3. Then, with a brilliant display of almost superhuman tennis, Doeg won four straight games, the set and the match. He took his own service with his cannonball drive, giving Herrington a lone point. He took Herrington's service at love, won his own and then smashed through Herrington for the deciding game.

Midge Gladman, University of Southern California co-ed, won her way into the finals of the women's singles with a hard-won, three-set victory over Gladys Pats, 6-4, 4-6, 6-3. Miss Gladman's superior tournament experience stood her in good stead, and she proved the more steady in the pinches. She took the first three games of the final set, dropped the fourth and won the next two, to lead, 5-1. Miss Pats rallied gamely here, winning the next two games, but Miss Gladman took her own service to win the final game and the match.

Miss Pats gained some measure of revenge, in a semifinal match of the women's doubles, when, paired with Mrs. Ester Bartosh, she won over Miss Gladman and Mrs. William Henry, the defending champions, in three hard sets, 6-3, 1-6, 7-5. The winners played steady, though not brilliant, tennis, and scoring numerous points on low, hard shots, eliminated the title-holders.

Les Stoefen and Clif Robbins, the youthful doubles team which eliminated Johnny Doeg and Gerald Stratford earlier in the tournament, bowed to superior experience, when the dropped a semifinal match to Herrington and Clif Herd, 6-2, 1-6, 8-6. Stoefen's game at the net was one of the best exhibitions ever seen here, but the steadier play of Herrington and Herd carried the latter team to victory.

WIN DOUBLES

Ellsworth Vines and Keith Gledhill gained the right to appear in the finals, when they won over Phil Neer and Sidney Wood, 10-8, 2-6, 6-3. The youngsters played flashy tennis in spots, while Neer and Wood were erratic.

Herrington, paired with Miss Gladman, gained the finals of the mixed doubles with a 11-9, 6-2 victory over Stoefen and Miss Hauswald.

Today's matches will end the best tournament play in the history of the championships. Youthful players have come through in brilliant style, frequently eliminating cagy veterans. Quarter-finals, semifinals and final matches were of almost equal brilliance, due to the great number of star players. Ed Berry's classic seedings and draw came out as intended, with a north-south duel in prospect in the finals of the men's singles. Yesterday's complete results, and the schedule for today:

MEN'S SINGLES

Semifinals: Gorchakoff defeated Gledhill, 6-3, 6-3; Doeg defeated Herrington, 6-2, 7-5.

WOMEN'S SINGLES

MEN'S DOUBLES

Semifinals: Gladys Patz and Mrs. Bartosh defeated Midge Gladman and Mrs. Henry, 6-3, 1-6, 7-5.

SPEED KING OUT TO KEEP CROWN

Lou Meyer in Automobile Classic Again

INDIANAPOLIS (Ind.) May 11.—Louis Meyer, boyish American automobile racing champion for 1928, who as an unknown won the 500-mile race here last year, has entered and will drive in the seventeenth international 500-mile race to be held at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, the 30th inst.

PETER DE PAOLO

Meyer, who hails from Los Angeles and is a slender-limbed son of speed with a demeanor as shy as the voice which never resounds above a whisper, will defend his championship against an invasion of Louis Chiron, a Frenchman who is the European racing champion and who in his first race here will pilot a DeLage, an ancestor of which won the 1914 five century race in the hands of Rene Thomas, also a Frenchman.

Married and a father at 2[illegible] years of age, Meyer appeared at the Indianapolis track last May with his aging father, who is known to the paddock as "Dad." He was in quest of a car—most any kind he could obtain—to pilot in the big race. He met with little or no success. His previous experience consisted of being mechanic for Frank Elliott, since retired, during which time he had a short ride on a board speedway and an even shorter ride as a relief pilot at Indianapolis.

But his demeanor neither on nor off the track had caught the attention of the stern-nerved men who choose unknown drivers for even the unimportant mounts in the international classic.

Unable to obtain the drivership of one of the cars entered, Meyer cast about for a car already entered which might be purchased. He found one. It was a mount in the two-car team captained by Phil Shafer and financed by a spark plug company. Shafer was willing to sell. Meyer was able to capture an angel who hocked a garage in Ohio to get the cash to make the purchase. So Meyer qualified the car at 111 miles an hour, quite a feat the racing wiseacres declared, and started the race.

He was no place at twenty-five miles; ninth at fifty; eighth at 100, back in ninth position at 150; fourth at 200; fifth at 250; second at 300; third at 350; third at 400; third at 450, but in the last fifty miles when Tony Gulotta and Jimmy Gleason, who were one and two, were forced out of the race, Meyer, the boy who merely hoped for a money place among the first ten, found himself in the enviable position of front runner.

Accepting the checkered flag of victory, he rolled into the uproar of an enthusiastic applause with a modesty that will ever make him popular. "I didn't even know I had won," he explained, "I thought the checkered flag was a mistake, but I am happy to take it seriously." It meant approximately $40,000 to the entry.

mile marker, the New Yorkers boasted a half-length, which they increased to a length and a half at the mile mark. Stroked by the veteran Al MacBain, the Columbians quickened the pace and the last quarter mile saw a three full lengths of water between their stern and Princeton's bow.

A strong breeze was blowing against the crews, making the times slow and providing conditions perfectly suited to the Columbians, accustomed as they are to the wind-kicked waters of the Hudson.

The victory gave Columbia continued possession of the Childs Cup, won here last year and ranked as one of the most decisive ever registered in this fifty-year-old triangular regatta fixture. None of the Columbia crews has yet been beaten.

The official times:

Varsity, 1¾ miles—Columbia, 10:46; Princeton, 11:02 3-5; Pennsylvania, 11:34.

Junior varsity, 1¾ miles—Columbia, 10:53; Princeton, 11:06; Pennsylvania, 11:20.

Freshman, 1¾ miles—Columbia, 10:43; Princeton, 10:53 2-5; Pennsylvania, 11:25.

Lightweight, 1 5-16 miles—Columbia, 8:32; Princeton, 8:58 1-5.

KANSAS WINS TRACK TILT FROM MISSOURI

LAWRENCE (Kan.) May 11. (AP)—Kansas and Missouri track men defied the weather today and battled on a wet track and soggy field in their twenty-seventh annual dual outdoor track meet. Kansas won, 70 1-2 to 60 1-2.

RABBIT PUNCHES
BY PAUL LOWRY

AN OLD BASEBALL ARGUMENT

THERE is a terrific agitation going on among the old-timers over the identity of one Gilligan, the Washington catch of 1887 who is tabbed by Franklin W. McCabe as Connie Mack, present-day manager of the Philadelphia Athletics.

Mr. McCabe has a score card of an '87 game between Washington and Detroit in which Gilligan caught the slants of Whitney. McCabe has a ring around the name of Gilligan and a notation on the side that this is Connie Mack.

Now comes Joe S. Jackson of 201 South Benton Way to confound Mr. McCabe. He writes that "there never was but one National League catcher named Gilligan, that one being Barney Gilligan, who gained his fame as a battery mate of Charles Radbourn—for part of the season only—and Charles Sweeney, on the 1884 Providence club.

"That was the year Radbourn set records for games pitched, games won and consecutive victories. Sweeney jumped the club in midseason. He was a Californian from somewhere around San Francisco.

"Providence dropped out of the league in 1885, and Washington came in in 1886. That's how Gilligan got to Washington.

"The family name of the Athletics' manager is McGillicuddy—or was McGillicuddy, as I think he has had Mack legalized as his name. Mack was the only abbreviation ever used for him, so far as I have seen either in his playing or managerial days."

ABOUT DE WITT VAN COURT

MR. JACKSON is thoroughly vindicated by the extensive baseball scrap book in the possession of "Commodore" Jack Smith of the Midwick Country Club, who has suffered considerable annoyance at times by salesmen who address him care of the "Midwest Cemetery."

"Commodore" Smith considers this a distressing reflection not only upon himself but the exclusive club with which he is affiliated, and has been considering ways and means of taking redress.

The "Commodore" admits he's a pretty old buck but no candidate for a cemetery even if he has been keeping scrap books for over forty years.

And by one of his ancient diamond tomes the "Commodore" settles the Mack-Gilligan argument.

A full-length newspaper photo of "Con" Mack, who is set forth in type as the catcher of the Washington club, is the clinching argument.

This was in 1888—only forty-one years ago.

Perhaps the date will awaken the memory of De Witt Van Court, California's grand old man of boxing—not because of "Con" Mack but because of the old California State League, which was the forerunner of the Pacific Coast League.

Van at one time essayed to be an umpire when the teams in the California League were the Greenhood and Morans, the Haverlys, the Pioneers and the Stocktons.

In "Commodore" Smith's old book the following comes to light about Van:

"De Witt Van Court made a very favorable impression and if he only continues to discharge his duty as impartially the league will never regret signing him. He has an even road to travel. When he served in the capacity of umpire heretofore he was the recognized champion of the cause of Oakland (Greenhood and Moran.) The feeling has had ample time to wear off, and if he only will be governed by the rules in the future he will have a big success."

MEXICAN CHALLENGERS

IN DELVING into the record books for the Mexican names which have been borne into the ring by challengers for world titles the boys overlooked Georgie Rivers.

Baby Sal is not the first Mexican since the days of Joe Rivers who has had a crack at a championship of the ring.

Baby is undoubtedly the hardest hitting Mexican since the days of Joe Rivers and he has the best chance of winning a crown.

But he is not the first since Rivers. He is the second. Georgie Rivers, no relation to Joe, was the first.

Three years ago this coming July Fidel La Barba defended his flyweight title against Georgie Rivers in the Olympic ring.

And Georgie Rivers, a pretty fair hitter himself although not as heavy as Sal, floored La Barba in the very first round. But La Barba won the battle handily, scoring three knockdowns himself.

Sal says if he scores a knockdown on Morgan a week from Monday it will stick. The little Mexican's psychology is centered on a swift, sure attack in the early rounds.

Morgan is the better boxer of the two, and Baby Sal knows it. But Sal can hit three times as hard, and he is planning a battle to end matters quickly.

"Little Mexico" wants that junior lightweight title, and so does Sal.

THOSE LONG GOLF DRIVES

WHEN a gentleman in Oakland recently scored a hole in one on a 360-yard hole there was considerable uplifting of the eyebrows when the press reports forgot to mention a favorable wind—or gale.

It is quite generally accepted that the longest carry of a golf ball by our longest drivers—the limit carry in fact—is 240 yards. And such carries are so few and far between that a 360-yard drive without the aid of a wind or downhill terrain is ridiculous.

When Arthur Havers, the Briton poler, was out here a few years ago for his match with Gene Sarazen a driving contest was staged in which Havers's longest drive was 279 yards. Just one drive, mind you.

Frank Mellus once drove the 364-yard second green of the south course at the Los Angeles Country Club, but there was a whale of a wind at his back.

Craig Wood drove over the tenth green—310 yards from the tee—during the last Los Angeles open at Riviera, but the dog leg chops down the distance, and anyway Wood is one of the longest drivers in the country.

But a 360-yard drive for a hole-in-one without mention of favoring elements is a joke—nothing else.

PROMOTER PYLE HURT IN AUTO CRASH

ABILENE (Tex.) May 11. (AP)—C. C. Pyle, promoter of the transcontinental "bunion" race, suffered a broken arm in an automobile accident near here today.

Pyle, acting as advance agent for his cross-country runners, who come into this section soon, was en route to Albany, twenty-five miles from here. The taxicab in which he was riding, driven by an Abilene man, who escaped unhurt, crashed through an obstruction barring a "closed" road and overturned.

Pyle was brought to an Abilene hospital tonight, where it was said his condition was not serious.

HERBERT COBB SENT TO BREWERS ON TRIAL

ST. LOUIS, May 11. (AP)—Herbert Cobb, right-hand pitcher, has been sent to the Milwaukee Brewers on option, it was announced here tonight by Business Manager Friel of the Browns. Cobb came up this spring from Wichita Falls in the Texas League, where he won fourteen and lost seven games last year. His release cuts the Browns' pitching staff to nine.

VALLEJO WINS TRACKFEST

SANTA ROSA, May 11. (AP)—Vallejo, with forty points, won the northern section C.I.F. track meet here today. Other results were: Petaluma, 38; Tamalpais, 33; Napa, 15 1-2; Healdsburg, 15; Santa Rosa, 7; Sonoma, 3 1-2, Analy, 3; San Rafael, 0.

TOPPINO TIES MARK FOR CENTURY DASH

NEW ORLEANS, May 11. (AP)—A new record of 9 3-5s. was set in the 100-yard dash at the annual track-and-field senior championships of the Southern Association Amateur Athletic Union here today by E. Toppino of Loyola, New Orleans. It tied the world record. Toppino was backed by a mild wind and there was doubt whether the time would be recognized because only two of the stop watches registered the three-fifths fraction.

GLENNA COLLETT IN READINESS FOR PLAY

ST. ANDREWS (Scotland) May 11. (AP)—Glenna Collett, American women's golf champion, played her last practice round over the famous St. Andrews championship links today before the British women's title tournament begins on Monday.

Tomorrow she goes to Glen Eagles, but she will play no golf until she goes to the tee with Miss Marjorie White Monday morning for her first match in the tournament.

TY COBB, JR., VICTOR

PRINCETON (N. J.) May 11. (AP) Ty Cobb, Jr., son of the famous baseball player, and Ed Loughlin of Episcopal Academy survived the semifinal round of play in the Princeton interscholastic tennis tournament today. They will meet for the title on Monday. Cobb, representing Hill School, defeated Roll of Mercersburg, 6-2, 6-4, in the quarter finals and Stiner of Peddie, 6-3, 6-2, in the semifinals.

the southern meet two weeks ago, but yesterday he got out in front early, piled up a lead of five yards and held it with a fighting finish right up to the tape.

WELL EARNED

His victory was as well earned as that of his team—a victory lau that of his team—a victory which sees the two bif championships of the year, the Southern California and the State, go south for the first time in years.

And in the State San Diego's winning total was almost identically the same as in the southern, the difference being the merest fraction of a point.

Warburton's first in the 440 made a difference, but it was offset by Dower, who, winner of the mile in the southern, went unplaced yesterday and failed to finish.

Dower, mere kid in years, set a terrific pace of 61s. on the first lap and killed himself off. The whole field passed him up on the last lap, Baker of Huntington Park winning in a close finish with Roberts of El Monte, who was second to Dower in the southern. The time was 4m. 31 1-10s., not far away from the record of 4m. 30s.

Welch of Visalia staged a terrific sprint in the stretch of the 880 and won by five yards. Webster of Webb School was caught in the ruck and didn't get out soon enough to stick with the winner, although he was coming up rapidly and had plenty of reserve. Feore, Space and Obergfall were pretty much together. Welch won the event last year at Selma, and was third the year previous.

Willson won both the short sprints handily—a two-yard margin. He jumped the gun by a yard in the 100, but it didn't make any difference because he had more than that margin at the tape.

CONGER FAILS

Ray Conger missed in his assault on the 1000-yard mark by four seconds, the Illinois Athletic Club star finishing the exhibition event in 2m. 16 1-5s.

Tom Warne of Northwestern furnished the high spot of the meeting soaring 13ft. 6in. in the pole vault for a new Dyche Stadium record.

MOELLER STARS WITH PLATTER

Claims New Discus Record as Huskies Win Meet

SEATTLE (Wash.) May 11. (AP)—A little peeved because his first toss had been beaten, Ed Moeller of the University of Oregon took a strangle hold on a discus and heaved the platter to a possible new world's record of 160ft. 7-10in. in a dual track meet here which the University of Washington won from the Webfooters, 82 to 49, today. The recognized world's mark is 158ft. 1 3-4in., made in 1926 by Bud Houser of Southern California.

KRENZ OUT

Eric Krenz, Stanford weight man, has been credited with a heave of 163ft. 8 3-4in. this year, but the mark has not yet been officially recognized. It has been reported that the discus used by the Californian was slightly thinner than the standard platter.

Washington easily won the dual meet, capturing ten first places, nine and one-half second positions and three thirds. Oregon copped all the field events except the shot put for five firsts. The Webfooters gained four and one-half second places and ten thirds. Broadie of Washington and Crawford of Oregon tied for the second position in the high jump.

A surprise was the running of Steve Anderson, Olympic star, in the high hurdles. The husky athlete pulled a muscle in practice last Tuesday, but had little difficulty winning his pet event, "loafing" over the sticks in 15.5s. Anderson was ordered by Coach "Sec" Edmundson not to extend himself even if he had to lose.

The majority of the times for the track events were slow, due to a stiff breeze.

The Webfooters won the pole vault, high jump, broad jump, javelin and discus, while the Huskies copped the remainder of the events. The mile relay was forfeited to Washington.

PULLS MUSCLE

Tom Humes of Washington had been picked to win the broad jump, but the Husky ace pulled a muscle on his third leap and was forced out of further competition. His first jump of 21ft. 7 3-4in. took third place, while Bredhuaer of Oregon took the event with 22ft. 2 3-8in.

Robinson, a negro athlete of the Oregon institution, thrilled the fans when he cleared 13ft. in the pole vault. He attempted 13ft. 6in., but failed by an eyelash.

Washington garnered all three places in the two-mile when Rees, Cram and Sellers crossed the finish line in the order named ahead of the Oregon starters.

NAVY OARSMEN ANNEX RACE

5 o'clock, when the wind eased up. At that, the races were run partly on the sheltered upper course which is protected by the shore, through choppy water.

The Navy varsity scored its first victory of the season by negotiating the course in 7 1-2m., the revamped and rejuvenated crew keeping the beat of thirty-six set by Ed Crinkley, the new stroke, to cross the finish line far ahead of the Ithaca eight, making its first start of the season. The Navy oarsmen were never threatened after taking the lead at the start of the race, and gradually widened the distance between the two shells.

The Syracuse freshmen negotiated the distance in 7m. 51s., to beat the Plebes, while the Middie Jayvee crew led the Syracuse shell, completing the course in 7m. 44s.

ROUTIS SIGNS UP TO BOX ROGER BERNARD

CHICAGO, May 11. (AP)—Andre Routis, world's featherweight champion, today was signed to meet Rogert Bernard, Flint, Mich., in the main ten-round event at Olympia Arena, Detroit, Friday night. They will meet at 130 pounds and Routis's title will not be at stake.

Stanislaus Loayza, Chile, and Johnny O'Keefe, Columbus, O., were signed for a ten-round semi-wind-up at 138 pounds.

SOONERS TRIUMPH IN SLOPPY TRACK MEET

NORMAN (Okla.) May 11. (AP)—The University of Oklahoma and Oklahoma A. & B. trackmen, splashed through a downpour of almost cloudburst proportions today in their annual dual meet. The Sooners took the honors by a score of 82 1-2 to 43 1-2 with Tom Churchill high-point man with eleven tallies.

ENGLAND MASTERS POLAND NET SQUAD

WARSAW (Poland) May 11. (AP)—Winning the doubles match today, England eliminated Poland in a second-round Davis Cup tie, three matches to none. G. R. O. Crole-Reeves and H. G. Eames beat Stolarow and Loth, 6-1, 6-4.

MARTY FLYNN CLARK WINNER

Trims Smart Field in First Louisville Handicap

LOUISVILLE (Ky.) May 11. (AP)—The historical old race track at Churchill Downs echoed again to hoof beats as the fifty-fifth spring meeting opened here today and old Marty Flynn walked away with the opening-day feature, the $10,000 added Clark Handicap.

Marty, 4-year-old gelding by Sweep out of Rosa Lee, with C. Meyer astride, ran a fine race for his owner, Stuyvesant Peabody, leaving such seasoned contenders as Jock, Toro, Broadside, Easter Stockings of the Audley Farm stable, who was second, and R. E. Lechleiter's Cartago, third. The time for the mile and a sixteenth was 1:46 3-5. Jock, the favorite, finished fourth.

The winner was bumped in the getaway by his stable mate, Flat Iron, but the bump hindered the latter and not Marty Flynn. Flat Iron was pulled up and finished an eighth of a mile back.

In the secondary feature, the sixth race, which attracted almost as much attention as the Clark Handicap because of the field of derby eligibles, Clyde Van Dusen, Man O'War-Uncle's Lassie gelding owned by H. P. Gardner, showed the way. Port Harlem was second and Vermajo third.

HARVARD WILL COPY OXFORD

have begun at New Haven. Harvard is much more definitely committed to this idea. It is the fixed belief of President A. Lawrence Lowell that intercollegiate competition is the mainspring of athletic interest at college, but he is working for the diminution of the intercollegiate commitments of Harvard, nevertheless, and in time if the present trend is followed the Yale games will serve that purpose.

The house plan of Oxford and Cambridge universities in England, modified to suit the special requirements of Harvard, is the ideal in Harvard athletics now. Oxford and Cambridge each play many intramural contests, house against house within the university and the Oxford - Cambridge varsity matches are the high points of the athletic year with them.

William J. Bingham, athletic director at Harvard and a member of the faculty, has told me that Harvard is building up to that ideal.

At any rate, Harvard University, under President Lowell, certainly will accord less and less importance or significance to intercollegiate contests, except with Yale teams, until, eventually, the Harvard interhouse games in football, for instance, will outrank the games with Holy Cross, Dartmouth and other opponents. When these games have been informalized, if I may carpenter a word, to the full extent, these opponents may desire to devote their time and enthusiasm to other schools which do not deny them that formality which seems essential to varsity contests in all other schools but Harvard.

"That would be just fine."

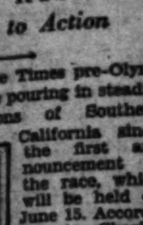
Fifty Harriers Expected to Enter Grind

Course Tentatively Picked for Big Event

Pre-Olympic Race Stirs Athletes to Action

Entries for The Times pre-Olympic marathon are pouring in steadily from all sections of Southern California since the first announcement of the race, which will be held on June 15. According to Charley Keppen, director of athletics at the Los Angeles Athletic Club and manager of the race, more than fifty harriers will face the starting gun on the day of the grind.



CHARLEY KEPPEN

Nearly every athletic club and sports organization in the Southland will be represented in the event. The Sherman Institute at Riverside at present has the largest number of entries in the race. Coach Jamison has five runners training for the grind and he expects to enter several more.

Henry Chauca, famous distance star from the Sherman Institute, who also competes for the Los Angeles Athletic Club, is one of the early favorites to cop the beautiful trophy which will go to the winner of the twenty-six-mile grind. Chauca was the first runner to file an entry blank for the event and he was awarded the coveted No. 1.

He was closely followed by Frank Smouse of the Los Angeles Athletic Club, an old walking star. Smouse has had a lot of experience in distance walking, having placed in the last Olympic tryouts. This may come in very handy in the long grueling grind here. The third entry in the race was R. A. Davis. These men were assigned numbers, by Keppen in the order that they entered.

The course of the marathon was tentatively selected by the committee composed of Dean Cromwell, chairman; Manager Charley Keppen and Zack Farmer and Kinter Hamilton.

The course selected at present will start the race from the City Hall and will lead down Spring street to Ninth, over Ninth to Main street, south to Washington Boulevard, west to National Boulevard, thence to Robertson, north to Pico, cutting from Pico over to Wilshire and then to Santa Monica, La Brea to Sunset, east on Sunset to Broadway tunnel and south on Broadway to The Times Building.

Entry blanks for the race can be obtained through Charles Keppen at the Los Angeles Athletic Club, or at the sports department of The Times.

Champ Plans to Hop-Skip in Two Divisions

Light Heavyweight Champion of the World

(Copyright, 1929, by the North American Newspaper Alliance)

PHILADELPHIA, May 11.—I am hopeful about the heavyweight situation. It seems that after my efforts to top the field, success is coming. Certainly, there isn't much left to be done among the 175-pounders. James J. Braddock and Tuffy Griffith are asking for a chance at me, and they deserve it. They'll get it, too, but they mustn't rush the mourners. Between defenses of my title, I am planning to keep busy among the heavyweights.

First, there is the Ernie Schaaf fight in Boston. Schaaf is one of the best of the younger heavyweights. He scales about 195 pounds and is a pretty smart performer. Then, there is Otto Von Porat, whom they want me to box in Chicago. Von Porat is a deadly slugger.

Best of all, though, is the possibility of a match with Jack Sharkey. I've wanted to get into the ring with him for several years. Sharkey has had plenty of big shots. He has fought Dempsey, Wills, Risko and Stribling. No man in the game has been more ballyhooed.

Though I've always believed Sharkey's style was made to order for me, I've never underestimated him. He is probably the best of the big fellows, for he has speed, boxing ability and fair hitting power. Besides, he has gained a lot of experience. It cannot be denied that should I meet Sharkey and beat him I will be on the top of the fistic world.

With the outdoor season right at hand, and offers to meet Sharkey, Schaaf, Von Porat, Braddock and Griffith already in hand, it looks as though I shall have the busiest summer of my life. Well, I'm getting ready for it.

CARDOZA IN MAIN OCEAN PARK BOUT

Joe Cardoza will mix in the main event at the Ocean Park Boxing Arena Wednesday evening with the negro battler, Oscar Rankin. Cardoza is well known to all Southland ring fans for his slam-bang tactics. He and Rankin will enter the ring at 158 pounds for the eight-round match. In the semi-wind-up, Vessel Whitehead, who is fast returning to his old form, is scheduled to box with Reggie Aguayo. Kenneth La Salle meets Johnny Mecell in the special spot. Two four-round preliminaries are also scheduled. Joe Candelaria goes against Frankie Brown at 135 pounds and Jerry La Rosa meets Bobby Quinn at 135 pounds.

NEW MARK SOUGHT BY ARNE BORG

Swimmer Goes After Record Today in Race at Lake Norco

BY OLIVE HATCH

Spirited attack upon another world's swimming record will be made by Arne Borg, Swedish champion, at 3 o'clock, at the Lake Norconian Club this afternoon.

ARNE BORG

Borg will travel to Norco by airplane, play an early morning game of golf, and finish the day by smashing Johnny Weissmuller's 500-meter world's record of 6m. 24 1-5s., according to Dr. W. A. Beazley, who stages the meet. Three Los Angeles Athletic Club men will pace Borg by relays, over the distance, keeping ahead of him in order to make him break the world mark by a larger margin.

Beazley, new sports director of the Norconian Institution, has lined up an aquatic meet that will include Olympic diving champions and a coterie of picked mermaids of the Southland.

Mickey Riley and "Dutch" Smith, national L.A.A.C. champions, will present their inimitable comedy diving act, if report runs true. This act is said to be the funniest water comedy ever presented to Pacific Coast A.A.U. fans. Georgia Coleman, girl Mercury star, will give an exhibition from the ten-foot springboard. Miss Coleman is the present national A.A.U. champion. Clarita Hunsberger of the Ambassador Swimming Club, and member of the 1928 Olympic team, will appear in a beautiful high-tower diving exhibition.

High divers galore, will appear in flight from the fifteen, twenty- and thirty-three-foot platforms at the pool, according to "Doc" Beazley. Among the many Southern California stars to appear in competitions will be Johnny [illegible], L.A.A.C.; Stanley Kistler, unattached; Marion Dale, unattached, and Winifred Hayson of the Lake Norconian Club.

Swimming events for a host of the Southland's best mermaid paddlers will include a 100-yard free style, and a 100-yard backstroke race. Katherine (Babe) Walker, Bunny Bellamy, Hilda Curtis and Ruby Harris, all unattached, are entered in both races.

A fifty-yard match race between Edna Hayson of the Lake Norconian Club, Marguerite Osborne and Louise Thompson of the Los Angeles Athletic Club, is also on the aquatic menu.

Those men who have been chosen to pace Arne Borg in his record attempt, include such Los Angeles Athletic Club stars as Herbert [illegible], "Ginger" Austin and [illegible] Halloran.

These conditions improved after sundown and then the varsity race was started, after two false starts. The wind had lightened and the basin was somewhat smoother. The Tech varsity made a perfect start, jumping into the lead. At the three-quarter-mile mark Tech was a quarter length in front and Cornell and Harvard were even. Cornell's slow and fast stroking jumped its shell into a lead of a length at the mile mark.

The Tech oarsman using a [illegible] stroke failed to make much of an impression on the rough water. The Crimson oarsmen used a long [illegible] stroke which also appeared ineffective. In the last half-mile stretch Cornell had the race well in hand.

COMSTOCK DISCUSSES MARATHON

Noted Track Coach Claims Average Individual Can Prepare Himself for Gruelling Test by Strict Observance of Few Common-Sense Rules in Training

BY BOYD COMSTOCK
Former Yale and L.A.A.C. Track and Field Coach

The average citizen is apt to feel that distance running is a most strenuous type of exercise. Asked for an opinion he is quite liable to condemn any event that calls for distances beyond the ten or fifteen-miles. These reactions are quite in order, in my opinion, but need not be taken too seriously.

BOYD COMSTOCK

Any average individual can prepare himself for any gruelling test of strength or endurance by observing a few common-sense rules. Obviously the candidate must be physically fit and free from organic weaknesses. He must observe some reasonable rules of diet, work and rest. He must build up a reservoir of leg and lung strength by gradually working up to the degree of efficiency that is desired. The amount of care that must be exercised depends, naturally, upon the ability of the candidate.

I have observed, with more than an average amount of interest, the performances that have been turned in by various types of runners under varying conditions. I have seen so many exceptions to the rule that I have sometimes wondered if a rule really was in existence and at such times I have had serious doubts as to the value of precedent.

Last year I approached the subject with a definite purpose in mind because I believed that long-distance and marathon racing would soon be the order of the day. In the promotion of the Palos Verdes Estates marathon last summer, which was put on as a try-out for the local Olympic affair I had a real chance to check some of the ideas I had picked up and I might add that some of the results were rather surprising.

AGES VARY

The age of our entrants, for instance, ranged from 15 to 50. A few had had some experience although most of them might have been classified as novice performers. So far as I could see they had entered because they enjoyed doing that sort of thing.

The only competitor in that group that apparently suffered temporary ill effects had trained faithfully for several years and was perfectly accustomed to events ranging from the mile to the marathon. This runner showed signs of distress before the race was a third completed. His trouble was probably due to overtraining.

One entry—and to my way of thinking, a favorite—ran extremely well for half the distance and gave up the struggle by reason of foot trouble. He was in excellent condition, otherwise, in so far as his wind and all-round strength was concerned although he had entered practically without any preliminary training that season. His condition proved that he could have finished the full distance but for the ill effects although he and several of the faster contestants ran the first six miles in time that exceeded the record that had been made a short time before in the straight six-mile event.

The youngest entry in the lot finished the full distance without any great trouble. He did so because he used good judgment in maintaining a reasonable gait. The oldest competitor finished in splendid shape also and the closest scrutiny revealed no sign of even minor distress. The Indian entries appeared to be on a par with the other contestants although some of them had put in considerable more running that season.

Summing it all up it seemed to me that those having average long-distance ability were quite able to negotiate the distance in spite of excessive training. The adding of miles to a long-distance event does not materially affect the runners. In other words, a real marathon man will hold up as well over the full distance as he will over a modified course. When a runner, with reasonable training, falters physically—eliminating the temporary hazards of foot trouble, pulled muscles and other difficulties—it means that he is unfitted for such an event. Some of us are sprinters—some do well at the quarter and so on up the scale of distances and no amount of attention or desire will change these natural traits.

STRAIN ON ATHLETES

Running long distances over hard pavements or unyielding surfaces throws a tremendous strain on the soles of the feet and on the muscular and bone structure of the feet and great care should be taken to safeguard this part of the body. Running on various conditions of heat and cold and over varying kinds of roads should reveal any weakness in this respect.

Excessive sun-heat may also be the hazard and it is always well to take some precautions against this phase. The matter of eating or drinking is also a personal matter and experiments should develop some procedure that will be foolproof.

Generally speaking, any event of this kind calls for a rhythmic action and an easy mental attitude toward the task in hand. Overstriding or understriding and varying the pace without good reason is bound, in most instances, to cause an undue consumption of energy. The best performers have developed these points to a degree that has made their progress one of machine-like efficiency and it follows that some attention to this scheme will produce results.

Our early American history is filled with incidents that prove that our marathon distance is, by comparison, a warm-up distance. Considered in this light, the distance becomes a disagreeable chore only when the individual is not fitted for the task or when he has not properly prepared himself for the job.

Caltech Wins Swim Affair

REDLANDS, May 11.—The big pool at the University of Redlands gymnasium was stirred up all day today with two meets as a part of the high-school day program. Caltech defeated Redlands in a practice conference meet in preparation for the conference meet here next Saturday and San Bernardino ran away with the first annual Citrus Belt League meet.

San Bernardino took all but one first place in the league. Jimmy Ellis, of the University of Redlands and Long Beach clipped fifteen seconds from the conference mark in of the 440 swim and it is likely he will set a new mark next week. Redlands swimmers played in tough luck for in the 100 Ellis was far in the lead when he shipped a tank full of water, strangled and had to quit. Also Kuehne got tangled up with another man at the turn in the backstroke when he had a good lead.

The first Citrus Belt League meet was interesting despite the fact that San Bernardino ran away with it. The results were as follows:

50-yard—Stephens (S.B.,) Geib (Riv.,) Charles (P.O.,) Ryan (S.B.) Time, 27.4. 220-yard—Walton (S.B.,) Martin (Riv.,) Eddinger (P.O.,) and Fleming (Redlands.) Rustic Canyon Field Scene of "Horseplay"

Will Rogers, Jr., to Captain Picked Quartet

Polo's spotlight today will be shot on the contest at the Rustic Canyon Field, Santa Monica, between the Uplifters, led by Hal Roach, and the Rough Riders, captained by Will Rogers, Jr. Today's game, which is the fifth on the Uplifters' summer program, is expected to be one of the most exciting staged on the Rustic Canyon Field. The Rough Riders with their young leader, Rogers, surrounded by three veteran horsemen, Snowy Baker, Lyel Puckett and Frank Dazy, expect to register the first defeat of the season against the Uplifters' name.

WILL ROGERS.

Young Rogers was elected captain by his team-mates for today's game because of his fine work in competition this season. His veteran team-mates claim a little responsibility will make young Will do great things in polo in the near future.

Hal Roach is expected to be the big gun of the Uplifters' attack. Roach, a three-goal star, is hailed as one of the coming stars of the Coast. Last winter he played with the Midwick Big Four. He took Carleton Burke's place and made an excellent job of it. Roach played with Midwick in the Pacific Coast high-goal championships at Del Monte, where the Purple riders advanced to the final round, only losing to Tommy Hitchcock's team.

Roach will have Clair Brunson, Scott Hackley and Georges Musaphia riding with him today.

The Uplifters are preparing for some real hot competition before the season schedule is completed. Eric Pedley, the Coast's greatest star, will lead a Riverside four into action next Sunday against the Uplifters. The Midwick twelve-goal team captained by Teddy Miller, which has been nominated to play in the circuit cup play at Chicago next month, will appear at the Rustic Canyon Field before they ship to the East.

Today's contest will get under way at 2:30. The field is located in the Rustic Canyon right off Beverly Boulevard.

The line-ups:

Uplifters.		Rough-Riders.
Musaphia	No. 1	Rogers
Roach	No. 2	Puckett
Brunson	No. 3	Baker
Hackley	Back	Dazy

Solution No. 98: R-Q5.

Solvers' list: Elmer L. Ferguson, Walter Morris, Charles Broughton, F. Whitestone, Arthur L. MacKaye, D. Mellinkoff, Walter L. Koethen, J. P. Walsh, B. F. McDonald, R. E. Powers, Alfred C. Wright, W. B. Tudor, J. H. Quinton, R. F. Troxler, H. W. Isham, C. F. King.

Elmer Ferguson, who sends solutions regularly clear from Sioux City, Iowa, writes of the passing of his father, George W. Ferguson, a former Iowa champion, from whom he learned the chess moves before his A, B, C's.

The championship of London, Eng., has been won by Sir George Thomas for the steenth time.

The Chicago championship tourney was won by L. J. Isaacs, 7-2, with Sam Factor, former champion, second, 6½-2½.

The first international team problem solving match ever organized was held recently between Sweden and Belgium, the former winning. They then arranged a match between Great Britain and Germany.

A Hart Memorial Tourney will be started soon at the local club in memory of the late Woodford B. Hart.

Hugh Wilton, well-known local contractor, pulled some of his "high finance" in a local club minor tourney game last week with Willis Lamb, getting a draw after letting an easy win slip by. The draw broke young Lamb's clean string of wins, but he still leads, 5½-½, and looks like a certain winner of the tourney. Other results last week: Sawyer, 0; Victor, 1; Matthay, 0; Gross, 1.

The world's champion, Dr. Alexander Alekhine of Paris, France, created a profoundly fine impression at his simultaneous display Tuesday night at the Los Angeles Athletic Club, the spacious gymnasium being none too large for the crowd, the largest chess gathering in local history. Many were disappointed in being unable to play, the opposition being limited to fifty picked experts, mostly local talent. The writer acted as master of ceremonies. After the introduction of local champions, and flashes by a news photographer, play was started a little before 8:30 and concluded a little after 3 o'clock in the morning. Nearly seven hours grind by the peripatetic performer without any recess, coupled with the rapidity with which he moved from board to board, proved a marvelous display of mental agility as well as physical endurance, providing a spectacle which only a chess fan can appreciate. The champion's "chess-ty" physical make-up is not that of the popular conception of a chess player.

The final score was 39 wins, 5 losses and 6 draws. The first to win from the champion was Willis Lamb, Jr., local high-school expert. The other winners were: Dr. R. B. Griffith of Los Angeles, former University of Pennsylvania champion; Dr. M. Scholtz, local top-notcher; Prof. H. Bateman of the California Institute of Technology at Pasadena, and E. P. Elliott, prominent realtor of Fullerton. Draws were obtained by D. H. Holt of Whittier, Alfred C. Wright of Claremont; George Patterson of Hollywood, county champion; Harry Borochow, former city champion; F. W. Matthay, and E. W. Brabill, two other strong local players. Miss LaVieve Hines of Pasadena was the only woman contestant. Alekhine had been told of this young lady's prowess and the champion's frequent hesitation at her board indicated that he respected same.

The champion's first win is shown below; his opponent, a former Chicago expert, is now one of the local club's strongest players. The knight sacrifice ending is entertaining.

Arthur Dake, 19-year old champion of Oregon, who came all the way from Portland to play one game with the world's champion Tuesday night, gave a simultaneous exhibition at the Pasadena Chess Club Monday night. Against fifteen opponents he won 12, and lost 3, to Prof. H. Bateman, Charles Broughton and A. V. Taylor.

Helen Wills Wins Match

THE HAGUE (Holland) May 11. (AP)—Miss Marjorie Morrill scored the first singles victory for the United States today in a women's team match with Holland, defeating Miss Rollin Couquerque, 4-6, 8-6, 7-5. Kea Bowman, ranked first in the Dutch women's standing, evened the count by disposing of Miss Edith Cross of San Francisco, 6-3, 6-1. Miss Cross and Miss Morrill put the Americans ahead by two matches to one, defeating Misses Couquerque and Canters, 3-6, 6-1, 6-2.

Miss Helen Wills, United States ranking woman tennis player, defeated Miss Canters, 6-3, 6-0, in an exhibition match.

Chess Turnout Breaks Record

A mammoth chess exhibition by world champion, Dr. Alexander Alekhine of Paris, France, at the Los Angeles Athletic Club last Tuesday night, attracted the largest chess gathering in local history. The champion's opposition was limited to fifty picked experts, mostly local talent. The last game was concluded a little after 3 o'clock in the morning, the final score being thirty-nine wins for the champion, five losses and six draws. The first win against Alekhine was scored by Willis Lamb, Jr., local high-school expert, who played supremely well after an early disadvantage. The other winners were Dr. R. B. Griffith and Dr. M. Scholtz of Los Angeles; Prof. H. Bateman of Pasadena and E. P. Elliott of Fullerton. Draws were obtained by D. G. Holt of Whittier, Alfred C. Wright of Claremont, George Patterson, Harry Borochow, F. W. Matthey and E. W. Grabill of Los Angeles.

DR. ALEXANDER ALEKHIN.

The long grind by the peripatetic performer, nearly seven hours without any recess, coupled with the rapidity with which he moved from board to board, proved a marvelous display of mental agility as well as physical endurance, providing a spectacle which only a chess fan can thoroughly appreciate. The champion has a decided "Ches-ty" appearance, his physical make-up being more that of a heavyweight boxer or football goliath than the popular conception of a chess player.

Alekhine is a guest of the Los Angeles Athletic Club during his stay here. He leaves tonight for San Francisco to give an exhibition Saturday night at the Mechanics' Institute Club. He returns next week to complete negotiations for exhibitions at Mexico City. He is in this country mainly to attend a masters' tourney at Bradley Beach, N. J., next month. He must return to Europe by September to start his $10,000 title match with E. D. Boguljubow of Germany. If he retains his title he will play a promised return match with Capablanca next year.

ANGELS NOSE OUT DUCKS

Tolson's Homer With One on in Ninth Pulls Game Out of First for Slugging Seraphs, 7-6

Knight and connected for his winning home run out into the right-field bleachers.

That homer was Tolson's eleventh of the season and further intrenched him in his position as home-run king of the Coast League.

By winning yesterday's clash the Angels made it four straight over the Ducks and four out of five to cinch the series. Today's double-header winds up the week's program and Krug is going to pitch Boehler and Walsh in an effort to hand the Ducks a double-trimming. Ciscarella and either Beck or Ortman will probably do the flipping for the visitors.

To return to yesterday's struggle, Jack Knight staggered the route on the mound for Portland, but Marty Krug had to use Red Roberts, Carl Holling and Wilbert Peters in the box before the afternoon's activities ended. Peters was credited with the victory, his third of the season without a defeat, but was touched for what looked as though it would be the Ducks' winning run in the ninth, the long inning he worked.

SCHULMERICH HOMES

Wes Schulmerich, the Seraph strong man, got into the contest as a pinch-hitter for Holling in the eighth and tied up the score by clouting a home run over the right-field screen. Charley Bates, the Portland backstop, also hit for the circuit, his four-base clout clearing the left-field wall in the fourth inning, tying the score for the second time during the game.

The Angels jumped into the lead at the start when Webb beat out an infield hit between Knight and Hillis, took second on a wild pitch, beat Westling's throw to third on Berger's grounder to the Duck shortstop, and scored when Tolson forced Berger.

Portland almost scored in the second, but a lucky break pulled the Angels out of a tough spot without a run coming across. With Borrelli and Cronin on second and third and two out, Knight smashed a hot grounder down the third-base line that looked labeled for two bases. However, the ball struck the third-base cushion and hopped up in front of Bobby Jones, who picked up the ball and snapped a quick throw to Tolson that got Knight at first for the third out.

Roberts was nicked for a run in the third when Staley walked, took second on Hillis's infield out and scored on Jahn's single to right. And then the athletes started tying and untying the score until it looked as though the struggle would need some Houdini to untangle it. Later events proved that Tolson was the Houdini, but let's go on with the story.

The Angels again took the lead in their half of the third when Statz tripled down the right-field line and scored when Berger hit into a double play after Webb had walked.

BATES HITS HOMER

Portland tied it up again in the fourth when Bates leaned on one of Roberts's fast ones and belted it over the left-field fence. There were two out at the time.

However, the Angels, not to be outdone in the scoring scramble, went out in front again in their half of the fourth by rapping Knight for two more tallies. Jones's infield hit, Hannah's double, walks to Dittmar and Roberts and Statz's sacrifice fly did the damage to the Portland hurler.

Roberts yielded another Duck run in the fifth when Staley doubled to left, took second on an out and scored when Tolson took Jahn's bounder and threw low to the plate. Jahn went to second on the error but died on the paths when Dittmar threw out Borrelli and Roberts whiffed Cronin.

The Ducks knocked Roberts to the showers in the sixth when they shoved over a run to once more knot the count. The Angel Redhead fanned Westling to start the inning, but Bates followed with a single and Knight clouted a double to left. Holling then came on the scene and Frey greeted him with a sacrifice fly to Berger that brought Bates home.

The Angels filled the bases with one out in the seventh, but Knight prevented any scoring. The boys in the press box got out the hammers for Krug when he sent Warren in to bat for Butler instead of using Schulmerich, who is a more dangerous and more experienced clubber. Anyhow, Warren forced a man at the plate and then Hannah forced Warren at second to kill off the rally.

PORTLAND TAKES LEAD

Cronin tripled to center to start the Portland eighth and Westling walked. Bates hit into a sparkling double play, Dittmar to Jacobs to Tolson, and Cronin was held at third. It looked as though Holling was out of the jam, but Knight then doubled to right and Cronin counted.

Schulmerich, batting for Holling, homed over the right-field screen in the Angel half of the eighth to once more tie the score. And the boys in the press box just couldn't keep from thinking what would have happened had Schulmerich batted for Butler in place of Warren when the bases were bulging in the inning previous.

Peters was pitching in the ninth and Hillis opened the round by slapping a single over Dittmar's head. Jahn bunted Hillis to second, but Borrelli popped out to Dittmar. Cronin then shot one to left for one base and Hillis started racing Berger's throw to the plate. It looked as though Berger's throw would nip Hillis, but for some unknown reason, Peters cut it off and threw to Jacobs to retire Cronin at second. But Hillis scored on the play and the Ducks were once more leading.

However, the Portlanders' joy was short-lived, Berger and Tolson immediately doing their stuff to send the customers home talking to themselves. The score:

INDIAN WINS TRACK TILT; CHICAGO SECOND

CHICAGO, May 11. (AP)—Placing heavily in the dashes and field events, Indiana defeated Chicago and Purdue in a triangular track-and-field meet today. Indiana scored 73 1-2 points. Chicago was second with 67 1-4 and Purdue finished last with 24 1-4.

A LARGE and powerful gent has come back to the major leagues after a year's absence, and now holds down the job of guarding the initial sack for the Pittsburgh Pirates, whereas he used to play the same bag for the Chicago White Sox. A lucky break for him, you'll probably agree, for the team from Smokeville has a chance to get into the world's series, whereas the Pale Hose have about as much chance of playing in the autumn classic as Wilbert Robinson has of being appointed President Hoover's valet.

Sheely is the gentleman's name—Earl Homer Sheely, of Bushnell, Ill. Born on Lincoln's birthday, 1895, right-handed any way you take him, and as heavy as Jack Dempsey is now and much taller. It was not until 1921 that Earl Sheely got himself a job in the majors, although he had played around in the Pacific Northwest and for Salt Lake ever since 1912. The White Sox signed him on the strength of his .371 batting average, made in the rarified atmosphere of Salt Lake in 1920. But unlike Paul Strand, famous hero from the Mormon city who was a flop with the Athletics, Sheely continued to bat .300 or better for several seasons in Chicago's South Side park.

While never rated as a great batter, Sheely occasionally lives up to his middle name and puts over a homer on some rival pitcher. But it is as a "human bull's-eye" that he really shines at first. His great size, reach and agility make him almost impossible to miss, and the Pirate infielders will not make many wild throws this season with the big blond on first base.

MISSIONS COP ELEVEN INNING CONTEST, 14-11

SACRAMENTO, May 11. (AP)—The Missions registered their fifth straight victory over the Sacramento Senators here today, but it took them eleven innings to do it. The score was 14 to 11. Six pitchers were used in the slugfest in which the lead swung several times to a final Red win. Home runs by Backer, Baldwin and Camilli featured. Tony Freitas, rookie southpaw, threw the game away in the final inning when he fielded a bunt and threw it over Backer's head, two runners scoring. Score:

Indian Rally in Ninth Stopped by Shores and Athletics Capture Wild Game by 4-2 Score

CLEVELAND, May 11. (AP)—Although they batted Grove from the box in the ninth after he had held them to three hits in seven innings, the Indians dropped the second game of the series to Philadelphia here today, 4 to 2.

LEFTY GROVE

The Indians filled the bases in the ninth with no one out, but were able to score only one run when Bill Shores who relieved Grove, proved too tough. Bing Miller hit a home run in the eighth but no one was on base.

The contest was interrupted by pop bottles thrown at the end of the eighth inning when Lew Fonseca was called out. Umpire Emmett Ormsby at third base was hit on the head and rendered unconscious. Police rushed on the field but were unable to quiet the demonstrators. Finally Manager Billy Evans appeared and after a time succeeded in restoring order. Ormsby was taken from the field and ground keepers and players soon cleared it of empty pop bottles and the game proceeded.

SALONS ON TOP

CHICAGO, May 11. (AP)—The Senators thumped Tommy Thomas for five runs in the first inning today and then coasted to a seven-inning 9-to-2 victory over the White Sox. The battle was halted by a cloudburst.

Thomas was removed after five innings, ending a record in which he finished twenty-five consecutive games in which he started.

The Washington crew was in the midst of another rally, Jones having singled and Judge tripled when the battle was called.

The score reverted back to the seventh inning.

ILLINOIS TRIUMPHS OVER IOWA ON TRACK

YANKEES LOSE TO BENGALS

Detroit Stops Winning Streak of Champions by Copping 13-7 Clash

DETROIT, May 11. (AP)—The Yankee winning streak, which had reached eight games, ended in a loud explosion here today when the Tigers won, 13 to 7, but rivals of the champions can take little comfort from the news that the Yankees rolled up sixteen hits just by way of keeping their hands in. The Tigers mauled Rhodes, Zachary, Thomas and Sherid for twenty-one hits, including a home run by Alexander.

DALE ALEXANDER

Owen Carroll started for Detroit, but the Yankees knocked him out in the first inning. George Smith was good in the pinches even though hit hard and got credit for the victory.

Alexander got the only home run of the day, but Ruth quit the game after the fifth inning. He had one hit and two passes for a perfect day at bat.

A crowd of 35,000 saw the game and an even larger turnout is expected tomorrow for the final clash of the series.

KRUGMEN TAKE ON SEALS NEXT

Local Sluggers Up Against Strong Mound Corps

Fred Haney to Join Angels for Coming Series

Vittmen Will Try and Stop Rush of Missions

BY BOB RAY

Marty Krug's slugging Seraphs will get an opportunity to try out their willow-work on some of the best pitching in the league next week when Nick Williams's Seals arrive here Tuesday to open a seven-game series with the Los Angeles outfit.

NICK WILLIAMS

The Seal staff, composed of the veterans Elmer Jacobs, Hollis Thurston, Walter Mails and Johnny Couch, and the youngsters Vernon Gomes and Val Glynn, ranks as about the strongest in the circuit, so the slugging Seraphs will get a chance to show just how tough they really are. The series ought to be an interesting one if only for the duel between the Seal slabsters and the Cherub clouters, but it also figures to provide the fans with a lot of exciting baseball in other respects.

Fred Haney, the infielder purchased from the St. Louis Cards, probably will be among those present next week and it will be interesting to see just how much the former Poly High athlete strengthens the Angel contingent. Haney is considerable of a clouter himself, turning in a .334 batting average with Indianapolis last season, but it is his fielding that is expected to help the Cherubs most. Krug will probably use Haney at second base, which has been the hoodoo spot for the Angels so far this season.

Last season the Angels proved setups for the Seals, who managed to humble the House of Krug in twenty of the twenty-four games between the two clubs. Krug, however, says this is another year and that his clouters will get some revenge for all the beatings they took at the hands of the Seals last season. The Seals are not the outfit they were in 1928, while the Angels are considerably improved, so Marty's prediction ought to come true.

The Hollywood Stars, who are having a terrible time scoring runs up at Oakland this week and consequently not winning ball games the way they'd like to, move over to San Francisco Tuesday for what looks like another tough week. "Red" Killefer's league-leading Mission Reds, who are making a runaway affair of the race, will furnish the opposition for the Stars, which is the reason for the gloomy outlook.

Elias Funk, the outfielder purchased from the Yanks, is scheduled to join the Sheiks for the Mission series and maybe his presence in the batting line-up will help the Hollywooders get a few more runs.

The other series opening next week bring together the Oaks and Solons at Sacramento and the Ducks and Indians at Seattle. The Portland-Seattle series will not get under way until Wednesday because of the long jump the Ducks have to make from Los Angeles.

Angel Rookie Setting Fast Pace for Bees

Second base may be creating a problem for Marty Krug these days, but the Angel skipper believes his club has a youngster farmed out in the Arizona State League who will fill that position quite capably next season. The youngster is Art Parker, a Bellingham (Wash.) rookie who is playing a brilliant brand of ball for Bisbee, the Angel farm. Parker is batting at a .428 clip, which ranks him second in the Arizona League averages, and has performed so far without an error at second base in sixteen games. Parker, a left-handed hitter, will be 20 years of age next December, so it looks as though the Seraphs have picked up a real find.

SAN FRANCISCO WINS OVER SEATTLE CLUB

SAN FRANCISCO, May 11. The Seals reached Pipgras for three runs in the second and continued to make baseball "whoopee" in the fifth, sixth and seventh. Coleman and Wingo, Seal outfielders, each hit homers. Score:

LA VERNE WINS BALL GAME FROM REDLANDS

REDLANDS, May 11.—The hard-hitting and demon fielding of the La Verne ball team was too much for Redlands today and the visitors won, 9 to 4. They made six runs in the third, knocked Toombs out of the box and gave Niedemyer a warm reception. After this inning the chunky fielder who took up the pitching made the going hard for La Verne.

There was all kinds of hard hitting by the visitors, flocks of doubles, triples and even home runs.

MAT GIANTS IN GRUDGE SOIREE

Daviscourt and Lewis Long Enemies of the Ring

Dick Daviscourt, the man-mauling 220-pound mat cyclone from Kansas, is being conceded an even chance to beat Ed "Strangler" Lewis, three-times world's mat champion, when they clash at the Olympic Wednesday night in the finish feature event of "Carnation" Lou Daro's mat show.

LOU DARO.

The Kansan rates this break on the strength of his showing in his last two battles with Lewis. The first of these ended in a draw, while the second ended in a fist fight and was ruled "no contest."

The latter match was held in Wichita, Kan., more than four years ago, and it marked the last meeting between these two stars, rated as the two most devastating headcrushers known to the mat game.

Kneeing, hair-pulling, eye-gouging, elbowing, strangling and ear-twisting had all been resorted to by this pair of grapplers before they began slugging in that Kansas bout. It was then that the referee stopped the match and ordered both men from the ring.

Up to the time of the referee's action, Daviscourt was reported to have had the better of the argument. Lewis had begun running for the ropes for protection when the battle was stopped.

TOUGH BABY

All of Daviscourt's matches here have been rough and spectacular, but his coming battle with Lewis is expected to top them all. There is more rivalry and hatred between Lewis and Daviscourt than there ever has been between Lewis and Stecher. Keen rivalry for the leadership of the mat division has made the meetings between these latter two of national importance to the sport world. The differences between Lewis and Daviscourt are of a more personal nature.

Lewis claims that Daviscourt not only copied his pet hold but also his style of wrestling and has made a big name for himself in the mat game.

The "Strangler" also states that Daviscourt has had himself billed many times as the greatest exponent of the headlock in the game and that Lewis was afraid to wrestle him. In addition, and what Lewis believes to be the crowning insult of all, is Daviscourt's claim that he has the more punishing headlock of the two.

ANOTHER ROUGH ONE

The special event may give the feature go a run for the evening's spotlight as far as action is concerned. Nick Lutze and "Wild Bill" Beth, whose battle here last month was both rough and colorful, will clash again. Beth is in better condition than he was for his first meeting with Lutze. He is in near perfect condition and believes he can beat Lutze by outroughing him. He almost succeeded in putting the Chicago mat star away with those tactics in their first match.

Lutze, who has been training at Venice ever since his arrival on the Coast, expects to land into the feature event class again here in the very near future. Beth may prove a greater stumbling block than he anticipated, and Promoter Daro is reported to have offered the tough lumberjack a match with either Lewis or Daviscourt if he beat Lutze. The bout Wednesday night will be for one fall to a finish.

Don De Laun, the Long Beach grappler, will face John Hunnel, Beth's opponent of two weeks ago, in the opening event of the card.

HOOD TO TAKE ON KAISER THURSDAY

Ernie Hood, Pasadena flyweight who is doing a great comeback and may yet land that title Crown City fans expect of him, will run into a lot of opposition Thursday night in his home-town ring. For he is to face Charlie Kaiser, called by sport writers the cleverest boy developed at Hollywood in months.

Bad News Johnson, often a main eventer at the Arena, will appear in the six-round semifinal against Bull Anderson. Sailor Larry, an old favorite now going great again, will be seen in the four-round special event against Al Andrews.

Four-round preliminaries will be: Dick Chang vs. Johnny Gabuco, 114 pounds; Matt Codan vs. Howdy Fritz, 140 pounds.

LUGO AND KING TOP SAN BERNARDINO BILL

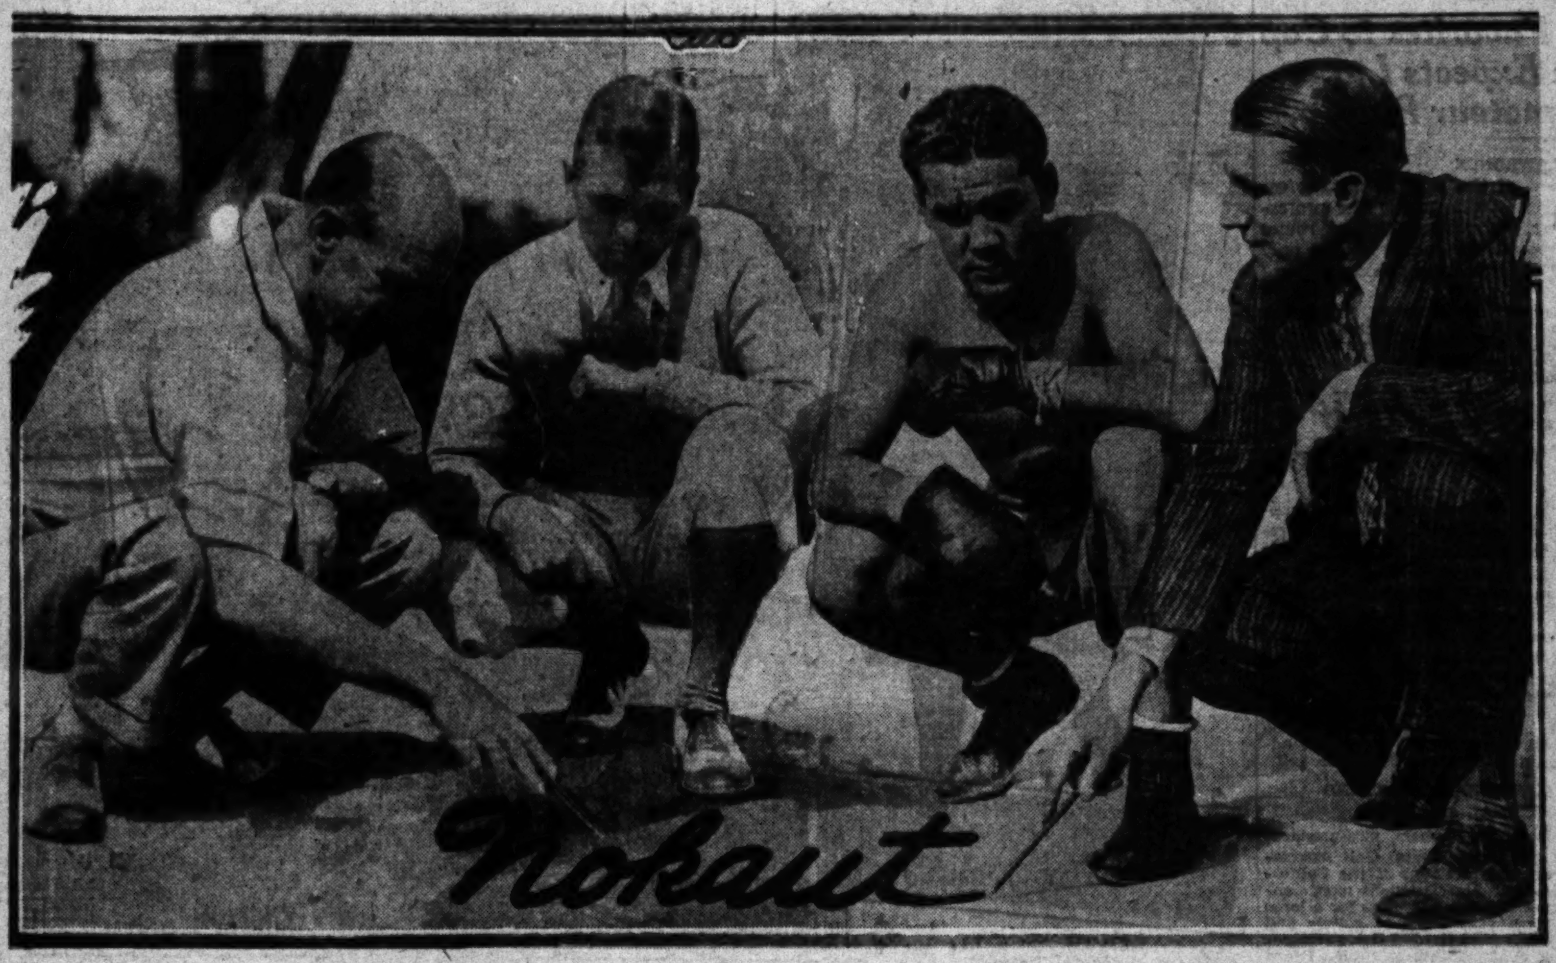
Raymond Lugo and Trench King headline the Orange Belt athletic program next Thursday night in a ten-round bout. King has been working with Baby Sal Sorio for the latter's coming bout with Tod Morgan and reports say that the Sacramento veteran is in first-class shape.

Sammy Aguirre and Jack Stewart of St. Paul met in the eight-round semifinal.

Three other bouts are on Ben Steffler's program.

ONE MEXICAN WORD WHICH DOESN'T NEED AN INTERPRETER

They spell knockout a little differently in Mexican from what we do in English. But Frank Churchill and Tod Morgan (left) appear to understand what Baby Sal Sorio and Grafton Leabo (right) are using for correspondence. The pictures were made 100 miles apart, however. Morgan defends his junior lightweight championship against Sal at Wrigley Field May 20.



HARD PUNCHERS TO MIX

Roche Faces Tough Hitter in Wilson Yarbo at Olympic Auditorium Tuesday Night

Joe Roche isn't picking any spots. The Italian, who has stampeded through a flock of good middleweights recently, tackles the hardest hitter in the division Tuesday in the Olympic when he meets Wilson Yarbo.

It is the best sure-fire match put into Jack Doyle's arena in weeks. The fighters are built up on victories over Homer Sheridan and Bert Colima.

JOE ROCHE.

Roche spoiled the planned Sheridan-Colima fight by knocking out Sheridan. Yarbo spoiled the rest of the proposal by knocking Colima down a couple of times and winning the fight.

Fred Winsor deserves much of the credit in getting Roche back on a winning stride. The San Francisco Italian looked like a threat four years ago, when he beat Leo Lomski. It was just after Lomski had stopped Colima up in Seattle.

FINDS THE SPARK

The spark that Roche appeared to need Winsor has evidently supplied in copious quantities. In a rematch with Sheridan the San Franciscan again proved his superiority by outboxing him.

Since then Roche knocked out Wesley Ketchell a couple of times—once in Portland and a week ago at Hollywood.

Winsor performed a similar miracle in bringing Johnny McCoy, a seasoned fly and bantamweight, and paced him to the top of a tournament, which was held here to name Fidel La Barba's successor.

Roche will not stop now until he gets a crack at Mickey Walker, according to Winsor. If he can get by the fast ones that Yarbo deals out he will deserve it.

Yarbo has knocked down every fighter he ever faced, he claims. The Cleveland negro made claims like that before he met Colima and few believed him. Even Colima didn't take him seriously.

But Yarbo delivered just as he said he would. He knocked Colima down twice the same as he had done Walker back in Cleveland.

LIKES HIS KNOCKDOWNS

Yarbo doesn't seem to care so much about who wins as he does for scoring his knockdowns.

The Roche-Yarbo bout is backed up by a heavyweight semifinal between Dynamite Jackson and Tony Stabaneau. They are 200-pounders.

Jackson, whose real name is Ernest Bendy, looks like the best negro big man on the Coast. He handles fellows of the Neil Clisby and Seal Harris type in the gymnasium, it is claimed, with ease.

The best lessons in fighting Jackson ever had were when he served as a sparring partner for Tommy Loughran. He is a close student of boxing and can hit.

SPARR AND VARGAS TO MIX AT HARBOR

With several "big-money" fights already signed in the East this summer, Jack Sparr, who is just back after touring Australia, makes the first of several starts hereabouts on Wednesday night at Wilmington before his departure when he goes to the post against Joe Vargas, San Francisco welterweight. Vargas has fought some of the leaders of the 147-pound division on the Pacific Coast.

Jimmy Ryan, the sea-going welterweight, meets the youthful Aurelio Herrera, Mexican protege of Mick Grealis in the six-round semifinal.

Jimmy Valentine and Chocolate (Kid) Christmas, negro junior lightweight, clash in a six-round rematch. The fours show Tommy Huffman, Sailor Eddie's kid brother, battling Sig Eckland and George Brady facing Georgie Lavoie. The latter pair are feathers. Huffman and Eckland scale 148 pounds.

SOCCERITES STAGE CUP FINAL THIS AFTERNOON

The Southern California Cup final will be played today between Hollywood and L.A.A.C. at Loyola Field with the kickoff at 2:30.

This game may prove the most exciting fixture of the season as both teams are very confident of success, and fans may get all the thrills and sensations they require in an afternoon's sport.

It was only two weeks ago that the Mercuries handily trimmed the Magyars, and showed in that game that they can hold their own with the next. They have some very clever players on their line-up who are capable of playing brilliant soccer at times.

Manager Oscar Komna feels mighty sure of a victory, and feels confident in the ability of his boys to overcome the film men on this occasion. Last time these two teams met Hollywood trimmed them to the extent of 9 goals to 1, but Hollywood played superbrilliantly that day.

Hollywood did not play anything like their usual aggressive game last week against Magyars. They were too content to play a fancy kind of game and elaborate too much in midfield, and the consequence was that the Magyars almost captured the honors.

There is no doubt that they missed the services of Whittingham who took no part in the last seventy minutes of the game, and this man's absence for a long time appeared to unsteady the whole team.

He will probably be fit enough to start today but the film men are not taking any chances, and a capable substitute may be brought into the team if his ankle has not responded to treatment properly.

Capt. Ernie Coupland thinks they can, even if their team is not quite at full strength, overcome the Mercuries, and has probably in mind the fact that Hollywood seem always to pull out a little extra when up against a stiff proposition.

This game will ring down the curtain on the local soccer program so the fans will have only today's fixture to see until the game reopens in September.

Next week Hollywood will be battling out the final game of the all-California cup in San Francisco, where they are again up against a stiff proposition, which, if they overcome, will bring honor to Southern California for the first time in many years.

Legion Plans Sunday Races at Speedway

The western automobile-racing season will be brought to a close next Sunday, the 19th inst., at the American Legion Speedway, formerly Ascot Park.

This date will mark the final local appearance of the celebrated race drivers before leaving for the East to compete on the major speedways to participate in the national dirt-track championship contests.

With the most daring drivers pushing the throttles of the fastest dirt-track cars in the country, the speed program arranged by Post 127 of Glendale, promises to be the big feature automobile speed classic of the season. The five-eighths-mile dirt oval has been completely resurfaced for next Sunday's events and followers of the sport declare the track to be faster than ever before in the history of the plant.

JACKIE MANDELL MEETS HUMPHRIES NEXT FRIDAY

Jackie Mandell fights his first main event at the Hollywood American Legion stadium Friday night. His opponent will be Red Humphries. This pair have fought twice and each won a decision. This will be a ten-round fight. The others were six-round semi-wind-ups.

The two fights that Mandell and Humphries had at Hollywood stole the shows. Mandell has been coming very fast and for a year has been one of the outstanding boys in the preliminary ranks. Emmett Ledwith, Mandell's manager, claims that his boy was the victim of a "Moscow" decision at Pasadena last week and he has press clippings to back up his protest.

Another bout on the card that stood out at Hollywood two weeks ago is on the card this week. Joe Pimenthal flattened Herbert Turchi in the last round after Turchi had won five straight rounds. This fight will be the semi-wind-up.

Phil Harris and Omar Wright, welterweights, are in the special. The two four-rounders will feature heavyweights. Martin Louda meets Al Baffert in the second spot and Pat Hayward fights Frank Rudzenski in the curtain raiser.

JUNIOR GOLF LEAGUE

A "junior golf and sports association" is being organized for children between the ages of 7 and 16 years of the wealthy residents in the exclusive North Shore district of Long Island. There will be a nine-hole golf course, an outdoor swimming pool, tennis courts, riding and playing fields for baseball and football, facilities for skating and other sports. Professional instructors will teach the children in the various sports.

HEDEMAN COPS LAP IN DERBY

No Change in Positions of Two Leaders

FORT WORTH (Tex.) May 11. (AP)—Herbert Hedeman, New York, the oldest man in C. C. Pyle's transcontinental derby, won the forty-second lap today running the thirty-two miles from Dallas to Fort Worth in 4:20:40. He showed the same form as in the early stages of the race when he led the jaunt through Maryland.

Sam Richman of New York was second, in 4:25:10, Phillip Granville, Hamilton, Ont., was third in 4:30:05 and Paul Simpson, Burlington, N. C., was fourth. Pete Gavuzzi, England, and John Salo, Passaic, N. J., tied for fifth place, and Giusto Umek, Italy, ran seventh.

All the runners checked in before 6 p.m., as the day's jaunt was short. Gavuzzi and Salo by running in the same time, did not change their official standing as leaders in total elapsed time, Gavuzzi retaining his lead of 1:29:45.

Oxy Defeats Pomona Nine

Coach Wilkie Clark's Occidental Tigers came through with their sixth consecutive conference win yesterday when they defeated the Pomona Sagehens, 11 to 2, in a ragged game played on the winner's diamond. The victory, which is the eleventh win of the Tigers over their ancient rivals, makes the conference pennant remain within the Tigers' lair for another year.

Glen Roselle proved the hitting star of the day, getting a double and two singles in three trips to the platter. Rosy scored four times, however, as he was walked on the fourth time at bat. "Slug" Nathan, Oxy second sacker, slugged out two singles to run his string of games in which he has hit safely to thirteen.

Al DeHoog, Tiger chucker, was very effective, allowing the Pomona batsmen but seven hits, and fanning fourteen. Score:

	R.	H.	E.
Pomona	7	7	[illegible]
Occidental	11	12	[illegible]

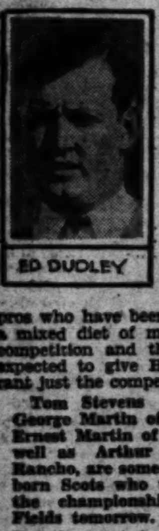
Southern California Professional Golfers' Championship Event Starts Tomorro

SUNSET FIELDS SCENE OF ANNUAL "PRO" TOURNEY

Dutra, Beer Reign Favorites to Cop Event; Lampham Expects Large Turnout for Amateur Play

BY EDWARD LAWRENCE

By far the most important event of the year in the Professional Golfers Association of Southern California is the professional championship which will start with the qualifying round tomorrow at Sunset Fields. This event is one which is open only to members of the association and it is, too, one which requires the utmost in competitive golf.



ED DUDLEY

Naturally those professional players with amateur experience are favorites to win. Willie I. Hunter, Jack Tarrant and the one or two others who have come to the forefront in golf competition through play as amateurs should have an edge on the going.

Most American professionals are interested only in medal play. However, there are in Southern California half a dozen Scotch pros who have been brought up on a mixed diet of medal and match competition and these players are expected to give Hunter and Tarrant just the competition they need.

Tom Stevens of California, George Martin of Virginia, and Ernest Martin of Spalding's, as well as Arthur Clarkson of Rancho, are some of the native-born Scots who will tee off in the championship at Sunset Fields tomorrow.

But the most feared man in the tournament is not a Scot, nor is he a Briton. He is a native-born Californian, and a Californian of pioneer descent. Olin Dutra is the player referred to. He was born in Monterey and his parents' home is an old adobe overlooking the historic old Del Monte course. He learned his golf at Del Monte and he is today one of the finest golfers in the Professional Golfers' Association of Southern California.

From the way the boys are smacking the pill, it looks like Sunset Fields's reputation will be in shreds by the time the tournament is over. The pros were unable to score on the course during the southern open championship, but in practice last week Tom Stevens of California clipped four strokes off the course record and six strokes off par with a 66, and Olin Dutra of Brentwood clicked off a devastating round of 64.

Here are their cards:

Par (Out)	454	435	434—36
Dutra	453	433	333—31
Stevens	444	334	435—34
Par (In)	434	534	454—36—72
Dutra	342	445	434—33—64
Stevens	333	434	543—32—66

Dutra should be hard to beat in this tournament, although Willie Hunter plays the course well and came through brilliantly last year to win the southern open.

Among the entrants are Vic Dalberto of the Los Angeles Country Club, Vic Owen of Royal Palms, Willie Low of Lakeside, Charley Chung of Redlands, Art Roux of Hacienda, W. V. Clauson of Sunset Fields, Frank Nunnally of Urban, A. Cameron of Hillcrest, Jimmy Costello of Rio Hondo, Emil Houdak of Rio Hondo, Eric Sevall of California, Pat Lambert, Jr., of Hollywood, Ted Benedict of Honolulu and Charley Guest, unattached.

Bay City Golf Champion Here

Polly Willard, one of San Francisco's best-known golfers, and five-times champion of California realty men, has come to Los Angeles to live. Willard was out gallerying the Southern California amateur championship at Bel-Air yesterday and renewing acquaintance with golfers he had met at Del Monte in the State championships.

Willard left San Francisco with the championship of the Capuchino Club, and should be a valuable addition to Southern California golf.

EASTERNERS TO ATTEND NATIONAL AMATEUR

Roger D. Lapham, vice-president of the United States Golf Association, and president of the California Golf Association, is most enthusiastic over prospects for a large eastern attendance of golfers and spectators at the U.S.G.A. amateur golf championship at Pebble Beach links, Del Monte, Cal., September 2-7. Lapham recently returned to the Coast from an eastern trip in the course of which he talked with many leading officials, players and golf writers. As a result of these contacts, Lapham declares he is confident that the number of easterners who make the long journey to Del Monte this September will surprise even the most optimistic California enthusiasts.

GIRARD CHAMPIONSHIP REACHES SEMIFINALS

The championship of the Girard Golf and Country Club is getting down to a point where one or two stand out as favorites to come through. In the upper half it should be Bill Jack and in the lower bracket Bob Robinson should win, but because each week has seen an upset one can't be sure. For instance, the defeat of Bill Jelliffe by Bill Jack in last week's semifinals came as a distinct surprise. Following are the results of all flights:

CHAMPIONSHIP FLIGHT

J. Johns defeated Glen Weber, 2 and 1.

Bill Jack defeated Bill Jelliffe, 1 up.

Bob Robinson defeated Roger Eaton, 7 and 6.

J. Bassler defeated George Arsneau, 3 and 2.

VICE-PRESIDENT'S FLIGHT

Bob Schmidt defeated I. Kinsey, 2 and 1.

P. N. A. Smith defeated A. D. Gill, 2 and 1.

HORTON SMITH GOOD BET IN "OPEN," SAYS METZGER

BY SOL METZGER

Young Horton Smith, six-foot baby of America's Ryder Cup team and the bogey birdie man of all professional golfers, is a changed youth. Don't for a moment gather from this remark that Horton isn't going to strive his mightiest to win the choicest of all golf prizes, the United States open trophy at Winged Foot in June or that he will fail to swing a mean iron in the $5000 Yorkshire Evening News tournament at Leeds, Eng., next week.

Horton is an even bet to cop that coin against the pick of foreign and domestic talent. His record this past winter shows that he won more than half the rich plums offered the traveling circus of pro linksmen who ranged from Honolulu and California across the Gulf States and then north to Pinehurst.

IRON

HOW HE PLAYED IT
2 PUTTS

Horton's change is of another kind. Like most young fellows who come from the country he believes that ability in his line is the main thing. History proves that this is so. But when one looms as a leader, even if the subject be professional sport, the customs of city slickers have to be heeded.

Smith is an affable youngster whom any of us can call Horton soon as we meet without arousing his ire or dignity. His uncanny judgment of what club to use to get home is proof that he has a head just as has the fact that the three previous big money makers of pro golf—Hagen, Sarazen and Farrell—all lean heavily to dress. They are walking models of what the young man should wear.

Smith's keen sense of humor and pronounced skill as a shot maker combined to take him far in golf. A reporter interviewed him concerning his amazing record this past winter. "Tell him," said his manager, "of that iron second six feet past the pin on the 516 yard—" "Oh, that's nothing," broke in Horton, "my short game always was good."

The big Missourian isn't a tremendous driver but he has a fine short and long iron game and is keen about the greens. Does it with the shortest backswing of all, too. His real strength rests in his ability to play on a line. Take the last hole at Pinehurst in the recent North and South open as an example. It's typical. A 240-yard smack off the tee uphill to the middle of that dog-legged fairway, a bee-line iron to the edge of the green and the alloted two putts.

Many of his irons are closer, hence the almost constant twittering chirp of birdies clear across the continent and in England. No young golfer gives promise of a more brilliant future, none have a better chance to annex the United States open cup. And in doing, should fate decree, not even the Farrells, Hagens or Sarazens will be better dressed or have a better time.

Out to Cop Ed Dudley's Crown

Here are six of the Southland's finest playing "pros," who will battle at Sunset Fields tomorrow in the qualifying round of the annual P.G.A. championship. Tom Stevens of the California Country Club recently set a new course record of 66 at Sunset Fields, only to have it shattered on Friday by Olin Dutra of Brentwood with a 64. "Wee" Willie Hunter of Montebello Park, former British amateur champion, will be a decided favorite. He is backed by "Wee Wee" Willie, who is not quite eligible to enter the P.G.A. as yet. Chet Beer of Stockdale was runner-up to Ed Dudley last year and again looms as a strong contender. Fred Morrison of Midwick is shooting fine golf as is Lewis Scott of Hillcrest. Scott is one of the best instructors in the Southland and when on his game can trim the best of 'em.

Tales of a Wayside Tee by Grantland Rice

The self-hypnosis in golf, or the mental inhibitions that come up, are among the most peculiar features of the game—something hard to explain. Some time ago I was watching a first-class golfer hitting his tee shot. He had a decided hitch at the top of his swing with wooden clubs, a habit of completing his back swing, and then suddenly lifting his hands two or three inches before hitting the ball. This naturally brought about uncertain wooden club play. He had no sign of this in his practice swing. He could take one practice swing after another that was practically perfect. But, as he explained, with the ball to be struck it was something entirely different. Once he reached the top of the back swing, he simply had to take that extra hitch before starting the down swing. And there was no device he could employ that would stop it. It had become a mental habit that couldn't be broken.

GRANTLAND RICE.

Jerry Travers had something of the same fault with his wooden clubs, and Jerry also found it almost impossible to stop, with all the marvelous mental and nerve control he employed in golf.

In the same way I noticed another first-class player, who found it impossible to take more than a half-swing, or at best, only a trifle more. In the same way, he had a perfect practice swing. The club head would cover the full arc, and even drop down a bit. His practice swing was free, full and replete with power. But with the ball to be struck, he found it beyond his power to take this same full swing, shortening the arc to such an extent that it cost him valuable distance.

He admitted that he had been caught and held by this habit for several years, and there was nothing he could do to correct it. It was a habit that had become fixed in his mind and could not be dislodged. He had tried every known system, but the short back swing took control of the situation when there was a ball to be hit.

I ran across another good player, one at least in the low 80s, who had a number of contortions to perform on his back swing before he could hit the ball. I watched him take his practice swing, and it was perfect. Recalling Nipper Campbell's advice to a pupil, I asked him one day why he didn't hit the ball with his practice swing.

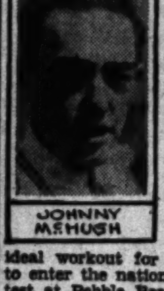
"I'd like to," he said, "but I can't. No one knows how I have tried. I can take as fine a practice swing as any one in the world. I know what the correct golf swing is and how to make it. But once that ball is waiting to be hit, it is entirely different, another story in every way. There is something I can't understand that makes me go through certain motions before I can take my shot at that ball."

M'HUGH TO DEFEND TITLE

California State Championship Draws Brilliant Field; Del Monte Play Scheduled This Month

DEL MONTE, May 11.—With less than three weeks intervening before the California amateur golf championship and attendant events, May 25-June 2, entries are beginning to arrive at Del Monte.

Jack Neville, George Ritchie, Dr. Harry Brownell, and numerous high handicapped golfers have already sent in their entry blanks. Johnny McHugh has declared that he will defend his State title. Within the next week or ten days hundreds of additional entries, including those of practically every important California star, are expected. This year's State championship will prove an ideal workout for those who plan to enter the national amateur contest at Pebble Beach this September.



JOHNNY McHUGH

This year the California amateur championship proper will be limited to players with handicaps of 7 or less. They will have exclusive use of Pebble Beach links and will play at scratch. Golfers whose handicaps run from 8 upward will this year compete in the first annual California handicap championship which will occupy the Del Monte and Monterey Peninsula Country Club courses and will be played entirely at handicap. The first two flights in the Pebble Beach division and first flight in the handicap section will consist of 32; all other flights will number 16. There will be defeated sixteens but no defeated eights. Dates for both championships mentioned are May 27-June 1. The first two days, Monday and Tuesday, the 27th and 28th inst., will be devoted to thirty-six holes of medal play qualification. Match play will follow, with finals Saturday, June 1, next, followed by a great banquet and presentation of trophies at Hotel Del Monte that evening.

Hagen's Caddie Registers Joy

Joe Hurst, who caddied for Walter Hagen during Southern California's mid-winter series of tournaments, claims he is the happiest bag toter in the world. When Walter shot that 67 in the second day of the British open, Joe prognosticated a win for his old boss.

It looks like Joe would pilot another winner in the Southern California amateur championship today. He is carrying Gibson Dunlap's bag, and says the combination can't be beat.

MIDWICK ANNOUNCES ANNUAL "SCOTCH FOURSOME" TOURNEY

The annual Scotch foursome tournament of the Midwick Country Club will be played Saturday and Sunday, the 18th and 19th insts., according to an announcement yesterday from Midwick officials. Thursday and Friday have been set aside for the qualifying round, which will be eighteen holes. The sixteen teams with the lowest net scores will qualify for the first flight, and play is limited to golfers with eight handicap and under. The tournament proper will consist of seventy-two holes of match play, thirty-six holes on Saturday and thirty-six holes Sunday. Fay and Lester Coleman of the California Country Club won the tournament last year, and will likely be favorites again this year. W. D. Campbell and Norbert Murray of Midwick wo nin 1927, W. W. Campbell and W. C. O. Smith of Los Angeles in 1926 and Arnold Statz and McDonald in 1925. The John S. Cravens trophy will be awarded the club of the winning team of the championship flight for one year. Two wins are necessary for permanent possession of the trophy. The Midwick tournament has always attracted a large and brilliant field, and this year is expected to be no exception.

LESTER COLEMAN.

AMBASSADOR PLANS EVENT

A seventy-two-hole tournament will be played over the nine-hole mashie-pitch course of the Ambassador Hotel Saturday and Sunday. Play will be in four divisions, A, B, C and D. The qualifying round will be thirty-six holes and the tournament proper will be thirty-six holes.

Fay Coleman to Play for State Title

Fay Coleman of the California Country Club, who lost his Southern California amateur crown at the Bel-Air Country Club last week, is still full of the battling spirit that makes champions. Fay will be one of the foremost Southern California golfers to play in the California State championship at Del Monte, the 27th inst. to June 2. He announced his intention of playing in the State championship after his defeat at the hands of Charles Seaver. Coleman is one of the finest golfers in the West, and should give Johnny McHugh of San Francisco, the present champion, a run for his title.

EL CENTRO, May 11.—Imperial county's athletic stars came out in force here today and registered some excellent marks. The records were made during the county finals of the Junior Olympic Games and indicate that this section of the State will be well represented at Los Angeles on June 1.

Albert Steele of El Centro High School won the senior division with an impressive total of 563 points. He is one of the outstanding contenders in the Southern California finals and with three weeks' practice between now and then [illegible] materially improve his [illegible]. Steele is a good all-around athlete. He made his score today without winning a single first [illegible].

[illegible] Flores of Eucalyptus School, El Centro, gave Steele a good run of it, finishing close to his heel with 529 points. Obed [illegible] was third with 512, [illegible] of Calexico fourth, with [illegible], and Knolle Land of [illegible] and Raymond Mendoza of Calexico tied for fifth with 428.

Donald Dyer, Acacia School, near El Centro, won the junior championship with a score of 481; Harold Willis of Magnolia School, second, with 476; Burton Shank of [illegible], third, with 469; Joe Andrade of Calexico, fourth, with 466; [illegible] Vinfride of Acacia, fifth, [illegible].

[illegible] of the entries today exceeded the marks made last year. [illegible] Skinner, county chairman of the Junior Olympic movement in the Imperial section, believes that the program can be inserted into the educational plan so that a [illegible] organization will result. He believes coefficient plans may be applied to other events and that [illegible] of grade athletics will have [illegible] effect on interscholastic and Southern California success.

[illegible] Kitchen of El Centro Junior College indorsed the sentiments voiced by Skinner and Armstrong. [illegible] Sandoval of Calexico was outstanding in the jump and dash. He ran the seventy-five after a bad start in 9 2-5s.

LONES BOYS STAR IN MEET

Two Paso Robles Youngsters Cop First Honors in Both Junior and Senior Division of San Luis Obispo County Junior Olympic Games Finals

BY RELMAN MORIN
"Times" Staff Representative

SAN LUIS OBISPO, May 11. (Exclusive)—It was something of a family affair up here in San Luis Obispo county today. The Lones boys, Merlin and Elwin, of Paso Robles outscored sixty other youthful athletes from the surrounding towns to win senior and junior county Junior Olympic Games championships and qualify for the Southern California finals at Los Angeles on June 1.

Merlin Lones rolled up a total of 411 points to win the senior division. He had a safe 15-point margin over Ellis Bonetti of East Santa Fe, who finished second with 396. Lones and Bonetti will carry the San Luis Obispo hopes and colors in the senior division.

Elwin Lones had an even more convincing margin in the junior division. He scored 359 points with his nearest rival, William Rogers of Atascadero, in second place at 318. First and second-place winners in the junior division will also go to Los Angeles.

ANOTHER IN IT

And that wasn't all. Philip, another member of the talented Lones family of Paso Robles, managed to hoist his square chin over the bar thirteen times to win an individual medal, besides rolling up a score that placed him among the first ten in the senior division.

Between the three boys the Lones family of Paso Robles makes a pretty efficient track team and when they all get to college in a few years you'll hear of that institution on the cinder path, providing, of course, that the family solidarity is maintained and that all enter the same halls of learning.

Neither of the winning scores in the two divisions breaks any sort of record in Southern California, although both are respectable and make it certain that San Luis Obispo will be right up at the top when the battle is all over on June 1.

Holding the county championships thus early is a strategic move and it's certain to count heavily when county champions from all over the south convene at Los Angeles. The four boys who won today now have something like three weeks in which to practice and improve themselves in the events where skill counts for so much, as well as training for those in which it's a matter of endurance and condition.

With the knowledge of their importance to San Luis Obispo county acting as a spur the two Lones boys and Bonnetti and Rogers will do everything in their power to get into shape and will have the benefit of additional individual coaching that they would not otherwise have received.

It was a mighty wise move and the credit goes to Coach Al Agosti of San Luis Obispo Polytechnic High School.

Winning medals and scoring high in Junior Olympic Games competition is getting to be a regular habit with Merlin Lones. Competing last year as a junior he won the championship with 407 points—four less than his total here today—but was unable to make the trip south because of illness.

Merlin Lones and his smaller brother, too, for that matter, was nicely consistent in each of the five events today. He led off with a sizzling 9 1-10s. in the sprints. Then he went over and broad-jumped 7ft. 7in., which is some six inches back of the best mark made here today. He had a mark of 221ft. in the baseball throw, placing among the first five. The one place on the program where he fell down slightly was the basketball throw, in which he tossed the ball through the net seven times.

LED DIVISION

It was much the same in the case of his younger brother, Elwin. The latter led his division in the baseball and basketball throws, winning first-place medals. He chinned himself one time less than did the winner, and his marks in the sprints and broad jump were close behind the best ones made.

Exactly sixty youngsters went to the marks in the finals today. The meet was handled with precision and efficiency, thanks to the work of Al Agosti and his staff of assistants, who were under way at 9:30 and had the last card in their hands on the dot of 12.

CAULIFLOWER ALLEY NOTES

Jack Doyle, ably assisted by his right bower, Master Si Masters throws open the doors of the Olympic Auditorium next Tuesday night for the exploiting of Joe Roche's and Wilson Yarbo's boxing wares. Wilson is undoubtedly the toughest dark-skinned battler in captivity today and but recently proved a very black shadow on Bert Colima's coat of arms. He hails from Cleveland, O., and brings clear across the continent a wallop that is sure to prove a bogey to many ambitious glove-laborers. Fred Winsor, the world's greatest discoverer of fighters, is freely taxed with picking an easy 'un for his man Roche, but "Wisdom Row" along Spring street takes a different slant at the bout.

"Wisdom Row's" grand exalted ruler, Mike Fusco, believes that Joe will have his gloves full of difficulty soon after hostilities begin, and his opinion is voiced by many of his flock. The clash should prove a humdinger in the way of fast-fire slugging and unless all signs fail, one of the duo will more than likely be laying carpets before Billy Coe brings his hammer down on the final gong. As Roche has made himself a big favorite here by his recent showings at the Hollywood Stadium, an unusually large house should be on hand to greet the warriors.

Ed "Strangler" Lewis, the toughest egg in the wrestling game today, will again disport himself on the Olympic Auditorium canvas, this time, next Wednesday night, when he meets the savage and untamed Dick Daviscourt. Lewis, after his remarkably easy victory over Joe Stecher, is the outstanding mat attraction in the traces today. In his match with Daviscourt, however, one must take into consideration that if Ed gets nasty and tough with Dick, he will run foul of an opponent that is just as much a past-master at the rough-house game as he is. This fact should insure a colorful contest—one full of fierce aggressiveness and bone-cracking holds. Daviscourt is also pretty good at stunning headlocks. He is in rare shape and is sure to give the paid customers a run for their money.

The Ontario Athletic Club, over in Orange county, makes its initial bow to the boxing public on Wednesday night, May 15. Matchmaker Jack Grace (famous globe-trotter) is dealing out a cracking good card for the big opener. He has pitted Tom Moore, "The Blond Tornado," against Pollard Green in the main event and this will be fed up to by five other corking settos. The arena seats 3500 boxing bugs and is under the management of Rube Kauffman. Bon voyage, Jack, old boy.

Main street has at last found out why the Mexican rebels held out so long. The secret leaked out through Johnny Sampson's pride. Johnny, who boasts a stable of at least forty Mexican boxers and otherwise, used to shoot a contingent of his best boys over the border line every time the going got tough for the rebels. They all came back hale and hearty, attributing their good luck to the fact that the Federals all shot where they had their eyes focused.

Opinions differ as to the probable outcome of the suggested Ace Hudkins-Joe Roche assault at arms. Jimmy Rafferty rambles—"Joe wouldn't last even through the referee's instructions." Art Braethan kicks in with—"The only time he would touch Ace would be when the 'Wildcat' was carrying him out of the ring." George Moss, however, when asked for his views, came through with, "Say, you two, Fred Winsor will surely be looking for you with a shotgun for spilling the truth."

Jack Clark, who taught Miles Standish boxing before he went on the rocks at Plymouth, has staged a comeback, and honest to goodness, it's no mirage. Last week, within the croon of the beakers at Ocean Park, Jack jolted sleeping sickness into one Johnny Maurry with a left hook to the body. "How did you do it?" asked Paul Mullen, who has lately been suffering from the early indiscretions of youth. "Oh," laughed Jack, "through some jewish cheese that I bought on Main street." The last heard of Mullen he was arrested for breaking the speed limit on Main street.

George Parnassus, popular boxing manager, has opened a swell tearoom over on Spring street which is getting to be a sort of favorite resort for the gloved gentry. The place sports a large lounging room, where a siesta is served with the beverage. When "Philadelphia Kid" Broad was asked if he would have siesta with his tea he tonsiled forth: "Yes—please—but not more than two teaspoons full."

Walter Ehle, one the toughest eggs that ever pulled on a padded mitt, quit the ring sometime ago to go into the movies. He was told that if he wanted to clean up in the films he must start at the bottom, so he got a job at one of the studios cleaning up fifty rooms a night. Some malignant, cock-eyed jinx swung him under a Scotchman as his boss, and then poor Walter's lease on life soon hung by a thread. He used only two boxes of Gold Dust Twins in four nights on the fifty rooms; yet he was fired by the Scotchman for his extravagance. His letter of dismissal read—"Boy—I gave you two boxes of Gold Dust last week and I would like to know what you did with them. The dust was to rub on your arms and not on the damned floors. Say, boy—Let me give you a tip, the best way to save for yourself is to save for others." Signed—"Scotchman Mac." Ehle declares that the only thing Mac ever gave him was that tip in the letter of dismissal.

Ray McIntyre is out with a blunderbuss looking for the gink that published, in a local paper, that Lorenzo Sisson had knocked him out. Ray snorts—"how in the blue blazes can you be knocked out by a man you never fought?" Well—there surely seems to be some of the white light of reason in Ray's contention.

Bracey Beaten by Cy Leland

DALLAS (Tex.) May 11. (AP)—Claude Bracey, Rice Institute's great dash star, lost his first race in two years of college competition today when Cy Leland, Texas Christian University sophomore sensation, beat him to the tape by a foot in the 220-yard dash in the annual Southwest Conference meet here.

The Southern Express was not to be denied in the 100-yard event, however, leading Leland to the tape by a full yard in 10.1s. In both dashes the conference's two premier sprinters finished many yards ahead of the field.

Texas A. & M. College won the conference title with 58 1-4 points; Texas University was second with 39½ and Rice third with 37.

ADVOCATES SYSTEMATIC TRAINING FOR ATHLETES

"A student should be as systematically and progressively trained in physical education from grade to grade as he is in mathematics and history," states Professor William Ralph LaPorte of the Department of Physical Education of the University of Southern California, and chairman of the committee on curriculum research of the National Society of Directors of Physical Education in College.

Covering thirty-seven physical activities, a study of the reactions of forty experts—prominent leaders in the physical education field of the country—has just been completed by members of this committee. Evaluation of the activities was expressed in terms of their developmental contributions, including physical, social, psychological, safety, recreational and corrective.

"Swimming was easily the leader in every form of contribution except social and psychological," states Professor LaPorte's report. "In social contribution the team games naturally led the field. In psychological contribution a good mixture was evident, with football and hockey leading."

The ranking chart of the central median tendencies tabulated by the committee puts the thirty-seven activities in the following order:

First place, swimming.

Second place, gymnastic games, basketball, football, soccer, speedball.

Third place, tennis, hockey, playground ball, track and field, volleyball.

Fourth place, diving, golf, baseball, field ball, touch (tag) football.

Fifth place, life saving, boxing, fencing, hand-to-hand, wrestling, gymnastic dancing, tumbling, handball, hiking, riding, squash, squash tennis, water polo, horseshoes (quoits.)

Sixth place, boating, pyramids, bowling.

Seventh place, free exercises, marching, archery.

Eighth place, hand apparatus.

HERON AND STERN COP AT BELMONT

Good Marks Registered in Junior Olympic Games Meet at High School

Brilliant performances marked the district finals of the Junior Olympics yesterday at the Belmont High athletic field.

Approximately 100 young athletes assembled for the contest, representing a good number of schools in Los Angeles. The program was made up of five events. They were the broad jump, baseball throw, chinning, basketball throw, and 75-yard dash.

Vincent Heron of Starr King Junior High School, ran away with first honors in the senior division, garnering 470 points. Vincent started the day off by winning the basketball throw with 13 goals out of 20 tries. In the next event, the standing broad jump, Heron again took first place with a leap of 8ft. Lifting himself 25 times, he easily captured the chin up by a margin of four pull ups. His ability as a sprinter was shown when he ran the 75-yard run in 9 1-5s., tieing for second. Vincent tied for eighth place in the baseball throw.

Frank Kamada, from John Adams, was Heron's nearest rival with 433 8-12 points. Sam Waxman's score of 369 entitled him to third place, while Dick Lindsay of Poly came in for fourth honors with 348. Ralph Vasquez placed fifth, gathering 322 digits.

Sydmore Stern was the big noise in the junior division, winning the high-point honors with 360 points. Sydmore earned his score by placing second in the broad jump, tying for eighth in the baseball throw, tying for first in the 75, tying for second in the chin up, and tying for third in the basketball event.

Joe Ensch succeeded in gathering 345 points out of the events to place second in the junior division. Norman Montapert and Robert Cushnia took third and fourth by getting 316 and 302 points, respectively. Snodgrass trailed Cushnia by a point for fifth place.

Chats on FISH & GAME

BY B. D. MARX GREENE
Former Executive Officer
California Fish and Game Commission

(Mr. Greene's articles will appear weekly in this paper. He will answer questions on any fish and game topic. Address him care of Sports Editor, this paper. The reply will be either direct or in this column.)

At the session of the Senate Fish and Game Committee of the Legislature held on April 30, 1929, an excellent code amendment proposed by Senator Hurley was voted out with a favorable recommendation. This is Senate Bill No. 808, amending Section No. 626-a of the Penal Code. The present law provides that fish or game may be held in possession for not more than five days after the close of the season and has unquestionably worked a hardship on deer hunters.

If a man is off in the wilds of Siskiyou, Trinity or other mountain counties and kills his deer on the last day of the season he probably finds, after a journey home of two or three days, that it is utterly impossible to consume the game within the time allowed by law, even with the help of his friends.

REGULATION NEEDED

From the standpoint of law enforcement, there is unquestioned necessity for some such regulation. However, possession must be allowed for some period after the close of the season not only the sportsman, but for the commercial fisherman. It is probably true that in most cases the five-day period is sufficient in which to dispose of fish or game, except deer.

The period of grace cannot be extended too long after the closing date because a wilful violator, when caught with fish or game in his possession during the closed season, could claim that it was legally taken during the open season.

Senator Hurley's amendment allows deer to be held for fifteen days after the close of the season instead of five as at present. We have the deer tag law now and the tags make a record of the time when the kill is made.

The following are some of the questions asked last week:

Question: What action has been taken on the bill to take protection off crows?

Answer: You, no doubt, refer to Assembly Bill No. 337, which amends Section 637½ of the Penal Code and lists the crow and black-billed magpie as predatory birds.

This bill has been passed by the Assembly and has been sent out of the Senate Fish and Game Committee with a recommendation "do pass;" it is now before the Senate.

The passage of this bill will not of itself, legalize the killing of crows and black-billed magpies. The enactment of this bill would classify these birds as "predatory birds" and as such no hunting license would be required to kill them. However, unless further amendment is made to the present laws, it would be illegal to kill them as they would still be protected as nongame birds under Section 637a of the Penal Code.

In other words, the only effect of enacting the above bill would be to permit the hunting of these birds without a hunting license, but they would be fully protected during the entire year under another section.

Q.: What are the boundaries of Fish and Game District No. 25?

A.: District 25 is in Plumas and Lassen counties and consists of and includes the waters of Lake Almanor and all streams flowing into this lake, and all lands lying within the drainage basin of said lake and streams.

Q.: I have been told that fishing for striped bass at night is permitted in some districts but prohibited in others. What is the "dope" on it? What about trout?

A.: Both striped bass and trout are classified as game fishes. Under the present laws, which are effective until ninety days after the close of the present session of the Legislature, it is unlawful to catch any game fish between one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise in districts 1, 1½, 2, 3, 4, 4½, 23, 24 and 25. Night fishing during the open season, is not prohibited in the other districts under the present laws.

Q.: What is the requirements for shipping trout from an open district into a closed district? Can trout be shipped out of the State?

A.: Trout lawfully caught and possessed in an open district may be shipped into a closed district provided an affidavit is made before a Justice of the Peace or notary public in the county in which the trout are caught, stating the date and place where the trout were caught, the name address and angling license number of the person catching the same, and the name and address of the person to whom the trout are to be shipped. The original of the affidavit must be attached to the shipment and a copy left with the Justice of the Peace or notary public before whom it was made.

It is unlawful at all times to ship or transport out of the State any trout caught in the waters of the State.

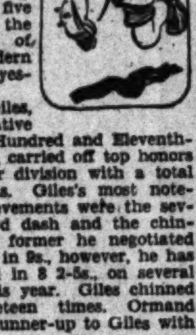
Byers and Eskew Runners-up in Divisions

A host of prospective Junior Olympic champions were uncovered at the running off of the Southwestern district finals held on the John C. Fremont athletic field yesterday.



Eleven elementary, junior high and high schools were represented by approximately seventy-five athletes in the running off of this modern pentathlon yesterday.

Herman Giles, a representative of the One Hundred and Eleventh-street school, carried off top honors in the senior division with a total of 409 points. Giles's most noteworthy achievements were the seventy-five-yard dash and the chin-up. In the former he negotiated the distance in 9s., however, he has been clocked in 8 2-5s., on several occasions this year. Giles chinned himself nineteen times. Ormand Eskew was runner-up to Giles with 371 digits.

Billy Edwards of Fremont High School walked off with the first-place honors in the junior division, accumulated 434 points. Edwards, who has considerable trouble making the necessary amount of digits required for the smaller class, vindicated himself in three events. He walked off with a first in the seventy-five-yard dash, the standing broad jump, and a tie for first in the chin-up.

Cliff Byers of Eighty-seventh-street school accounted for 405 points to run a close second to Edwards.

Bronze medals were given to first-place winners in each event and first-place winners of the two divisions.

Among the schools represented in the Junior Olympiad at Fremont were George Washington, Fifty-second, One Hundred and Eleventh, Eighty-seventh, Miramonte, Main street, Fremont, Thomas A. Edison and Grape street.

The results:

SENIORS

First, Herman Giles, One Hundred and Eleventh, 409 points.

Second, Ormand Eskew, Fremont, 371 points.

Fifth, Herbert Schroeder, Sixty-eighth, 333 points.

JUNIORS

Second, Cliff Byers, Eighty-seventh, 405 points.

Third, James Martinez, Miramonte, 399 points.

Fourth, Lionel Taylor, One Hundred and Eleventh, 344 points.

Fifth, George Miller, Sixty-eighth, 338 points.

The above named boys qualified for the county meet to be held at Moore Field, U.C.L.A. on the 25th inst.

Many Meets This Week

Junior Olympic Games athletes will go into action all over Southern California this week. Finals are billed for the following counties: San Bernardino, Ventura, Orange and Los Angeles county schools. District meets will be held at Huntington Park, Pasadena, Santa Monica, Inglewood and Long Beach, with winners to take part in the Los Angeles county finals at Moore Field, U.C.L.A., on the 25th inst.

BOWLERS TO STAGE TOURNEY ON JUNE 12

Posters were released last week and mailed to all bowling establishments under the jurisdiction of the Los Angeles Bowling Association, carrying the announcement that the fifth annual Los Angeles city tournament will start June 12 at the Beverly Hills Bowling and Billiard Building on Wilshire Boulevard, for a run of one month.

Beverly Hills bowlers and business men are getting behind the tournament 100 per cent and Beverly Hills probably will be represented by fifty teams; Los Angeles is expected to contribute an entry of 100 teams. The balance of the entry will come from Southern California neighboring communities.

Besarra and Rogers Star

Amassing a total of 537 points, Leo Besarra, of Robert Louis Stevenson Jr. High School, took first place in the senior division of the Junior Olympic Games district finals held at Roosevelt High School yesterday.

Marvin Rogers, also of Robert Louis Stevenson Junior High, came through with a total of 420 points to win first place in the junior division.

Rogers, a blond little giant who tips the scales under sixty-eight pounds, boosted his score considerably in the chinning event, managing to lift himself over the bar twenty-four times, three times more than the winner of the senior division, and nine times more than his closest competitor. Rogers did not do so well in the other events, although he managed to drop the basketball through the hoop eleven times out of twenty tries.

Besarra performed in championship form in all events, having won three out of five events in a field of more than twenty senior contestants. Besides throwing the baseball 229 feet, Besarra chinned himself twenty-one times and hit the basket for thirteen times out of twenty chances. He also hung up the best time in the seventy-five-yard dash for the day, rambling the distance in 8.3s.

Hidalgo Lopes of Garfield High School took second in the senior division, finishing with a total of 403 digits. Lopes distinguished himself by giving the baseball a ride for 262 feet, recording the best mark in this event. Lopes chinned himself twenty times, and ran the seventy-five-yard dash in 8.4s., one-tenth of a second less than Besarra.

According to Coach Miller, who conducted the competition, the boys were handicapped by the intense heat and poor condition of the track, and the records established yesterday are but a mere indication of what the two winners are capable of.

Other winners are as follows: In the senior division John Luzero of Belvedere Junior High took third place with 400 points; Jack Kabar of Robert Louis Stevenson fourth with 360 points, and Angel Munos of Belvedere Junior High, fifth, with 320 points.

In the junior division Mike Kabich of Belvedere Junior took second with 343 points; Marvin Turchi also of Belvedere finished third with 328 points; Virgil Reimer of Sierra Park School won fourth place with 306 points, and David McGowan of Belvedere, fifth, with 302 points.

MILLIONAIRE PUPILS

George Duncan, captain of the British Ryder cup team, has contracted to teach golf to three British millionaires, among them being Agha Khan, wealthy sportsman of India, who spends most of his time in England.

EVANS WINS IN FAIRFAX MEET

Richardson is Victorious Among Juniors

Harrison Evans, representing the Fairfax High School, annexed 433 points yesterday morning in the senior division of the Junior Olympic Games contest held at Fairfax High School to win first place. Evans barely nosed out Ed Kemble of Le Conte school, who ran up a total of 427 digits. Halstead Richardson of Urban Military Academy far outdistanced his rivals in the junior contest, his nearest competitor being 70 points behind.

HARRISON EVANS

The first five winners in the senior division were Harrison Evans, 433; Ed Kemble, Le Conte school, 427; Fred Stewart, Urban Military Academy, 387; John Peak, Urban Military Academy; and Arthur Pettler, Fairfax High School, 369. The leading competitors in the junior division were Halstead Richardson, Urban Military Academy, 317; Eldred Pack, St. John's Academy, 247; Paul Stano, Euna Drive school, 237; Stanley Daggett, St. John's Academy, 220; and Kai Pihl, Grant school, and Billy Wolmack, Grant school, tied for fifth place with 206 points each.

Evans was a very consistent performer in all events. He took third in the senior division broad jump with a leap of 8ft. 1¼in., threw the baseball 184ft.; chinned the bar nineteen times to take third place in that event; tossed in fifteen out of twenty tries at the basketball goal for first place; and ran the seventy-five-yard dash in 9 3-5s. Kemble, who copped second in the senior meet, pressed Evans all the way, and, if his co-efficient had been equal to that of Evans, he would have won first place, for his individual marks were better.

Richardson of Urban Military Academy had practically no competition in the junior meet, and he annexed first place easily. Although all of his marks in the five events were bettered by other contestants, Richardson was the only consistent performer, and no one approached him for the meet victory. He jumped 6ft. 8in. in the broad jump, threw the baseball 167ft., chinned the bar eight times, tossed in six free throws with the basketball, and traveled the seventy-five yards in the dash event in 11s.

TRACK STARS WHO'LL SHINE IN INTERCOLLEGIATES HERE SATURDAY

Los Angeles has its biggest track meet next week-end when the Pacific Coast intercollegiates will be held at the Coliseum, featuring athletes from Stanford, California, Southern California and U.C.L.A. Rothert of Stanford is favored Williams looks like the best of the quarter-milers, along with Morrison of Stanford, Edmonds will battle it out with Jack Williams of the Trojans in the pole vault, while Jimmy Payne's return to form in the low hurdles insures Southern Califo here. Kibby has likewise returned to form and will be hard to beat in the javelin.

INJURY TO BORAH HURTS S.C.'S CHANCES TO WIN

Templeton's Athletes Expected to Walk Off With Easy Victory; Cromwell to Pick Men

With Capt. Charley Borah on the shelf with his injured leg, any hopes the Trojans had of winning the California intercollegiates in the Coliseum Friday and Saturday, have gone glimmering, but the meet, the final outdoor affair of the local season, still looms as one of the best cinder affairs.

"DINK" TEMPLETON

With Borah out of the way, Stanford will have no trouble in winning, for neither California nor U. C. L. A. can measure up to the Cards or Trojans. Stanford already has won the Coast dual meet title, with victories over S.C., California and Washington, and Saturday's victory will add conference honors to the string of laurels.

The Cards, with Hector Dyer, Ward Edmonds, Capt. Ross Nichols, Alex McKinnon, Harlow Rothert and Eric Krenz, seem positively unbeatable. Dyer is almost certain to win both sprints, now that Borah is laid up, although Milton Maurer, on his close race with Nate George in the A.A.U. meet, might come through unexpectedly.

NICHOLS BEST

Nichols is a foregone conclusion in the highs, while Edmonds, if he chooses to run the lows, can give Jimmy Payne all kinds of competition. He will resume his vaulting duel with Jack Williams, also. The Trojan star has twice conquered the Card vaulter, in the dual meet, and at Fresno.

McKinnon will run the mile and the half again, with high hopes of repeating his double win, scored in the Trojan-Card dual meet, although he will be meeting sterner competition here.

Krenz and Rothert are the best college weight men in the country, and will win their events handily.

The Trojans, with Maurer and Wehner of the sprints, Vic Williams and Gerald Pearson in the quarter, Fitzmaurice, Gloege and Schurr in the half; Swede and Fitzmaurice in the mile; Woodruff, Daniels and Patterson in the two-mile; Jimmy and Ernie Payne and Charley Webber in the hurdles; Hill and Paul in the broad jump; Jack Williams in the pole vault, and Jess Mortensen in the javelin, have a strong array of talent, but apparently not enough to offset the number of first-place points which the Cards are sure to collect.

California has Capt. Curtice and Churchill in the javelin, Red Mossman in the two-mile; Bisbee in the sprints; Lom in the broad jump; Pogolotti in the hurdles; Jacklevitch and Bingaman in the high jump, and Carter and Cherry in the mile; and Chase and Rust in the half-mile. These runners are certain to pile up a lot of points, but cannot be rated with either the Cards or Trojans.

U.C.L.A.'s main dependencies are Johnny Hill in the 100, Carleton Waite in either the mile or two-mile, and Capt. Alex Gill in the high jump. The latter is almost sure to win his event, as he has cleared better than six feet, which none of the other jumpers in the meet has been able to do.

Dean Cromwell, coach of the Trojan squad, plans to take a ten-man team to the I.C.A.A.A.A. championships, figuring to score between 20 and 25 points. The men who make the best showings in Saturday's meet will be the ones to go. Cromwell has no illusions about the national championship affair. According to his figures, Stafford can score between 37 and 45 points. The Cards won last year, scoring 38½ digits.

CHRISTIE PICKS BEAR ATHLETES

BERKELEY, May 11. (Exclusive) Coach Walter Christie today decided upon his University of California entry list for the quadrangular State intercollegiate track meet in Los Angeles on the 18th inst. The "Old Fox" has decided to pit fifteen of his strongest men in this first annual meeting of the State's "big four."

Those men to compete and the events in which they will enter are as follows: Harry Carter, mile; Everett Mossman, two-mile; Anthony Jacklevitch, high jump; Spencer Bisby, sprints; Capt. Emery Curtice and Kenneth Churchill, javelin; Ernest Baxter, javelin, and discus; Capt.-elect Al Pogolotti, hurdles; Spencer Sparks, Aubrey Johnson and Linton Pratt, quarter-mile; John Rust, half-mile; Everett Schrivener, pole vault; Pat Brown, shot put and discus, and Bob Patton, discus and broad jump.

Fix Dates for Sport Exhibit

Definite dates for the first annual Los Angeles National Sports Exposition were announced yesterday by Harry S. Lawson, director-general of the forthcoming show to be held at the northeast corner of Wilshire and Fairfax. The exposition will hold forth for eleven days—June 20 to 30. Coincident with the setting of the dates, activity was launched that promises to have the big pavilion sided and roofed within the next fortnight, following which the stadium at the east end of the grounds and in which the special daily athletic events, sanctioned by the A.A.U., will be held, will be gotten under way.

The stadium comprises more than 100,000 square feet and the exposition building will cover something in excess of 140,000 square feet—all on a ten-acre tract in the very heart of the exclusive West Wilshire district.

The exposition is sponsored by the B.P.O.E. No. 99, and the proceeds from the annual event will be used eventually to build a permanent exposition structure and stadium that, according to J. J. Doyle, Grand Exalted Ruler of the B.P.O.E. No. 99, and chairman of the project, will be a credit to Southern California.

Robert S. Weaver, president of the Southern Pacific Association of the A.A.U., will have charge of all athletic events to be staged in connection with the exposition.

SAMMY MANDELL TO BOX BERG IN CHICAGO

CHICAGO, May 11. (AP)—Sammy Mandell, world's lightweight champion, has been matched with Jack Berg of England in a ten-round bout the 28th inst. The battle, which will not involve Mandell's title, will open Chicago's outdoor boxing season.

MERCURY TEAM TO BE STRONG

Favored to Retain National Track Title

One of the strongest track and field teams ever gathered together under one banner will represent the Los Angeles Athletic Club in the national A.A.U. track and field championships to be held at Denver, July 3, 4 and 5.

CHARLEY BORAH

The Mercury club under Coaches Dean Cromwell and Tommy Davis will compete in the junior and senior meets as well as having relay teams and decathlon stars competing on the final day, July 5.

At least two practice meets will be held during the next month to determine the members of the team, but a tentative list has already been drawn up, including the cream of Southern California stars. The first of these practice meets will be held the 25th inst. at Bovard Field. Another will be held in June. When Coach Cromwell returns from the I. C. 4-A. meet at Philadelphia, he will put his entire time in whipping the team in shape for the big meet.

The Mercuries won the national title at Boston last year and will be favored to retain the championship this year at Denver against the best track and field talent of the nation.

Two club stars will not be able to make the trip, Nick Carter, one-mile ace, and Dick Pomeroy, 440-yard hurdle star, but capable men will take their places.

The tentative team line-up to be cut down in practice meets is as follows:

100 and 220-yard dashes and 440 and 880-yard relays: Frank Wykoff, Charles Borah, Hector Dyer, Milton Maurer, "Red" Guyer, Murray Schultz.

440-yard dash: Vic Williams, Pearson, Niersbach, Lovejoy.

880-yard run: Bill McGeagh, Jack Burton.

Mile run: Cliff Halstead, Francis Hammatt, Earl Callahan, Lee Hansen.

Six-mile run: Henry Chaucua.

120-yard high hurdles: Hugo Leistner, Ross Nichols, Jeddy Welsh.

220-yard low hurdles: Jimmy Payne, Bob Maxwell, Ernie Payne.

440-yard hurdles: Ken Grumbles, Clyde Blanchard, Paul Gartner.

Pole vault: Jack Williams, Ward Edmonds, Harry Smith, Bill Hubbard.

High jump: Henry Lassalette, Howard Arthur, Van Osdel.

Shot put: Herman Brix, Harlow Rothert, John Kuck, Clarence Schleimer, Al Forster.

Discus throw: Bud Houser, Ed Moeller.

Javelin throw: James De Mers, Jess Mortensen, Charles Harlow, Charles Eaton.

Broad jump: Dick Barber, Jess Hill, Howard Paul, Hap Walker, Harlan Striff.

Hop-step-jump: Bob Patten.

Fifty-six-pound weight: Alma Richards.

Decathlon: James Stewart, Al Lefebvre.

This line-up is now tentative and in the next few weeks some of these men will be dropped and others added. L.A.A.C. officials have not yet announced how large a team will be taken to Denver, although definite word is expected soon.

DAVIS CUP SQUAD PICKED

Richards Lauds Selection of Lott, Hennessey, Van Ryn and Allison for Zone Play

BY VINCENT RICHARDS

Professional Tennis Champion of the World

[Copyright, 1929, by North American Newspaper Alliance]

NEW YORK, May 11. (Exclusive)—The selection of George Lott, John Hennessey, John Van Ryn and Wilmer Allison for the Davis Cup team was in accordance with general expectations. As the four top ranking players after Tilden and Hunter, who were not available for the play in the American zone because of their forthcoming trip abroad, they were in line for the honor, and the distinguished records of all four this year clinched the positions for them.

BILL TILDEN

The matches at the Huntingdon Valley Country Club in Philadelphia were not official trials as were those at the training camp at Augusta, Ga., last spring. Capt. Fitz-Eugene Dixon, the chairman of the selection committee, invited the players to be his guests at Huntingdon Valley to practice until the team leaves for Canada on May 12, and Tilden and Hunter went down to work out with them. Fritz Mercur was also invited and J. Gilbert Hall was to have participated, but did not appear. He will practice with the team this week and if he continues to play as well for the rest of the season as he has to date, undoubtedly will get more serious consideration for the team.

Hennessey, Van Ryn and Allison will bear the burden of the play against Canada, and probably throughout the American zone ties. Lott is in school at the University of Chicago and will not be called on unless one of the other three is incapacitated, in which event he will be drafted. Should the United States clean up in the American zone I expect to see him taken abroad, for Lott is one of the finest young prospects, and is also the third ranking player of the United States.

I have already stated that I do not think that the United States is to have a walk-away in the tie with Canada. The dominion players are keener about this match than any other in which Canada has engaged.

Every preparation is being made to put the strongest possible team on the field. As a result of the trials that were held last week Jack Wright, Willard Crocker, Dr. Arthur Ham and Marcel Rainville were selected for the team.

Wright and Crocker will undoubtedly be the singles selections and I would be surprised if they did not also take care of the doubles. Hennessey and Van Ryn are practically certain to be the American singles nominations and they may also team together in the doubles, although Allison has been pairing with Van Ryn regularly during the southern season and at Philadelphia.

Van Ryn, in my opinion, has no superior in the United States as a doubles player and should unquestionably be used in the tandem match, regardless of who is his partner. He is in the pink of condition and has the physique and stamina to stand the strain of playing three matches.

Allison, when he is "right," is a brilliant doubles player, but in the practice matches to date he has not been able to produce his best form consistently. However, in helping Van Ryn to defeat Tilden and Hunter at Philadelphia on Sunday he rose to the occasion in handsome fashion after getting off to a poor start and in the final set he was the outstanding man on the court, both off the ground and at the net.

MARBERRY COMPLEX HITS HURLERS OF WASHINGTON

CHICAGO, May 11. (Exclusive)—If there is such a thing as a Marberry complex, the Washington Senators have it. It seems that the Griffmen never have recovered from the work of "Firpo" during those breath-taking days in 1924 when he performed iron-man tasks to pitch the Senators to their first pennant.

"FIRPO" MARBERRY

In those days, no matter what pitcher wavered, Marberry was rushed in by Manager Bucky Harris to save the day, and he did so more often than not. It got so that about the seventh inning the pitchers used to cast anxious eyes toward the bullpen to see whether or not the stalwart Firpo was ready to carry on the battle.

The result is that the Senators seem to have accumulated a parcel of "five-inning" pitchers.

Washington has been one of the disappointments of the season so far. The Senators' work in Florida and in the exhibition games on the way north presaged an excellent pitching staff for the Senators, but the "Marberry complex" asserted itself with the opening of the season.

Manager Walter Johnson still believes that his boys will be up there giving the Yanks a tussle before the race is over, and points out that fifteen games or so are little enough by which to judge a club.

TROUT ANGLING REPORTED GOOD

Fishermen Catching Fish as Streams Clear Up

BY CEPH B. SALISBURY

Manager Outing Bureau Automobile Club of Southern California

Trout fishing has picked up a little since the opening of the season. Some of the streams have cleared up and the fishermen who took the time and trouble to get well up the streams have been bringing in good creels of fish.

The Upper Sespe has produced many limits the past week, but the lower stretches of this stream are still poor.

Santa Paula Creek is better this year than it has been for the past seven years.

Matilija Creek continues to furnish strings of small-size trout. Several nice limits were caught in the headwaters of Piru Creek and in Agua Blanca and Snow creeks.

Big Tujunga below Hansen's Lodge has been poor, but good catches have been mad eabove the Narrows, where Mill Creek joins the Big Tujunga. This is reached via trail seven miles from Hansen's Lodge.

Fairly good reports continue to come in from Prairie, Fish and Iron Forks of the San Gabriel, reached by trail from Big Pines Recreation Park seven miles, Coldbrook Camp twelve miles, Camp Baldy eighteen miles. Cattle Canyon reached by trail from Bonita or Camp Baldy, four miles either way. The North Fork above Camp Coldbrook is also fair.

Bear Creek for the first four miles below the dam produced many limits the past week.

Deep Creek is still a bit cloudy and roily due to the melting snow, and poor success has been had in that stream so far this season. To reach the best fishing on Bear Creek, take the National Forest trail out of Green Valley. The distance is four miles, and horses may be secured at Green Valley. A trail also goes to Holcomb Creek from there, and fair fishing may be had a little later on in the season.

The Upper Santa Ana and Siberia Creek have been fair. Several nice strings were brought out of the latter stream the past few days.

Big Bear Lake has not been very good so far this season, but it is a little early at this elevation for good bass fishing.

Arrowhead Lake is still enjoying good fishing. With these warm days the trout are feeding deeper, and a small sinker should be used ahead of your spinner.

Several arrests have been made at Arrowhead Lake for using more than two blades on a line while trolling. Two blades are all that are allowed by law in California.

There are good reports from the streams above Fairview. The main Kern River is still high and muddy and will continue so until sometime in June or until the snow at the headwaters has melted. Dome Creek, South Creek and the headwaters of Durwood Creek have been good. The headwaters of Salmon Creek, Matern Creek, Rattlesnake Creek and the South Fork should begin to get good the coming week. These streams are all reached via trail from Fairview, Weldon, Little Lake or Olancha.

The Santa Ynez River and Gibraltar Dam have not been very good this week. The headwaters of the Manzana Creek, reached by trail from Paradise Camp or Los Olivos, was good.

The best results are being had in the streams that are running a little muddy by using a small spinner.

Better bass fishing is reported from the San Diego reservoirs. Good catches have been made at Morena, Sweetwater and Hodges. Reservations for boats are necessary, and we would advise any one wishing to fish at any of the reservoirs to either write or phone at least a week in advance.

Fishermen going out on our streams within the next month should carry with them some good brand of mosquito dope and use it freely, as the black gnats have made their appearance and unless you use something to keep them off, you will come back looking like you had the smallpox.

If you are going to camp, be sure and take a campfire permit with you. A fire permit is required in all national forests of California for any kind of a fire, in the open, with wood stove, gasoline stove or otherwise, and you are only allowed to smoke in designated camp grounds or places of habitation. Let's all be a little more careful with fire this year and save our mountains and streams.

Ocean fishing is starting off well, barracuda, bass, bonita and mackerel are reported all along the coast from San Diego to Santa Monica, and some of the live-bait boats are coming in loaded.

Barge fishing is picking up, and corbina and spotfin croakers are reported at many of the southern beaches. Mackerel, halibut and herring are being caught from all the piers.

Many anglers are planning their summer vacations into the High Sierra country. Due to the heavy snow pack on the west side of the range, pack trips will be held back until the early part of July. The season opens in district 4½ May 30, and should be very good, as the streams and lakes in the Bishop country have been heavily stocked for the past several years.

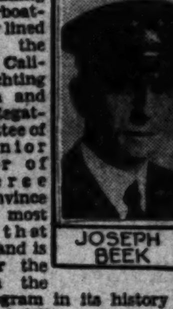
YACHTING SAILS INTO SPOTLIG

Southern California Association and Civic Regatta Committee Announce Dates for Larg Program in History of Sport

BY FRANK ROCHE

"Clear the decks mates, there is action ahead in Southern California yachting circles." A glance at the list of events both in sailing and motorboating already lined up by the Southern California Yachting Association and the Civic Regatta Committee of the Junior Chamber of Commerce should convince even the most skeptical that the Southland is going "over the top" with the biggest program in its history this summer and fall.



JOSEPH BEEK

With three clubs yet to be heard as to their programs the Southern California Yachting Association has to date carded more than twenty-five sailing and power-boat classics besides numerous minor events in both classes.

Starting with next Saturday and continuing almost every week-end until December 8-9 the yachtsmen and motorboat enthusiasts will put on a program which will be jammed with action and thrills, the Civic Regatta Committee states in its announcement.

THE HIGH SPOT

The high spot of the program will be the Southern California Yachting Association's ninth annual regatta and championships in all sailing and powerboat classes which will be staged at Santa Barbara from August 11 to the 17th. Every yachting club and powerboat organization in the Southland is expected to be represented in this classic.

While the program gets under way next Saturday with a number of sailing events over a two-day period at the California Yacht Club and at San Diego along with some hydroplane events on the Salton Sea the first event of real consequence is scheduled for Decoration Day.

On Memorial Day the season will be really ushered in when thirty-five or more yachts of both sail and power representing all of the clubs in Southern California gather at Los Angeles Harbor for a four-day squadron cruise. The underlying idea on the part of the Corinthian skippers in staging this race is to attract attention to the $15,000,000 worth of pleasure craft that sail the local waters.

SEEK SPOTLIGHT

The yachtsmen are also eager to convince the world that Southern California is ready to put on the greatest program in Olympic history in 1932. The Civic Regatta Committee points out that there isn't any other body of water in the world more suited for yachting and boating events than the blue waters along the coast of the Southland.

The first leg of the four-day squadron cruise will end at the Isthmus at Catalina Island. From Catalina the boats will sail to Keller's Shelter near Point Dume on the mainland the second day. A race over a large triangular course off Santa Monica is on the third day's program. Point Dume to Los Angeles Harbor Light, passing close to shore at Santa Monica is the fourth and last day's lap. Trophies will be awarded to the winners in the various classes on the point system. Twenty-one entries from the Southern California forty-five-foot sailing association were signed yesterday for this sailing event.

Affairs of the Week

By Juana Neal Levy

With the beginning of warm weather, the anticipation of schools closing and the younger folk returning home from various colleges and boarding schools in the East and North, society is planning for summer [illegible] and already Hotel del Coronado, which is known throughout the country as the millionaire's playground, is arranging many delightful out-door activities which will especially feature water sports as well as [illegible], tennis, golf and horseback riding parties.

[illegible] waters [illegible] Bay, [illegible] Coronado on one side, [illegible] dotted with yachts, canoes, [illegible] boats and other water craft, filled with gay parties, many of [illegible] guests from far-[illegible] States and the North, the boats cutting through the green waters of the bay—towing glistening wet boards on which figures skim across the waves.

Each week a gay party boards the motorboat Glorietta for all-day parties to the islands lying out in the ocean, returning to the hotel in time for a quick plunge in the surf before tea is served in the lounge and one rushes off to dress for dinner.

One of the attractive visitors from the East is Miss Doris Bryant, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Waldo G. Bryant of Bridgeport, Ct., and a prominent member of the younger set in her home town. Miss Bryant is enthusiastic over out-of-door sports and is frequently seen aboard the surf boards, hugely enjoying the aquaplaning. With her parents, she comes to Hotel del Coronado each year.

Miss Bryant is an ardent lover of swimming and golfing as well as being a proficient equestrienne and passes a portion of each day in out-of-door activities.

She is often joined in bathing or aquaplaning by Miss Polly Owen of Providence, R. I., who frequently gives spectators a thrill by her expert maneuvering of the board while aquaplaning. Just the other day on a surf board, she surprised occupants of the boat which was towing the boards, by quite unexpectedly riding the board while standing on her head.

Miss Dorothy Jones, attractive daughter of Mrs. Chester Jones of Dallas, Tex., and Miss Betty Edwards, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. K. Edwards of Chicago, are especially fond of a lazy morning sunbath on the warm sands of the beach beside the hotel.

Miss Edwards, also is a devotee of golf, and passes quite a bit of her time practicing her stroke on the links of the Coronado Country Club, as well as on the smaller links on the lawns of the hotel grounds in the west gardens.

Miss Edwards hopes to win one of the beautiful cups which are to be awarded the winners of the sixth annual A. B. Spreckels amateur golf tournament at the Coronado Country Club links, August 19 to 24, next.

The large trophy is an exact duplicate of the first A. B. Spreckels $1000 silver punch bowl won in 1924, and will be awarded outright to the winner of the 1929 tournament. The runner-up will receive an exact duplicate of the winner's trophy in design and workmanship, but slightly smaller, and both are equipped with gold mesh covers and stand on ebony bases.

A gold medal will be presented to low qualifier and prizes appropriate for an amateur event, which has become recognized as one of the golf classics of the country, will be given in regular flights played under handicap.

Greatly interested in the tournament is Mrs. Mary Franklin of Warren, O., who is one of the most ardent enthusiasts on the club links. She has made a host of friends at

BENEFIT GIVEN BY AUXILIARY

Affair Carries Out Old-time Custom

[Ray Huff studios]

Miss Sarah Cahill

CARRYING out a time-old custom, a benefit for the House of Good Shepherd will be given by the auxiliary, which because of present-day requirements has been changed to St. John Eude's Guild, the affair this year taking the form of a bridge benefit to be given at the Biltmore, Saturday afternoon, the 18th inst. Originally the Good Shepherd auxiliary gave a pencil drive each year, but this has been discontinued for the bridge-tea, and several other affairs will take its place.

Among the members of the younger set who is most actively working to make the bridge-tea a success is Miss Sarah Cahill, who is a student at University of California at Los Angeles and is also prominent in the campus activities at the university.

Gala Fetes in Society

the Hotel del Coronado during her recent stay and plans to remain indefinitely.

A center along the Silver Strand, which runs along the ocean front for miles, like a glistening ribbon, appeals to many of the visitors, and among the devotees of this popular sport, is Mrs. Samuel Eels, prominent young matron of Cleveland, O., who is enjoying a protracted stay in the Southland.

Mrs. Eels is fond of starting out early in the morning for a canter far along the strand from which one has a clear view of the ocean, with often a view of the great liners which come from the far North, bringing passengers into San Diego Harbor. One also has a good view of the warships and cruisers which are anchored there as well as the airplanes which fly from North Island.

Two very interesting as well as charming visitors here this summer are Miss Marjory Tallman and Miss Margaret Tallman, twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. D. N. Tallman of Wilmar, Minn., who, with their mother, are enjoying the sports which feature each day at the famous watering-place.

They frequently enjoy a swim in Glorietta Bay, but prefer the long rolling surf of the Pacific, where they pass many hours each day playing in the waves or relaxing on the warm sands.

Another delightful pastime which is a favorite at Hotel del Coronado is the bonfire and wiener bake in the evening, when a basket filled with a delicious supper is packed at the hotel, and, while it is being arranged on the sands, the fire is lighted and all sit around, telling stories, singing songs of college lilt or the latest hit in musical comedy or stage.

Tennis games are also thoroughly enjoyed at Hotel del Coronado, which has had all of the world-famous stars playing at various times, and these events are always followed by a sports ball in the great circular ballroom, followed by supper parties and informal dancing in the Silver Grill of the Casino.

In fact, every one of the beloved out-of-door activities has been featured at Hotel del Coronado, which is one of the most popular resorts in the great Southland, where beauty, wealth and fashion vie for first place on the stage of its many entertainments.

Home Again

Returning to the Southland after several months visiting in the East with her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. George Pearson in Kansas City, Mrs. Charles Modini Wood is making a visit to her daughter, Mrs. James Langford Stack, and later will visit with her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Perry Wood and her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth C. Beaton, before establishing herself permanently in the Chapman Park Hotel. Mr. and Mrs. Pearson (Mona Wood,) whose wedding was one of the brilliant events of Christmas week, 1927, are planning to come to the Coast for July and August and many lovely affairs will be given in their honor during their visit here.

For Brides-elect

As a prenuptial courtesy to two brides-elect, Miss Helen Hart entertained with a bridge party yesterday afternoon at her home in Manhattan avenue, in Hermosa Beach, the honored guests being Miss Bettie Porter, fiancee of Horatio Seymour Jones of Redlands, and Miss Olive Jones, fiancee of Ralph Edward Peylon, nephew of Mr. and Mrs. George B. Lewis of Beverly Hills. The affair also served to announce the date of Miss Hart's marriage to Richard Sloan Parrent, June 25, by means of violet corsages. Miss Hart was assisted by her mother, Mrs. Hart, and Mrs. Milo Frey and Miss Jeannette Worline. Miss Hart is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Elmer Hart of Hermosa; she graduated from the Westlake School and University of California, Los Angeles, and is affiliated with the Zeta Tau Alpha Sorority.

Guests included Mmes. George Merritt Jones, Giles S. Porter, Rex Jones, Harry Elmer Hart, Austin Gale, Charles Mahler, Weer Gatlin, Haslett Smith, Douglas Farrell, Albert D. Formal announcement is made this morning by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Henry Reid of 1216 Verdun Road of the engagement of their lovely young daughter, Miss Miriam Reid, to Cornelius Rossner, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Cornelius Rossner of Beverly Hills. The attractive bride-elect was graduated from Marlborough School and later attended University of California at Los Angeles, where she is a member of Kappa Kappa Gramma Sorority, while young Rossner also attended the University of California. No date is set as yet for the wedding, but there will be a number of beautifully appointed prenuptial affairs given in honor of this popular bride-elect before the ceremony.

Betrothal Luncheon

The engagement of Miss Jean Melville, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Melville of 1911 Hillcrest Road, to J. Calvin McDowell, was formally announced at a beautifully appointed luncheon with which Mrs. Melville entertained, the wedding to be an event of the last of June.

Lovely Affair

One of the attractive affairs of recent date was the luncheon and bridge with which Miss Ann McAlmon of North Mansfield avenue entertained at the Chevy Chase Golf Club, spring flowers in the pastel shades being combined with ferns and tulle in the decorations of the table and the guests included Mmes. George Horton, B. B. Crowel, Clyde Hyslop, G. C. Gentle, E. E. Pennington, C. R. Purcell, Bessie McAlmon, B. B. Edmonds-Owen

One of the most interesting weddings of the month was that of last Sunday when at 4 p.m. in Vermont Square Methodist Church Miss May Amelia Edmonds became the bride of Harold Patterson Owen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Starr Owen of Glencoe, Ill., the ceremony also celebrating the twenty-third wedding anniversary of the bride's parents, who were married in the same church, at the same hour twenty-three years ago, and the service for both weddings was read from the same prayer book.

Woodwardia ferns and palms formed the background for the wedding party, tall baskets filled with white lilies adding the touch of white against the greenery and myriads of candles twinkled on the altar and down the aisles lilies were fastened with ferns to the pew posts and tied with bows of broad white tulle.

The bride given in marriage by her father wore her mother's wedding gown of white Brussels net

At U. C. L. A.

With the spirits of the students lifted to a high pitch by the announcement of the Student Union given by an anonymous donor, all University affairs seem to appeal. Friday, under the auspices of the Associated Students, a beach day at the Deauville Club has been planned. Aside from these general affairs, houses are entertaining with spring formals.

Commencing the day with a delightful breakfast at the home of Miss Virginia Walther, the pledges of Alpha Phi sorority honored their senior sponsors last Sunday. After breakfast, the group adjourned to the beach home of Mrs. Mary Joclyn in Santa Monica where the afternoon was given over to swimming. Culminating the outing, tea was served in the patio of Miss Joclyn's home. Active members of Signa Kappa sorority passed Saturday night on a desert isle when the pledges of the organization staged a cannibal dinner. After eating, a search for buried treasure was conducted throughout the house, which was aptly decorated to represent an island in the South Seas.

Members and alumni of Theta Xi joined in celebrating founders' day of the fraternity at the Roosevelt Hotel Saturday evening. The organization, which was founded at Rensselaer Institute April 29, 1864, held a dinner, to which nearly 200 members were attracted in honor of its sixty-fifth anniversary.

A beach party was held by Phi Delta sorority Monday, the 6th inst. After swimming, a barbecue dinner around a beach fire was enjoyed by the guests before returning for meeting to the local chapter house.

The home of Miss Betty Winters was the scene of a formal dance given by pledges of Delta Gamma sorority in honor of the actives. A dancing contest featured the evening.

A member of Alpha Xi Delta sorority, Miss Helen Herzog, entertained with a week-end at Balboa. All sorts of aquatic sports were indulged in, the girls arriving Saturday and returning Sunday.

Farewell Luncheon

A very delightful affair was the farewell luncheon given for Mrs. Oreste Boffino recently at the Sea Breeze Beach Club by members of the Italian Women's Club of which she has been corresponding secretary.

How Much Does It Cost to Own a ?

GENERAL ELECTRIC
ALL-STEEL REFRIGERATOR

Like most things worth having in this world, the purchase of a General Electric Refrigerator may require more dollars than are conveniently spared from [illegible]. And, like all advanced or improved methods of living, modern household refrigeration has a higher first cost than the old way.

[illegible] bridges cost more than wooden ones, California homes cost more than log cabins, paved boulevards cost more than dusty [illegible]. A General Electric Refrigerator costs more, at the beginning, than the other less satisfactory substitutes.

But there is another side to the picture. Figure the food you waste through uncertain refrigeration . . . a portion of this, a bit of that, half bottles of milk and cream. Food spoilage costs seven hundred million dollars yearly in this country alone . . . something in every home.

Figure the time you waste. Any woman who does work that electricity can do for her is selling her time and strength for a few cents a day. The daily cost of operating a General Electric Refrigerator is measured in pennies.

Consider health! Dr. Frederic Damrau, writing in Popular Science Monthly, states: "Food in nine out of ten families in this country, is kept in such a way that it is a menace to their health." What is the cost in time, dollars and pain, of sickness in your family, which proper refrigeration would eliminate?

Most important of all, consider good living . . . the joy of using beautiful things . . . the pleasure in fine entertaining . . . the satisfaction of varied menus . . . true pride in making family life better.

No, the General Electric Refrigerator is not expensive, regardless of its cost. You may be surprised to learn that prices range from $227, the price of a radio, to $700 for the largest, most elaborate standard model we sell—the cost of the cheapest automobile. And, even more important, convenient payments make it easy to buy any model.

15,000 California Families already enjoy the convenience and health-guarding service of the General Electric Refrigerator. Not one of these users has ever paid a dollar for service.

The standard family size General Electric All-Steel Refrigerator, California's most popular model, is easily purchased out of income for $16.25 a month. Plan to see it now!

Send the coupon and we will be glad to mail you Clarence Ekroth's fascinating book on health and our own catalog, which will show you just what a General Electric Refrigerator means to your home and family.

Next week a group of sixteen will meet the charming visitor at a luncheon given by Mrs. Brinker at the Woman's Athletic Club. Lilacs and jonquils will be the decorative motif carrying out the orchid and yellow color scheme.

Miss McDougal was the honoree recently at a luncheon at the Pasadena Athletic Club, with Mrs. V. H. Talcott hostess.

Bartlett-Hancock

The home of Mrs. A. K. McCann, 312 North Orange street, Glendale, was the setting for the marriage of Miss Lucille Bartlett to Stanley Hancock last Saturday afternoon. Fragrant roses, sweet peas and lilies were banked in the rooms. Floral archways of white marked the path to the altar beneath a canopy of white blossoms. Miss Elizabeth J. Howard of Newark, N. J., played the wedding marches, and the ceremony was read by Rev. W. E. Edmonds in the presence of forty guests. The bride wore a gown of white satin with a tulle veil held in place by clusters of orange blossoms and carried a shower bouquet of pink roses and lilies of the valley. Her maid of honor, Miss Juanita Savage, was gowned in peach-colored satin and carried harmonizing sweet peas. Little Dawn McCann, wearing a white lace frock and pink chiffon bonnet, was flower girl, and Betty Lou Jones was ring bearer in frock of blue georgette. Dwight Mitchell of Pasadena attended the groom. Mrs. Hancock is a native of Maine and the daughter of Mrs. Grace Bartlett, who came west for the ceremony. Walsh-Ryan

Miss Mary Cecilia Walsh, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward John Walsh of 5104 Los Feliz Boulevard, became the bride of Edward Anthony Ryan, son of J. J. Ryan of Lake Forest, Ill., at an impressive service at St. Basil's Church, with Monsignor Ryan of Seattle, an old friend of the family, officiating, and Fathers Kirk and Sullivan serving as deacons.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of ivory satin, long and in the princess mode, with circular skirt. Over this was worn a chiffon coat, her veil of rare old lace, falling from a cap-shaped headdress, caught with orange blossoms. Her only jewelry was a gift from the bridegroom, an exquisite pendant of diamonds and sapphires. The bride carried, in addition to her bouquet of bride's roses and lilies of the valley, an ivory prayer book, a gift of Monsignor Ryan.

Her only attendant was Miss Tess Nichols, who wore a gown of yellow organdie with a large bow of colors shading from delicate orchid to old green. A picture hat of yellow horsehair was worn, and a bouquet of iris and jonquils was carried.

George Kirsel served as best man and the ushers, who preceded the bridal party down the church aisle, were Everett Crosby and Anthony Arena.

The bride was graduated from the Sacred Heart Academy in Seattle and received her bachelor-of-arts

Bridge was the pastime. A midnight supper was served after the shower presents had been opened. Miss Wessling's favorite color of lavender was carried out in the decorations. Dinner Party

The Chinese Room of the Mary Louise was chosen for an unusually smart dinner party Saturday evening, the 4th inst., when Miss Betty Wilson, the attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Wilson of 285 Muirfield Road, entertained several of her schoolmates at Marlborough and their escorts. The long dinner table was adorned with roses, daffodils, iris and other spring blooms, while tall tapers in pastel shades, place cards and clever dance programs as favors were attractive features of the decorations. Those included were the Misses Mary Hargrave, Rose Campbell, Katherine Huston, Mary Marsh, Catherine Clift, Beatrice Seaton and Messrs. Jesse Wilson, John Reynolds, Clarence Conlin, Robert Miller, Norman Noyes, David Roberts and Bert Leech. Following the dinner the guests attended the junior prom at Marlborough.

May Fete

The annual May fete given by Miss Grace Fulmer's School at 627 South St. Andrews Place, is to be held Saturday afternoon, the 18th inst., the entire proceeds going to the Children's Hospital.

Each year, through the efforts of the students and faculty, and the generosity of the press, enough money has been raised to endow beds—and this year every effort is being made to raise enough money to furnish an eight-bed ward on the surgical floor.

It is a particularly happy thought that even the little child in the kindergarten department is taking an active part in the fete, thereby helping to bring health and happiness and opportunity to other children less fortunate.

The spacious gardens of the school, just off Wilshire Boulevard, will be gayly decorated with flags, streamers, and colorful booths, with the May pole, the real center of affairs, around which a dance will take place as part of an elaborate program.

From 1:30 till 6 p.m. are the hours, with the program of dances, the spring operetta with more than sixty children taking part, beginning at 2 p.m.

The young women in the kindergarten primary department will have charge of the numerous attractions, among which are "The Lady With a Thousand Pockets," "Cabbage Patch," and booths where various articles may be purchased, candies, jellies, cakes, pies, etc.

As everything is donated, thanks to the Los Angeles and Hollywood merchants, grocers and bakeries, proceeds are clear.

Miss Audrey Phillips, president of the June graduates, is chairman for the affair, assisted by Miss Estelle Hills, of the February group, the chairmen of the other committees being Miss Peggy Keeler, food; Miss Beverly Esslinger, nuts; Miss Dorothy Dickinson, candy; Miss Lila Horner, "oddity shop;" Miss Ruby Doughty, popcorn; Miss Betty Carr, balloons; Miss Esme Freeman, "Cabbage Patch;" the Misses Gladys and Mildred Reutepohler, "Puppet Show;" Miss Marian Pitcher, flowers; Miss Marian Olds, rose booth; Miss Esther Fonda, tea; Miss Elka Benjamin, punch; Miss Jean Garland, ice cream and cones; Miss Betty Brown, chairs; Miss Violet Washington, sandwiches, and last but not least, the Misses Ruth Meador and Mary Fite, fortune tellers.

Mrs. Orra E. Monnette and Mrs. Amos A. Houck entertained Friday, the 3rd inst., in honor of Mrs. John Simpson of Red Oak Drive, Los Feliz Hills. Dinner Dance

The casino was arranged in cabaret style and decorated in purple and red, the fraternity colors. Sport scarfs with the fraternity crest hand-painted in the corner were presented.

During the afternoon, the guests were entertained by boating, swimming, golf, tennis, and other out-of-door sports.

The patrons and patronesses of the affair were: Mr. Leo B. Meeker and Miss Fuller, Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Ryan, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth E. Van Scoy and Dr. and Mrs. Ford.

Aviation Banquet

One of the interesting social events planned for this week at the University of Southern California is the aviation banquet to be held Wednesday evening, in the Student Union.

Acting as master of ceremonies, Prof. Earl W. Hill will be assisted in conducting the program by Lieut. Easton B. Koger and Rudolf Hirschberg, visiting professor of air law from the University of Koenigsberg, Germany.

With the exception of thirty-five invitations which have been issued to prominent aviators in this section, the banquet is restricted to aviation students at Southern California. Dick Mogle, general chairman of the banquet, is being aided in preparing the program by Prof. Earl Hill, Russell Cordy and Walter Sykes.

Other banquet committees include Joe Burcham, Walter Peck, and Shields Maxwell, publicity; Alma Griffith and Joe Burcham, decorations; Helen Taecker and Bill Herbert, entertainment; Dick Mogle, A. E. Dihel, Walter Sykes, R. Daniels and Joe Bondiman, tickets and guests.

Silver Wedding Anniversary

The silver wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Hummel, prominent in Los Angeles community, was celebrated in the form of a surprise at the home of Rabbi and Mrs. Winkler, 438 South Hobart Boulevard, Tuesday afternoon. In keeping with the occasion Rabbi Winkler performed a wedding ceremony under the canopy where were assembled the members of the board of Sinai Sisterhood of which Mrs. Rummel is past president and councelor and who planned the anniversary in the form of a surprise. Rabbi Winkler pronounced the blessing and read a resolution in which those assembled expressed felicitations and gratitude to the celebrants for their loyal services to the cause of Sinai and every worthy communal cause. Mrs. Rummel was the recipient of beautiful silver gifts from the women of the Sinai board presented by Mrs. S. Fischgrund, president, and twenty-five beautiful roses from Mrs. Winkler. After the ceremony Mrs. Winkler held a reception. Mrs. Rummel besides being councelor and past-president of Sinai Sisterhood, is past-president of the Easter Star, president of the Ladies' Auxiliary I.O.B.B., has been associated with Mrs. Lillian Goldsmith in Council work and is an active board member of the Hadassah organization.

Bridge-Buffet Supper

Bruce Heller (Madeline Gumprecht.) The host and hostess are both from U.S.C., Mr. Hicks having graduated with high honors last June, just preceding their marriage.

Unique Organization

Twelve sophomores and juniors at the University of Southern California were recently elected to Spinsters, honorary upperclass women's organization, of which Miss Muriel Heeb is president.

Selected on the basis of general campus activity and personal character, the twelve pledges are Misses Margaret Arbuthnot, Alice Colwell, Esther Burns, Eloise Elson, Altona Gileault, Dorothy Hollingsworth, Kitty Jones, Jane Lynch, Mildred Kirkpatrick, Jane Lawson, Helen Pargellis and Marion Williams.

According to the rules of the Spinster organization, any member who becomes engaged during the term of membership must entertain the entire chapter with a formal banquet, in penance for trespassing against the sacredly observed man-hating principles of the club.

Wedding Dinner

The Mary Louise was chosen as a setting for a small but charmingly appointed wedding dinner Saturday, the 4th inst., by Miss Ethel Olsen of Omaha, Neb., whose marriage to Arthur C. Williamson of Pasadena was solemnized at 4:30 p.m. in the chapel of St. John's Episcopal Church with Dr. George Davidson officiating. A large basket of bright spring flowers with blending tulle streamers richly decorated the table. The bride was gowned in a smart ensemble of black and white matching accessories and her flowers were a corsage of roses and lilies of the valley. Converse of South Orange avenue, as the setting for an elaborate affair recently the occasion also serving to formally announce the betrothal of the charming young hostess to Curtis Weeks of Hobart Boulevard, Hollywood.

The table represented the sea, with a white organdie cloth over blue, on which fishes and sea monsters were swimming, Spanish galleons alternating with bowls of California poppies and bachelors buttons adding an effective touch while the place cards featured galleons in full sail. The news was told by means of the names of the betrothed on the sails of the boats.

MUCH INTRIGUE AT SANTA CRUZ

Well-Oiled Machine Set Up at Federation Meet

Spiritual Side to Majority of Convention Talks

Tone of Address, Politics of Delegates Differ

BY MYRA NYE

SANTA CRUZ, May 14.—A perfectly well-oiled convention machine, gas supplied to the limit, is set up here in Santa Cruz for the California Federation of Women's Clubs. Well-trained women capable executives, are going hither and yon, directing trips, leading in convention songs, making complete efficient reports, introducing as chairmen of departments notable speakers who frequently upset all their prearranged views as to work of their departments.

If this is from a man all is well. Welford Beaton may arraign the women for accepting Will Hays as the "Czar of the Movies" and even more passionately tear Hays to pieces. Dr. Walter Morritt may make either radicalism or conservatism shine as the high mark, as he did in his address "Mussolini and the New Italy." But the women to meet the approval of the convention body must give a "spiritual message" cut—if anything spiritual can be cut—from the convention pattern of goodness. This Mrs. Clara Bryant Heywood did as chairman of the international relations committee in her address on "World Peace, the Divine Task," which was excellent, authentic, firsthand for she was at the Geneva League of Nations meet. She plead for world peace which everyone wants, of course.

ORGANIZATION EXCELLENT

After the first day, one cannot fail to be impressed with the excellence of the organization, its efficiency, for conventional action, but its limitation on anything new and its need for real work to do. Perhaps this is the reason for the reorganization council voted upon unanimously the first day of the convention.

There is an insistence by the leaders—Mrs. W. W. Green, the president being one of the finest examples of spiritual leaders with the gift also of practicability—upon a spiritual phase to all reports and addresses. Mrs. Green chose as the convention theme "Power of Knowledge, "if you have knowledge let others light their candles by it."

A paradox is that from the district originating the greatest opposition to revision of by-laws and choice of officers comes the greatest spiritual message. This was given in an address by Mrs. Josephine Seamen of San Diego with her topic the convention theme. It was a truly remarkable presentation of fine philosophy, a plea for courageous conduct and altruistic thought. This in spite of the fact that the southern district had juggled constantly with the desires of the rest of the district leaders.

Sunday it was said that Mrs. Henry De Nyse of Riverside would contend with Mrs. W. W. Slayden of Los Angeles for the presidency. Monday morning it was said that Mrs. De Nyse would be the only candidate for the vice-presidency. Monday afternoon it was said that Mrs. De Nyse had retired from the vice-presidential race in favor of Miss Seaman and would herself be on the State board as State trustee.

A southern woman, dainty little Mrs. Wing, was made chairman of the nominating committee. But this evidently was considered too much "southern," everyone liking and securely confident in Mrs. Wing, but she was supplanted by Mrs. Dickson from the north.

SMOOTH ELECTION

Then the election proceeded with surprising smoothness and unanimity with the result known now to you all. At any rate Mrs. Slayden is president and Miss Seaman expressed to me her personally great admiration of Mrs. Slayden and her desire to help her in every way as vice-president.

Nothing funny happens in this convention. Everything is serious to the nth degree. Amusing? Well, yes, perhaps, if you happen to know the inside story.

But State federation quo vadis?

We miss the twenty-seven clubs and their leaders from the Los Angeles district—those clubs that have withdrawn and their strong capable leaders.

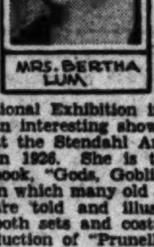
ETCHINGS TO BE SHOWN



MRS. BERTHA LUM

Again in the midst of a host of friends in Southern California is Mrs. Bertha Lum, one of the most distinguished women in world art circles, who but recently returned to the United States after two years in Peking, China.

Mrs. Lum, who is most noted for her wood block prints, water colors and decorative screens, was the only woman exhibitor at the Tokio International Exhibition in 1912, and had an interesting showing of her work at the Stendahl Art Galleries here in 1926. She is the author of a book, "Gods, Goblins and Ghosts," in which many old Japanese legends are told and illustrated, designed both sets and costumes for a production of "Prunella," by Granville Barker and Laurence Housman, given at the Peking Institute of Fine Arts, and attracted much attention through her war work in San Francisco during the World War.

Hailing originally from the Middle West, the artist now maintains homes in Peking and San Francisco, having also a studio in San Francisco's Chinatown, and is making tentative plans toward the establishment of a studio in Hollywood. With her younger daughter, Miss Bettina Lum, she is visiting with friends in Pasadena, while another daughter, Miss Balliet Lum, has remained in the China home. An exhibit of Mrs. Lum's work, to include some ten or twelve of her most striking compositions, is being arranged for the Montmartre Cafe in Hollywood, to open Wednesday.

A gold medal for distinguished work was awarded Mrs. Lum during the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

FREMONT CHAPTER TO SELECT OFFICERS

The youngest Los Angeles chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, Gen. Fremont, will elect officers during an all-day meeting Wednesday in the home of the secretary, Mrs. George Earle, of 1510 Barrington avenue, Sawtelle. Taggart automatically becomes Regent.

TWO EVENTS TO FEATURE CLUB WORK

Los Angeles Ebell Will Put on Bridge Tea, Fashion Show Benefits

Two benefits appear on the social calendar of Los Angeles Ebell for May, the first to be a bridge tea given at 2:30 p.m. Tuesday by the lives and times department. This is a group of the younger women, many of them former Ebell Juniors, who last year organized the section as a bridge between Junior and regular membership. Mrs. Dudley Frank, now serving as press chairman, was the first curator of the department, filling that office during the organization period.

Mrs. Raymond Tremaine is the present curator, under whose leadership the section has progressed until the adoption of two scholarship girls has been made possible. It is to obtain funds for this work that the benefit tea will be given, with Mrs. Richard Raymond Gunter as chairman.

The second and larger of the benefits will be an elaborate fashion show and bridge-luncheon at the clubhouse Friday, the 24th inst., with Mrs. William John Wilson as chairman. Afternoon gowns, sports togs and dressings for summer evenings will be displayed by Bullock's, with Mme. Jeffine directing, a musical setting for the display also being provided by the department store. Two fortune tellers, in addition, will recount the past and forecast the future.

With decorations carrying out a springtime motif, tables will be placed in the patio as well as in the dining-room and tea-room. Members of the lives and times department will have charge of ushering an dseating, co-chairman being Mrs. Tremaine and Mrs. Loren Babcock, and reservations may be secured from them and other members of committees.

Members of the benefits and entertainments committees who will assist Mrs. Wilson are Mrs. Robert L. Burns, assistant chairman; Mrs. Robert M. Hartwell, chairman of tickets; Mrs. R. C. Chaffin, chairman of hostesses; Mrs. Roy Stevens, chairman of decorations; Mrs. Hosmer C. Graham, Mrs. Ray T. Moore, Mrs. Colin Whittier, Mrs. Robert Hardy, Mrs. Alexander Bennett Cook, president of Ebell, and members of the executive board, who will assist in receiving the guests.

During the film luncheon to precede the program, Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld will describe the synchronization of music with pictures, and Ray Perkins, director and song writer, will speak of his work in the theme song departments of Warner Brothers and First National studios, playing his own accompaniments.

A list of honored guests for the affair includes Miss Pearl Eaton, Al St. John, Donald Reed, Roland Drew, James Marcus, Jeanette Loff and several Wampas Baby Stars. Mrs. William P. Dawson, film chairman, will preside.

The commodious rooms and wide porticos of this recently completed and elegantly furnished mansion will lend themselves charmingly for the occasion. WEDDING EVENT OF LAST SUNDAY

Parents Also Observe Anniversary

[Bay Huff studios]

Mrs. Harold Patterson Owen

ONE of the loveliest of the season's weddings was that of last Sunday, when Miss Kary Amelia Edmonds, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Davis Edmonds, became the bride of Harold Patterson Owen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Starr Owen of Glencoe, Ill., the wedding also celebrating the twenty-third wedding anniversary of the bride's parents.

The bride wore her mother's wedding gown and the ceremony was read by Rev. Clarence O. Kimball from the prayer book used at that ceremony.

The ceremony took place in Vermont Square Methodist Church at 4 p.m. this being the same hour as that of her parents' wedding years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Owen are honeymooning aboard the S.S. Virginia en route to New York by way of the Panama Canal, then on up the Hudson River and will visit in Buffalo, Washington, D. C., and Cleveland, where they will make their future residence. They will be at home after July 1, at 3733 Hampshire Road, Cleveland Heights.

In Realm of Society

Mrs. Rachel Copeland of North Hudson street, who has chosen June 16 as the date for her wedding with Osmund Gayne Seltzer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Seltzer of Los Angeles. The ceremony will be read in the Westgate Masonic lodgerooms, 500 guests being bidden.

Among the many lovely affairs planned in honor of Miss Copeland was the miscellaneous shower with which Miss Joy Baker of North Hawthorne avenue entertained. Miss Baker is to be in the bridal entourage. A shower honoring this popular bride-elect will be given today by Miss Kay Prusky and Mrs. Joe Dulkart. Miss Prusky will assist as maid of honor at the wedding.

Bridge Club Entertains

Mrs. David Elliott (Mildred Young) was the special guest of honor at the meeting of her bridge club, the affair being in the nature of a luncheon being given at the Mary Louise, spring flowers in a riot of color centering the luncheon table, while unique place cards marked the covers for Mrs. Elliott,

OW ASTOR FORTUNE GREW

Book Tells Vividly Story of Founding, Growth of Merchant Prince's Wealth

BY THOMAS F. FORD

JACOB ASTOR. Landlord of New York. By Arthur D. Howden
J. B. Lippincott, Philadelphia.

In this masterly biography of John Jacob Astor the author has found field for picturesque narrative. In it we have a panoramic of America developing from crude pioneer beginnings to a rich with factories springing up everywhere and great cities emerging at strategic points.

tions of the present-day aggregations of capital known by that term, they were as far-reaching in their ramifications and as completely organized and pyramided as any of the giant organizations of today.

While fur was his major industry, on which his huge fortune was founded, it was not the only one in which he played an important part. Tea, that magical product that laid the foundation of so many of the early-day fortunes, called to him. At one time he was one of the giants in the China trade. A cargo of tea entering New York had to pay an enormous duty. But it sold readily at auction, often giving the owner 50 per cent on his venture. At that time the Treasury Department permitted the merchant to pay the duty in six, twelve and eighteen months, so that the merchant was practically made a present of a working capital of the amount of the duty, interest free, for the period lapsing between the time of paying the duty and the arrival of the cargo. Astor and his competitors took full advantage of this and it is recorded that the Treasury lost more than $250,000,000 as a result of this leniency, for many of the more irresponsible speculators took advantage of the government and allowed their bonds to default.

John Jacob Astor, fur king, father of the trust, apostle of empire and landlord of New York, died March 8, 1848, leaving a fortune estimated at between $25,000,000 and $30,000,000. His will, which bequeathed less than $2,000,000 to public institutions, disposed of this vast estate to his various descendants of the first, second, third and fourth degrees. The Astor estate today is estimated at $500,000,000.

The author is to be congratulated on his work. This is a fine piece of biographical writing. But it is more than that. It is, in addition to being the account of a remarkable man's life, a very clear and vivid picture of the first sixty-four years of our national existence.

TALKIE SONGS NOT EASY

Writers of Lyrics for Spoken Movies Cannot Wait for Inspiration; Must Produce to Order

[Oscar Levant and Sidney Clare, song writers for radio pictures, have compiled some interesting facts about the new technique of motion picture song writers which may be of help to those who would compose.]

There was a time when the aspiring song writer, courted by the musical muse, rushed to his rented piano in a hall bedroom, and labored and sweated over the keys through the wee sma' hours until he had brought forth a new popular number—maybe!

That was inspiration!

But now the song writer has gone into conference. His conferees are motion-picture magnates.

Instead of waiting for inspiration to move him on any one of a thousand different tunes and themes, he sits down with producers, directors and dialogue writers, and with them picks out the sequence of a screen script that should be embellished with song.

Once the scenes are picked, they next decide the type of song to be created.

When that is decided, all the song writer has to do is to create the song. Simple, what?

No more can he sit placidly by awaiting inspiration.

The term "theme song" has become as well known as the word "movies" itself.

As indicated by the expression, a motion-picture song must capture the theme of the feature with which it is identified—not only in lyrics, but in tune as well.

In musical comedy, songs were composed for situations. Some might be commercial, and some might not. If a song held particular promise, an entire situation might be built around it.

In motion pictures, however, the film is the thing. The story comes first and the song, to be efficient, must be incidental. Of course, if a number appears strikingly potential, the dialogue in a given sequence might be changed to conform with the piece. In most cases, though, the song merely illustrates the story.

Because they think in terms of dialogue and story, talking-picture executives are apt to think lyrics before they think tunes. In other words, there may be certain "lines" or bits of dialogue that suggest that they should be incorporated into a theme song.

The song writer knows, however, that the tune must always come first. Unless a lyric writer knows composition, it is very difficult to adapt a strain to words. The procedure runs in the other direction—the words must be fitted to the tune.

Where there are some songs in a musical comedy that may never have a popular appeal, but are incorporated in the show to bring out a situation, the motion-picture tune should be one that will be hummed and whistled by the millions who see the "talkie." From the viewpoint of the trade, the song must help to "sell" the picture to the public. If the number thus aids the picture, the picture will help sell sheet music and records of the song.

Song writing for motion pictures has this point in common with composing for musical comedies—that the rendition of the song by the members of the cast will largely determine its success or failure.

There is no particular type of song that must be followed in pictures. Successful theme songs have included waltzes, fox-trots, tangoes and one-steps.

It appears that a "one-song" picture is destined to pass. From now on, with song writers as permanent members of studio staffs, there will be several songs in the course of a single feature.

A good love song stands a better chance than any other type of piece. A love song is a love song the world over, and, after all, motion pictures are concerned with romance.

At the present time, composers and lyric writers are striving to avoid long words. They are trying to have lyrics carry nothing but monosyllables, as far as possible. As perfect as sound recording has become they are not taking needless chances. Similarly, they are trying to avoid words ending in "s" and any other final syllables that may cause a hissing sound.

It is more important than ever before that the tune and the lyrics should fit well together. An improperly placed song not only involves an investment of music publishing, but carries the additional hazard that it may affect the success of a picture costing hundreds of thousands of dollars.

BOWL TO BE PUT UNDER NEW POLICY

Plans for Season Provide for More Soloists, Fewer Conductors

More soloists, fewer conductors! Such are the new season plans for the Bowl. Announcement two weeks ago of the pruning down of the directorial family tree to Bernardino Molinari, Eugene Goossens and Bruno Walter has occasioned swirls and eddies of comment in Los Angeles music circles.

"We are about to announce our full quota of soloists and special attractions for the impending season—and there will be more of them than have appeared in conjunction with the orchestra at any previous season, with the possible exception of the original one," said Mr. Toberman, vice-president of the Bowl association.

"I might add that if justification other than an effort to improve standards were necessary in making this change of policy and in reverting in a general way to that of the early years of Bowl history, it is to be found in the striking fact that this great institution wound up the initial season of its existence with a profit. Anyone conversant with the history of musical enterprises on a vast public scale understands the significance of that. It has been the common history of such of these undertakings which have survived that they have faced many years of deficits before achieving financial stability."

VAN DYCK MEMORIAL UNVEILED NEAR GRAVE

A memorial to Sir Anthony Van Dyck was recently unveiled in the Painters' Corner of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, on the 330th anniversary of the artist's birth, reports the London Times. The memorial is a framed tablet inclosed in an architectural design and surmounted by a bust of Van Dyck. It was designed by Mervyn Macartney and executed by Henry Poole, R. A. The site selected is near the graves of Van Dyck, Reynolds, Turner, Hunt, Sir Christopher Wren and many presidents of the Royal Academy.

LIBRARY OF GRAPHIC ART CELEBRATES

Formal Opening Next Week Accompanied by Addresses of Notables

The formal opening of the new Graphic Arts Library will be held on Tuesday the 14th inst. continuing to Saturday the 18th inst., inclusive, on the two top floors of the Printing Center Building, Maple avenue near Pico. The enterprise is a realization of the vision of A. L. Scoville, well-known in the field of the graphic arts throughout America.

The main purpose of this library is to bring to hand the greatest examples of art and craftsmanship that are today being given to the world by leaders in the graphic arts, including every character for the conveyance of knowledge in picture and printed word. The finest specimens of catalogue, magazine, scenic folders, printing, lithographing, engraving and bookmaking are here shown.

The library contains special rooms, alcoves, council chambers and lecture and banquet halls, each named for some outstanding artist or promoter of today. Prominent lecturers in the field of the graphic arts from various sections of the country have promised to appear in lectures and demonstrations of the achievements in every branch of the arts.

The following program of exercises has been arranged: Tuesday evening as graphic evening, 7:30 o'clock, Harry Spencer Stuff, chairman. Speakers will discuss printing, typography, lithography, advertising, typefounding, paper, supplies, machinery, catalogues, bookbinding, ruling, steel and copperplate, signs, writing, stamps and stencils.

Photographic evening, the 16th inst., at 7:30 o'clock. John S. McCune, chairman: Cinema, photography, telegraphy, rotogravure, telephotography, stenography, painting and all the reflective arts.

Sister States and cities, Judge Henry H. Rolapp, chairman: Mayor John F. Bowman, Salt Lake City; Mayor George E. Cryer, Los Angeles; Haywood H. Hunt, San Francisco; Dr. James E. Talmage.

THEATER HAS EARPHONES

With the advent of the talking pictures, many patrons with impaired hearing have registered protests against the "talkies" and have expressed themselves as in favor of the silent pictures.

In order that the talking picture might continue to entertain the theater patrons whose hearing is impaired, Messrs. M. A. Tauber and Bernie Loper, operators of the Gateway Theater, Glendale, have conducted numerous experiments in order that the partially deafened might hear as well as see talking pictures. Last Wednesday afternoon in the Gateway Theater, the first test was conducted with temporary installations and equipment made in connection with talking-picture apparatus, previously installed in the theater.

The demonstration was given especially for Mrs. Jane K. Bigelow, vice-president of the Los Angeles League for the Hard of Hearing, and several members of the club.

In commenting on the experiment, Mrs. Bigelow said: "It was wonderful, and since hearing all of the dialogue as well as seeing the picture, I must admit that the talking pictures are more entertaining than some of the silent pictures of the past. Given the proper equipment in the theaters whereby the talking pictures may be enjoyed by the person of imperfect hearing, there would be no protest on the part of the large numbers of handicapped patrons throughout the country. We certainly want to thank the members of the Gateway Theater for an interesting afternoon entertainment."

Speaking of the experiment, Mr. Loper declared: "We installed in the Gateway Theater a microphone stationed directly in front of the speakers located on the stage and ran it through an amplifier contacting a series of head sets worn by those of impaired hearing who are witnessing the picture. Various stages of deafness required the installation of shock coils on each head set permitting the adjustment of each individual set to the volume necessary for the individual. I hope in the future to have all our theaters equipped with a sufficient number of head-set outlets in order that our Glendale patrons with impaired hearing can continue to enjoy the entertainment qualities of our theater screens."

National Hearing Week has been observed in Los Angeles throughout the present week and will conclude today, with open house and tea from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. at the clubrooms, 2026 West Ninth street. The public is invited.

FROM PITCHING TO MOVIES

How Fred Newmeyer Came to California With Lame Arm and Became Famous as Director

BY SPEED KENDALL

A baseball pitcher came to California in 1912 to pick oranges. "Bonesetter" Reese of Youngstown, O., famous in baseball circles, dispatched him to the Southland because his left flipper went bad on him.

FRED NEWMEYER

Reese thought that if he came out here to reach for oranges the resultant exercise might improve his left arm. But this baseball pitcher soon discovered it wasn't any fun and besides he didn't want to become a champion orange picker, anyway. Furthermore, he saw the handwriting on the wall and knew his baseball days were over. So he gave up both.

It might seem a little strange to be discussing the great American game off the sporting page, but all of this is to explain why Fred Newmeyer, more familiarly known to his friends as "Bugs," happened to become connected with the motion-picture business. Now he is one of its most successful directors, establishing an enviable record in silent pictures and producing a sensation for his first talkie.

ALMOST AN ENGINEER

Newmeyer confessed the orange-picking episode is indirectly responsible for his career in filmland, but to Hal Roach, the comedy producer, he awards the plush-lined bathtub for giving him his start. To begin with, Newmeyer's late father, a coal mine operator of Colorado, had big plans for his boy. In fact, Fred was all slated to be a mining engineer.

The motion-picture business in 1912 of course, was in its infancy and Newmeyer looked to this new industry for a living. It was a slim living to begin with, he admits, for he started as an extra and in those days the atmospheric talent got little more than enough to buy their ham and eggs and to keep one shirt clean.

Things didn't go so well with Fred as an actor. He didn't know just why, but finally when Roach and Harold Lloyd were making "Sampson and Delilah" at the old Universal lot at Sunset and Gower, he got a job as second assistant director at $20 per. That was pretty good loot then, for Otis Turner, the topnotcher at that time was getting only $150 per.

"Although Roach gave me my start in pictures, it is a strange thing that he razzed me constantly," Newmeyer asserted laughingly. "'You're the most terrible actor in the joint,' he would tell me. Why I took it from him I never knew. Guess it was on account of my stomach. Well, anyhow, we started out on location one day. I was to get $5 for working.

ROACH WAS A "RAZZER"

"They loaded a flock of extras in a bus and started out for the location. Roach began razzing me again, repeating his compliments on my acting ability. He noticed that it disturbed me and he made it all the worse. I was sulking in my seat, sore at being the goat for the whole party, when he asked:

"'Don't you like it?'

"No, I told him.

"Roach ordered the driver to stop the bus. He kicked me out make-up and all and I had to walk all the way back home.

"That incident easily could have been the turning point in my motion-picture career but I guess it's like everything else that is fascinating. I couldn't get out of it. I wandered about the studios and finally landed work at the Fox lot. I got a job as a blackface in Henry Lehrman's "Roaring Lions on the Midnight Express." But when the lions got a little bit rough I thought it was time to quit again.

"I don't know what possessed me to do it, but I paid Roach a visit. He asked me if I could make up for a sea-dog. I was fairly good at make-up so when I returned as Neptune, Hal told me if I would stick around the lot for a year he might give me something good to do.

"For some reason I stuck around until one day when Roach almost knocked me for a loop. He called me to his office, handed me a sheet of paper and told me to go out and make a picture. In those days the scenarios were written on one piece of paper for a one-reeler.

"Snub Pollard was the headline attraction for the picture. It all scared me to death. I told Hal that

LIGHT SHED ON SOUND PICTURES

First "Talkie" Film Shown Here in 1910

Early Experience Resulted in Decided Flop

Synchronization Struggle Ended in Failure

BY WILLIAM HAMILTON CLINE

The silent movies, long "in their infancy," having discovered that they are really half a century old—dating their origin from an experiment made in Palo Alto that long ago—let's throw a little light on the antiquity of the latest phase of the flickers, now creating a furore in the industry—the talkies. As a matter of fact, they're not so new as some folks would have you think—not by any means.

The first movies, made in 1878, were achieved on a race track at Palo Alto where a series of cameras were planted, with a string from the shutter of each stretched across the course. A trotter broke each string and snapped each shutter as he went along, and the series of pictures, flicked rapidly, showed the equine racing—and proved that all four feet were off the ground at one time, which was the reason for taking the views, and the only reason. The "movie" angle was just overlooked, that's all, till Edison made the idea into a business and thence evolved the movie of today.

I don't know who added the "talkie" feature first, but I do know that about 1910, possibly earlier, E. A. (Pop) Fischer sunk a lot of money presenting the first talkies in new presenting the first talkies in Los Angeles—and they were called "talking pictures" then, as now.

"Pop" had a musical comedy theater in San Francisco before the 'quake and fire, and used to present the old Weber and Fields shows, with Kolb and Dill in the original parts. They were great shows for that day, and "Pop" made a fortune. Then the disaster, and he was well nigh wiped out. He came to Los Angeles, opened a little musical comedy theater, the Princess, in First, near Main, and rapidly worked back. Out of that small playhouse came many of the best known "coast defenders" of the early century years, by the way; it lived till the city took over the site for the City Hall.

BUYS TALKIE RIGHTS

"Pop" was a keen, shrewd German; a natural-born showman. He early put pictures into his Princess show. Then somebody evolved the first so-called talkie and "Pop" got wind of them, went east and bought the rights. He rented a storeroom in Spring street, next to the Angelus, covered it with electric lights, put down a tile sidewalk in which "talking pictures" shouted forth, and opened up. Then he took the prize flop of his career. The talkies wouldn't talk; they were dumber than the proverbial oyster; something was wrong; nobody ever discovered what. "Pop" lost a heap of money, and finally gave up the ghost. For years, only memories and "talking picture" lettering the sidewalk reminded Angelenos that such things ever were dreamed.

However the ghost, like that of

NATION'S SCULPTURE SHOWN

Tonnage and Quality Compete for Visitors' Attention in Exhibit at San Francisco

BY ARTHUR MILLIER

The colossal exhibition of contemporary American sculpture, which opened April 27 for six months at the California Palace of the Legion of Honor, San Francisco, offers the West an unparalleled cross-section view of the national achievement, presenting 1327 exhibits which occupy sixteen galleries and the forecourt of the building besides a section of the adjoining grounds.

This is the largest gathering of American sculpture ever brought together in one place. The exhibition, arranged by the National Sculpture Society of New York, was made possible by an unsolicited gift of $100,000 from Archer Huntington of New York, son of the late Collis P. Huntington and husband of Anna Hyatt Huntington, noted sculptress.

That the exhibition will stimulate a wider popular interest in sculpture would seem a foregone conclusion. Whether it will aid public taste remains on the knees of the gods. How many visitors to these crowded galleries will be able to sift the small quantity of grain from the mass of chaff?

Chaff is not quite the word, for it is a peculiarity of our sculpture that the heavier it is the worse it looks. And the present exhibition at San Francisco wears a terrific tonnage of memorials—war, Lincoln, Washington and others—like so many millstones about its neck, and they are almost without exception very bad sculpture.

Add to this the acres of pseudo-Greek confections in plaster and bronze, the majority of the animals and portraits, and the mass of the exhibition is accounted for. But sometimes only one or two in a gallery, sometimes many more, there are here quite a number of fine works which make the exhibition something more than a mammoth display of plaster platitudes.

But the visitor must work to find them, for the National Sculpture Society's accent is decidedly on the platitudes. Thus one finds a whole room devoted to Daniel Chester French, Lorado Taft's vapid Lincoln and Coppini's pompous Washington flanking the portal of the palace, but looks in vain for even a photograph of George Gray Barnard's "Lincoln." Jacob Epstein, easily the most vital exhibitor, is not illustrated in the handsome book, "Contemporary American Sculpture," which contains the biographies of the 342 sculptors represented and about 150 illustrations; and sculptors like Elie Nadelman and Maurice Sterne have only one small work each in the showing. Archipenko but two, while Gaston Lachaise and Ralph Stackpole do not appear at all.

This is not always the society's fault. All artists were invited to submit works to its jury. But the tone of the advance publicity given out by Adolph A. Weinman, president of the society, so patronized nonacademic sculpture that many an original worker was prejudiced from the beginning and sent nothing.

SOLDIERS AND GODS

It is human to believe in our own brand of work and thought, and, however disinterested the sculpture society officials may have imagined themselves to be, the exhibition they have assembled in San Francisco is in effect an attempt to convince the public, by weight and numbers, that American monumental sculpture is a thriving, authentic art. Evidently it is thriving, as the innumerable "Columbias," holding everything from swords and palm branches to ship's lanterns, and the graceless likenesses of "unknown soldiers," to say nothing of the countless Greek deities, amply attest. But the mass of these things offer us allegory, correct measurements, bulk, illustration, technique, sentiment, baggy trousers, anything and everything except sculptural art.

For this last-named product one must, with few exceptions, ignore the pressure of the heavyweights and often the famous names, and concentrate on the smaller works. My own discovery here is that, among the welter of laughing frog babies, dancing fauns, "Awakenings," elephants, eagles, buffaloes and what-nots, which come in all sizes, the simpler, direct stone carvings by the younger generation of sculptors hold out a very real hope for the future of American sculpture, the great mass of which lags behind painting back in the days of "Washington Crossing the Delaware."

Emotion is the power of art, thought guides its application; and, in the case of sculpture, certainly, form is the resultant product. The mass of contemporary sculpture—

NEW REVELATIONS IN RECORDS

Interest Aroused by Pressings of "El Amor Brujo," Bruno Walter's Schumann, McCormack's Schubertina, Bach by Bauer and Yehudi's Latest

BY ISABEL MORSE JONES

The rise in music recording mounts higher with each succeeding month, and is pushed forward by the renewed interest of the public, by the radio broadcasting of records and by the focusing of the world mind on sound pictures. New developments in the reproducing machines can be confidently expected within the next few months for half the inventors in the country are trying to make them more perfect.

With the beautiful examples available through the phonograph at every crossroads, there should be a just, precise, appreciation of phrasing and an eloquence of musical expression among the students of today that has not been known before. Such a "simple?" number as Schubert's "Ave Maria," for instance, could be analyzed from John McCormack's Victor record and a new beauty of interpretation realized. This new record of an old favorite is the finest so far. An accompaniment of strings and chorus adds to its deeply spiritual effect. The Schubert "Serenade" sung by McCormack is on the other side and it completes a valuable record. The harp and choral accompaniment adds immeasurably to its appeal. McCormack sings the "Serenade" in his best voice. What maid could resist "Yield to Me My Heart" as he sings it in this beloved "Serenade?"

Another record of the Schubert group issued this month by the Victor company, calls attention to Nos. 2, 5 and 7 of the "Moments Musicales." They are played by the Victor orchestra, directed by Nathaniel Schilkret. For good taste, finished performance and exceptional horn playing the record is unusual. "The Hurdy-Gurdy Man" with its sadness and Schubert's "Farewell" are recorded by McCormack on the other side.

STOKOWSKI'S TSCHAIKOWSKY

The Columbia company presented Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony conducted by Stokowski and using the Philadelphia orchestra on the masterworks series this past month. In it lies the genius of Stokowski for bringing out the structure of a great work and for setting in relief the important ideas the composer meant to be emphasized. This is his gift and few conductors, alas, have it in anything like an equal degree.

Another masterwork to be recorded by this company is Smetana's "Trio" in G minor, the one with the splendid piano part. It is played by the Malkin Trio, an organization little known in the West perhaps, but well equipped to interpret the classics. There is an especially good 'cello opening of the trio played by Joseph Malkin and the tone and beauty of the entire work makes it well worth having.

Yehudi Menuhin has made two more records before leaving for Europe. They are a "Prayer" from Handel's "Te Deum" and a Scotch pastorale by Gustave Saenger. The Handel number is notable for its noble tone, a Menuhin characteristic, and although the arrangement could be better, Yehudi's sweetness and innate taste comes through. The Scotch melody is a deliberate and passionate song played with real feeling.

Another celebrity record by the Victor company was Galli-Curci's singing of "Solveig's Song," by Grieg. It is vocally bad. The tones are hollow and the middle register very white. Still, she is too fine an artist not to have some redeeming tones. The reverse side is given to "Lo, the Gentle Lark" and one concludes that the diva might better sing in person. Vocal faults are too apparent on record.

The Victor pressing of the temple scene from "Aida" sung by Ezio Pinza and the Metropolitan chorus is very fine. The rich voice of an unannounced soprano adds to its beauty. Pinza will be remembered by those who enjoyed his performances with the Los Angeles opera last year. In this record he is in fine voice. His fervent singing is a joy because of his youth and strength, and the finale is magnificent.

POPULAR SINGERS

Gigli makes two recordings for the Victor company this month, "Santa Lucia," sung with an attractive abandon and "Voice of the Night," in which he expresses the true Latin feeling.

John Charles Thomas has made a Brunswick record of "Rio" and "Nichavo," in which the male magnetism of these rollicking ballads is rampant. A delightful "Pierrette," by Chaminade, with gay rhythms and sweet Swedish folk song, both played by the Heerman Trio, is recorded by the same company.

Some of the new pressings by the Brunswick Company are to be commended for light summer listening. "Herbertiana," "White Acacia," "Petite Causerie," are all easy to listen to. More serious effort is recorded in their Scriabine Etude and "Rush Hour in Hongkong," by Chasins. They are ultramodern piano works played by Ignace Hilsberg and are contributions to the movement. The Etude is remarkably melodic and the picturesque Chinese opus has a rhythmical march opening and a chopstick finale, developed after amusing embroideries.

INSTITUTE COMBINES WITH OPERA

Merger Announced of Important Philadelphia Music Interests

What is probably the greatest single move ever taken in the direction of adequate operatic training for American singers is seen in the announcement last week of the Curtis Institute of Music that it had affiliated with the Philadelphia Grand Opera Company. The ends of both of these musical organizations will be adequately served by the merger. The resources of the Curtis Institute, endowed in the sum of $12,500,000 by Mrs. Edward Bok, will enable the opera company to more than double its performances next season. The facilities of the company, which for three years has provided a high standard of opera, will enable the artist students of the institute to gain practical experience that has hitherto been obtainable only in Europe.

The reorganization of the Philadelphia Grand Opera Company places Mrs. Edward Bok at the head of the board of directors. Mrs. William C. Hammer retains the post of artistic director, which she has held since the organization of the company. As evidence of the high standard of performances promised Philadelphia for next season, negotiations are under way for the engagement of such artists as Mary Garden, Dusolina Giannini and John Charles Thomas for principal roles.

NEW YORK VOICE SPECIALIST HERE

Alice E. Lawrence

Alice E. Lawrence, voice specialist of New York City, is now in Los Angeles, to remain until October or longer.

Besides the customary private teaching Mrs. Lawrence specializes in a twelve-leson course, which she calls "Mind and Voice,"—bringing out the voice in singing or speaking, freed from physical effort. This course is given in classes of four students—each lesson one hour, and also privately if desired.

WALLACE STUDIOS PREPARE PROGRAM

The drama department of the Earle Wallace Studios of the Stage will present a program of plays next Thursday night. The plays are being produced under the direction of Kenneth Croft.

Piano Class to Be Taught by Composer

A master class in piano playing, composition and orchestration will be held in Los Angeles, June 24 to August 5, by one of the leading American composers and pianists, Simon Bucharoff. While on the Coast last summer, Mr. Bucharoff was impressed with musical conditions and desired to return this summer. Arrangements have been made for the presentation of several of his orchestral works at the Hollywood Bowl. Willem Mangelberg gave nine performances of Bucharoff compositions in New York the past winter.

Private lessons will be given, as well as class, in various branches of study. L. E. Behymer, 705 Auditorium Building, will handle the details. Auditions for class and private work will be held from June 17 on, as Mr. Bucharoff expects to arrive in the city the latter part of this month.

Opera Chorus Declared Best in Many Years

Maestro Gaetano Merola, director of the Grand Opera Association, last week declared that the chorus this year was an especially fine one.

"We have selected our singers from hundreds of applicants," he declared. "They will train all summer under the direction of Dr. Karl Riedel, assistant conductor of the Metropolitan Opera. But, best of all, they will have had the invaluable experience of singing five weeks of opera with the greatest European and American opera stars in the San Francisco and Los Angeles opera seasons."

The chorus rehearsals started last Monday evening for the 1929 season under Dr. Riedel's direction and the schedule calls for four and five rehearsals each week until October.

CONSERVATORY GIVES RECITAL SERIES

On Friday evening the junior and intermediate students of the Zoellner Conservatory will appear in recital at the auditorium of the conservatory on Wilshire Boulevard.

The following teachers will present students: Joseph Zoellner, Sr., violin and ensemble class; Joseph Zoellner, Jr., piano and 'cello; Margaret Squires, piano; Clara Williamson, piano; Mary Larkin, dramatic art.

A program by advanced students of the violin and piano departments is scheduled for the 28th inst.

MORANDO PUPIL SUCCEEDS

Fred Scott, one of the youngest tenors in Los Angeles, sang for the Hollywood Opera Reading Club, in "The Girl of the Golden West," in Long Beach and Altadena. Mr. Scott has also been chosen by John Smallman as tenor in a quartet at the Pacific Palisades this year.

Mary Lewis to Open Tuesday Series in Fall

The opening number on the Behymer Philharmonic course, Tuesday series, this fall will be a concert by Mary Lewis, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Miss Lewis is a splendid example of what pluck and determination can accomplish. She and her husband, Michael Bohnen, are to spend the summer in the West, starting the musical season from California.

On the Tuesday series John Charles Thomas, baritone, Paul Kochanski, violinist; Ignaz Friedman, pianist, the English singers—a splendid group of six people—a choice of Tito Schipa or John McCormack, tenors; Dusolina Giannini, soprano; Efrem Zimbalist, violinist; Beniamino Gigli, Italian tenor; Lawrence Tibbett, California baritone, a new dancing team from Europe; Harold Kreutzberg and Yvonne Georgi, closing in March with Sigrid Onegin, contralto.

"GERMAN REQUIEM" WILL BE RENDERED

"The German Requiem," by Johannes Brahms, will be given its first complete performance in Los Angeles on the afternoon of the 19th inst., at at the First Congregational Church by the vested choir of seventy-five voices, John Smallman conducting, Frank Pursell, baritone; Betty Goldrick, soprano and Homer Simmon at the organ. This work was first performed in Bremen in 1868. It was also presented at the Cincinnati Music Festival in 1884 with Theodore Thomas conducting. The work has seven numbers, two baritone solos and chorus, soprano solo and chorus and four separate choruses. It is not a requiem mass but a poem of hope and consolation.

BARITONE ENJOYED IN SONG RECITAL

Donald Thayer, young American baritone, was heard in recital in the Sierra Madre Woman's clubhouse. He has concertized with great success in Europe, and is under the New York management of R. E. Johnstone. He will tour the Pacific Coast during the coming summer, under the direction of L. E. Behymer, his western representative.

Mr. Rasbach furnished the splendid accompaniments of the evening.

Mr. Thayer was assisted by Orline Burrow, youthful concert violinist from the Oscar Seiling studio. His studies in Los Angeles were with Louise Gude.

HO-TO-PI COACHING

Among the many prominent singers now studying voice with Mrs. Nettie Snyder, voice teacher and impresario, formerly of Florence, Italy, who has recently opened a vocal studio in Hollywood, is Chief Ho-To-Pi, Indian baritone, who recently starred in the desert pageant, "Mockingbird," given in Perris Valley.

ACTIVITIES OF MUSICAL BODY GROW

Playground Department's Annual Report Discloses Hard Work Result

The annual report of the division of musical activities of the playground department indicates that the department is doing a tremendous piece of work for music in Los Angeles.

The music department, under the supervision of Glenn M. Tindall, has completed its first year as an organization and grown from 762 participants the first month to 112,714 in June, 1928. The expansion of the present year has not been figured at this time but there is no evidence of any slack.

Although the activities are mainly directed toward children, adults too have benefited by this music department which aims at the development of appreciation, self-expression, recreation and community service.

Eleven community orchestras and four bands have been organized during the first year and the Los Angeles Brass and Reed Symphony, of fifty professional musicians, has made a place for itself by excellent performance of symphonic music. Fifty-four choruses, glee clubs and quartets have been formed and several composers have dedicated songs to the playgrounds choruses. A book of adaptable songs is being compiled. More than twenty harmonic bands flourish. Twelve ukulele bands have been initiated and nine toy symphony orchestras rehearse and the work goes on.

Music from the playground department is provided for many city activities outside of the playground work, such as Christmas carol singing, Boys' Week parades, radio programs, dedications, and programs for public functions. Advice service on music problems is freely given by the trained heads of the department.

It is plainly seen that the music division of the playground department, which Glenn Tindall directs, is occupying an increasingly important place in community development.

RECITAL PLANNED AT ORTON SCHOOL

Margaret Coleman

On the 20th inst. Margaret Coleman will give a joint recital with Violet Stallcup, pianist-composer, at the Orton School for Girls on Westmoreland Place. This program will be repeated on the 23rd inst. at the Orton School in Pasadena.

Last Friday evening Miss Coleman sang in Millspaugh Auditorium at the University of California and on Thursday she was presented in a program at the home of Mrs. Huntzinger in San Marino. On these last two programs she was assisted by Raymond McFeeters, pianist.

NEW DANCE MASTER

James Russo, dance master, is a recent addition to the Professional School of Dancing staff of teachers. Mr. Russo comes direct to the city from the Trianon ballroom in New York.

RONALD COLMAN GAINS TRIUMPH

Actor at Best in "Bull Dog Drummond"

Film Praised on All Counts; Ovation Given

Final Effort of Jannings Seems of Other Day

BY NORBERT LUSK

NEW YORK, May 11.—Of all the talking pictures none has met with the reception accorded "Bull Dog Drummond," which opened last week at the Apollo Theater. This reception began with the collection of a crowd outside the theater larger than is usually seen here and more determined in its efforts to brush elbows with celebrities entering the theater.

Incidentally, Samuel Goldwyn can claim the unique distinction of being the only producer to have his glasses snatched by souvenir hunters, and Ronald Colman the only star to take the necessary precaution to enter the theater by the stage entrance, later to take his place in a box with Percy Marmont and later to receive an ovation at the conclusion of the picture.

There was every reason to pay him this tribute for Mr. Colman in the course of an hour or so had gained perhaps 500 per cent as an actor and increased his popularity at least twice that by means of audibility. Intelligence, gayety, a sense of humor and naturalness were some of the qualities discernible in his voice, quite enough to qualify him as the superior of almost every other masculine player who has been heard on the screen and to raise the doubt if any one could have played Hugh Drummond as well.

NOTHING SACRIFICED

But it was not only the star who made the evening a notable one. The picture itself scored for strength of direction, photography, acting, dialogue, as well as the humorous viewpoint pervading the whole. Of perhaps equal importance is the fact that audibility entails no sacrifice of those fundamentals of motion pictures, movement and beauty. Constant action is achieved together with photography as interesting and kind as if the story were told in the silence that now seems old-fashioned.

In the enthusiasm evoked by this exceptionally entertaining picture it is no wonder that everyone in it has been praised and that every detail has been given the accolade of perfection, even to the amazing skill which disguises some of the melodramatic speeches and makes them seem plausible, to say nothing of the ability of the star to commit murder humorously and retain sympathy as he brushes imaginary stains of crime from his fingers.

The startling beauty of Joan Bennett has been acclaimed, together with the brilliant performance of Lilyan Tashman and the singing of "The Drinking Song" from the "Beggars' Opera," by Donald Novis, who earned a volley of applause that might have appeased a John McCormack.

In comparison with this very mod-

SCREEN IS BORROWING AGAIN

Stage Musical Productions Revamped for Film Use; Technique Often Badly Applied; Ascendancy of Original Tune Predicted

BY EDWIN SCHALLERT

THE borrowing habit is evident again in the movies. This time it is affecting the talkies, or at all events the musical type of talkie. "Show Boat" gains interest because of the stage show tunes. "The Desert Song" is taken largely in its original form and placed on the screen.

Stage music productions of the past few years are to be revised and revamped for the audible screen. Apparently a new mine of riches and inspiration has been found.

THE borrowing habit is perfectly all right, so long as it is legitimately and sensibly applied. Merely to reproduce a stage play is going back to the silent-film technique of a dozen or more years ago. It is not modern pictures, either silent or talkie form.

The originality of an adaptation or of the use of the borrowed theme is what gives the real attraction as far as the audience is concerned. The talkies will succeed only in so far as they make this interpretation their own.

"SHOW BOAT" achieves satisfying effect so long as it presents the Ziegfeld music show themes atmospherically. There is much added to the production through the including "Ol' Man River" in all the varying moods that can be conjured with this amazingly flexible melody of the semi-spiritual sort. As an accompaniment its value is intense.

By contrast the prologue, which presents the stage numbers themselves is exceedingly flat. The screen can't make interesting the spectacle of a singer singing. The view of the throat muscles and the epiglottis in action during a vocal rendition is hardly alluring to the eye.

THE same mistake was made in the extremely unimaginative presenting of the "Desert Song" number in "The Desert Song." Conventional poses, and facial convulsions of a singer substituted for all the magic of the landscapes of romance, which this particular number suggests—that was what the screen offered. This failed utterly to live up to its best traditions.

The right idea was caught in "The Riff Song." For the ride of the desert warriors over the stretches of sand dunes had actual atmosphere.

"BROADWAY MELODY" went to prove that the singer does not need to appear at all on the screen in a pictorially effective song number. "The Dance of the Painted Dolls" visions the spirt of the song. The voice is an incident.

I do not say that this is possible in every instance. But it proved a very clever expedient in the "Broadway Melody."

One thing may be stated arbitrarily, however, and that is that the less that is shown of the realities of singing on the screen the better.

That is, unless a type of singer is developed who is different from the majority heretofore known—namely one that can look pleasing while singing at close range.

I THINK that the singer who has looked most interesting so far is Helen Morgan in the "Show Boat" prologue. Strangely enough, she is not at all beautiful. But she uses her hands with a fascinating and forlorn sort of grace, in her gestures, which takes the mind off the vocalizing operation in itself.

BUT to return to the subject of musical borrowing . . . here is what I would predict for the future—

PLAY OF INSECT LIFE REVIVED

Figueroa Playhouse Essays Philosophic Jaunt

Adventure Titled "World We Live In"

Robert Edeson Deserts Films for Leading Role

That debonnair bon vivant, Robert Edeson, is obviously on adventure bent. It's almost like getting married again—on a strictly companionate basis—to go back to the stage after seven years' absence, devoted exclusively to pictures.

"The World We Live In" is the play, tomorrow night the opening, and the Figueroa Playhouse the place. Of course, Robert has been lending his superior talents to filmdom for more than thirteen years, making his first picture, which was also Cecil De Mille's first, "The Call of the North," when Lasky's was still a barn in the remote wilds of Hollywood. But until seven years ago, he went back to the stage periodically . . . one of his last appearances being this self-same "The World We Live In."

BETTER TODAY

"So it is the one play of all others that could have induced me to return temporarily to the stage. I'm the only human in it . . . a sort of vagabond-philosopher. All the rest are insects. It's a play to hear rather than to see—it bristles with sly cynicism, artful innuendo . . . and it's better today than it was seven years ago, because changing times have brought it right up to date. It [illegible] any amount of argument [illegible] the sort of thing that sets [illegible] irritation in the mind and [illegible] controversially for weeks after," he confided, always with that mischievous provocative smile of his.

"I'm having an interesting time trying to talk to the tenth row. You see, in the talkies, we can now speak in a low conversational tone, with the 'mike' insuring that we will be heard in any part of the house. On the stage, we still have to see that our voice carries . . . When I get back into sound pictures, they'll be asking me to hush and not break the needle. Then there is the sense of space, room [illegible] where we are so limited at the studios. Quite an experience to be able to spread myself again for a while. I'm really wedded to the talkies now . . . this is just a temporary stage engagement."

ACCENT APPROVED

Edeson has four talkies to his credit to date . . . "The Doctor's Secret," "The Home-Towners," "Friendship" and "Dynamite." Apropos of "The Doctor's Secret," an English play, Robert was the only American in the cast, so he enjoyed a chuckle when a London critic deplored the "American accent" of all the players, "except Robert Edeson, who has a cultured English voice!"

"I hope to direct talking pictures before long," confided Robert. "Events are moving so fast . . . I caught one director mourning while watching a preview of his latest [illegible] . . . 'It's old-fashioned [illegible] it's released,' he moaned, although the rest of us thought it excellent. You see, there are improvements every day now."

It is quite fascinating to hear a [illegible]experienced actor like Robert Edeson, reminisce about old times, old plays . . . but with all his sentiment for the past, he is ebulliently Peter-Pannish in his approval of the present. He has a young wife and lives in Hollywood . . . and the talkies love him . . . voila!

All the same, "The World We Live In" pokes a lot of naughty fun at our modern behavior, am[illegible] ideas . . . insects, in[illegible] insects! Robert adores the [illegible] in the last act between the [illegible] . . . wherein he can jibe so superiorly . . . e'er he dies to make room for a new baby!

"DYBBUK" SHOWS AT WAXMAN'S

Actors of Cast Boast Both Stage and Film Experience; Run Indefinite

That this is the year of union between screen and stage is exemplified in the cast that has been assembled to enact "The Dybbuk" at Waxman's Capitol Theater, 338 South Spring street, for an indefinite run.

[illegible] of the actors in the production are not only well known in motion pictures, but all have had [illegible] degree of stage experience, many of them being "old troupers" of the footlights, attracted in recent years to the screen because it allows them to avoid "the road."

For example, Edwin August created the leading role in "The Climax" on Broadway, New York, and played it for two years. He is also well known as a stage director. Lately, he has acted in pictures, recent ones being "The Canary Murder Case" and "Hey, Rube!"

Barbara Bedford had some stage experience as a young girl, and recently refreshed her early training by four months of personal appearances and vaudeville, in a singing [illegible]

[illegible] Bruce had been on the [illegible] some twenty years, and appeared under the direction of David Belasco, and with Frank Bacon and other stars, before starting in pictures with the Biograph company [illegible] the very "birthdays" of the movie. She has been in practically all of D. W. Griffith's big productions.

Hal Crane, though a young man, is an "old-timer" of the stage. A year ago he appeared at the Orpheum here in a sketch, written by himself, of the Napoleonic period.

Virginia Brown Faire had her first acting experience in the pictures, after winning a nation-wide beauty contest. J. Barney Sherry has a dramatic background well balanced between stage and screen. Gertrude Short played child parts in Oliver Morosco's productions.

New York Successes Arrive

Friday night at the Mayan "Let Us Be Gay" made its Los Angeles debut with Edna Hibbard as the star. Saturday night brought "Night Hostess" to the Belasco, with Ruth Lyons in her original role. Today the President presents "Skidding," direct from a long eastern run, with Clara Blandick. Sketches above are by Times Staff Artist A. L. Ewing.

TOM-TOM JAZZ BOOMS ON

Another Play of Nocturnal Prowlers, 'Night Hostess,' Arrives at Belasco; Ruth Lyons Stars

Ever since "Broadway After Dark" (and probably before) they have been doing it in the theaters. They still are. Still are making plays about Longacre Square and its nocturnal prowlers. Now comes "Night Hostess," a melodrama of a house of chance—with its spinning roulette wheels, its poison beverages, its tom-tom jazz—to the Belasco Theater. Sponsored by the firm of Belasco and Curran (by arrangement with John Golden), "Night Hostess" bowed in last night. It will remain at the playhouse for at least three weeks.

Philip Dunning wrote it. Dunning also wrote "Broadway," and George Abbott doctored it for the healthy trade. A deal of revising on "Night Hostess" was done by Winchell Smith, another play physician of prominence. Or so, at any rate, relates Ruth Lyons, who fills the title role here as she filled it in New York.

Miss Lyons didn't have much time to talk about herself. Miss Lyons (at whom one must look twice to be certain-sure that she is not Joan Crawford of the movies) dashed off the rehearsal stage long enough to grow crisply autobiographical. This was doing her duty by her public, was it not?—it might not be very thrilling, but it was her story, and she'd stick to it.

"Born in Boston, I went to dramatic school; soon afterward into a stock company. Then New York. I wasn't there two hours—not two hours!—before I was signed up. The name of the show was 'The Backslapper.' William Hodge found me and took me with him in 'The Judge's Husband.' I was out here in Los Angeles in that one. The tour lasted two years. Back to New York, and a contract with Al Woods, 'The Mulberry Bush' and 'What a Man'—those were the plays. I followed that with fifteen weeks in stock with Russell Mack—he is out here at the R-K-O. studio directing the dialogue for 'Companionate'—and I think there is nothing like stock for real training!"

Miss Lyons paused; not because she was out of breath, but because everyone must pause some time.

"John Golden, planning 'Night Hostess' just about then, signed me for the role of Buddy Miles. After this engagement I went with Ziegfeld for 'The Three Musketeers,' partly in New York and partly on tour. I had always wanted to get

JANE WINTON RETURNS TO FIRST LOVE

Picture Actress on Stage Again in Vine-Street Play Opening Tonight

When Jane Winton has an unpleasant fight with her husband, but finally admits she was a fool and hopes he'll never, never leave her again, she will be making her first professional stage debut since she entered pictures three years ago. All this hectic matrimonial emotionalism takes place in "The Ghost Train" at the Vine Street Theater, opening tonight.

But Jane is no stage novice. She ran away from a lady-like finishing school to escape college when she was a naughty little stage-struck girl—and was so reprehensibly successful that she soon appeared with Fokine's Ballet and later graduated into the Ziegfeld Follies. "Which seemed like the most glorious attainment in the world to me in those days," recalls Jane, amusedly.

"I love being back of the stage. I did a couple of parts in plays at the Writers' Club a short time ago, and am thrilled with this opportunity, between pictures."

"My last films?" she was saying

SMART LINES ENHANCE PLAY

Edna Hibbard Essays Sophisticated Role in "Let Us Be Gay," from New York to Mayan, Los Angeles

BY ALMA WHITAKER

She arrived late, bubbling with nice apologies and $17 worth of beauty treatments which I could have bought for $2.90—but that's the penalty of being a famous Edna Hibbard from New York, starring in "Let Us Be Gay" at the Mayan. It would be sort of insulting to sell her a bargain.

All the same, she is a comfortable, reasonable sort of person, this Edna, who won British hearts as well as New York hearts as Dorothy in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," and who has come out here straight from another tragic-comedy play in the East, "The Other Man." In that the prologue was emotional drama and the rest of the play sophisticated comedy—just as in Rachel Crother's play, "Let Us Be Gay."

Behold her, then, little, dark, with a very youthful face, mischievous eyes, as the ill-treated mamma of three children in that emotional prologue . . . and as a very gay, sophisticated, dashing mondaine who snares her own husband back from grandma's angel flapper in the last act. The play bristles with clever dialogue . . . and it ought to make a sumptuous appeal to ladies who are not as young as they were and who yearn for sweet romantic revenges.

MARRIED TO PRODUCER

Edna is married to Lester Bryant, producer of the play for John Colton . . . "Three years and a week today," laughs Edna, "and it still wears well." It probably does, for when Lester essayed to help her down from the stage into the auditorium for our talk, she snatched the chance to kiss him shamelessly.

She sat on the arm of the theater seat, with her feet tucked up informally, puffed a cigarette and explained that her hair was so dirty after the train journey that she had washed it herself before going for a shampoo.

"This is the first time I have been west for ages and ages," she reminisced. "The last time was in a play with Doug Fairbanks, 'Officer 666' . . . before Doug had any idea he would be a lord-of-the-realm in pictures and while Doug, Jr., was just a tiny tad. And before there was a ghost of a hint that Mary Pickford would be the second Mrs. Fairbanks. . . .

HEART IN ENGLAND

"Oh, yes, I am going to enjoy visiting here—but my heart is really in England. We want to go there to live some day. Although I'm American I went to school in England as a child . . . and I simply adore going back in plays. Lester is going to produce this comedy in London at the old Shaftesbury Theater in the fall—we have always had such good luck there with our shows . . .

"Yes, I like comedy roles best—one gets a little bored with too much emotional drama. But this is a most satisfactory play—a dash of emotional drama in the prologue and the rest very smart comedy. It's a peach of a role . . ."

WASHBURN AT RITZ

"Nothing to Wear," with Bryant Washburn and Jacqueline Logan, has a one-day showing at the Fox Ritz Theater today. Monday, "Close Harmony" comes to the Ritz screen for a three-day run. Nancy Carroll and Buddy Rogers are costarred in this talking, singing romance-drama of back stage.

Duffy Brings "Skidding" to President Today

Pasadena Prize Play Hit in New York

Clara Blandick Seen in Original Role

Simultaneously with the arrival this afternoon of "Skidding," at Henry Duffy's President Theater, there is apt to be a loud explosion—celebratory in nature—over in staid Pasadena.

For "Skidding" which Duffy is presenting with Clara Blandick in her original New York role, is the Pasadena Drama League prize winner of 1926 and first saw the light of day at the Community Playhouse.

It is a jolly domestic comedy by Aurania Rouveral, herself a resident of Los Angeles and a graduate of Stanford University. It is just completing a solid year's run in New York, having opened there in May, 1928 and, that year of theatrical upsets and failures, proceeded quietly and politely on a most successful course. Now playing at the Nora Bayes Theater to which it was moved from the Bijou, "Skidding" has been heralded as one of the hits of the year.

"And it is going to be exceptionally good in stock all through the country," adds Miss Blandick who, in the leading character role of the play, had much to do with its getting a New York hearing. She tells an interesting story of the skidding about theatrical producers' offices "Skidding" did before final acceptance and production.

IMMEDIATELY ENTHUSIASTIC

"My cousin saw the play in Pasadena with the late Mrs. A. H. Palmer, one of the founders of the Playhouse, in the role I now have," said Miss Blandick, "She wired me about it. I sent for a copy of the play and was immediately enthusiastic about it.

"Eventually Miss Rouveral came on to New York and the struggle began. First this producer had an option, then that one. William Brady had the play at one time. Finally, under the management of Adler and Gering, we opened at the Bijou Theater and the rest of the story is known. The comedy should go well here not only because it is a pleasant thing, a story of everybody's family, but because it has a distinctly local flavor from having had its beginning here."

FIFTH COAST VISIT

This is Miss Blandick's fifth professional visit to Los Angeles. She came first in "Raffles," then in "Madame Butterfly" on the Orpheum Circuit, next as Mrs. Irwin in "A Widow by Proxy" and lastly in "Clarence" at the Mason.

A Bostonian born and bred, Miss Blandick went on the stage first in the chorus in a musical show in that city of the traditional baked beans. Before the end of the week she had been pushed into character role, due to the illness of the original player. She never went back to the chorus.

Some of her successes in New York included "Raffles" which latter came out here, and all-star revival of "The Christian," "The Two Orphans" with Margaret Illington, "The Royal Mounted" with Cyril Scott, "The Enchanted Cottage," Arthur Wing Pinero's play; and then more recently, "Ice-Bound" and "Hell Bent for Heaven" both Pulitzer prize plays. She had the role of the mother in "The Show-Off" engagement in London, was in "Apple Sauce," "The Good Fellow" and "The Sky Rocket."

She spent a short time in the films when the old Kalem studio was running full blast in New York and had the distinction of being the first woman on the screen to do a dual personality role in a picture called "The Maid's Double."

O'Neill Drama in Extra Week at Music Box

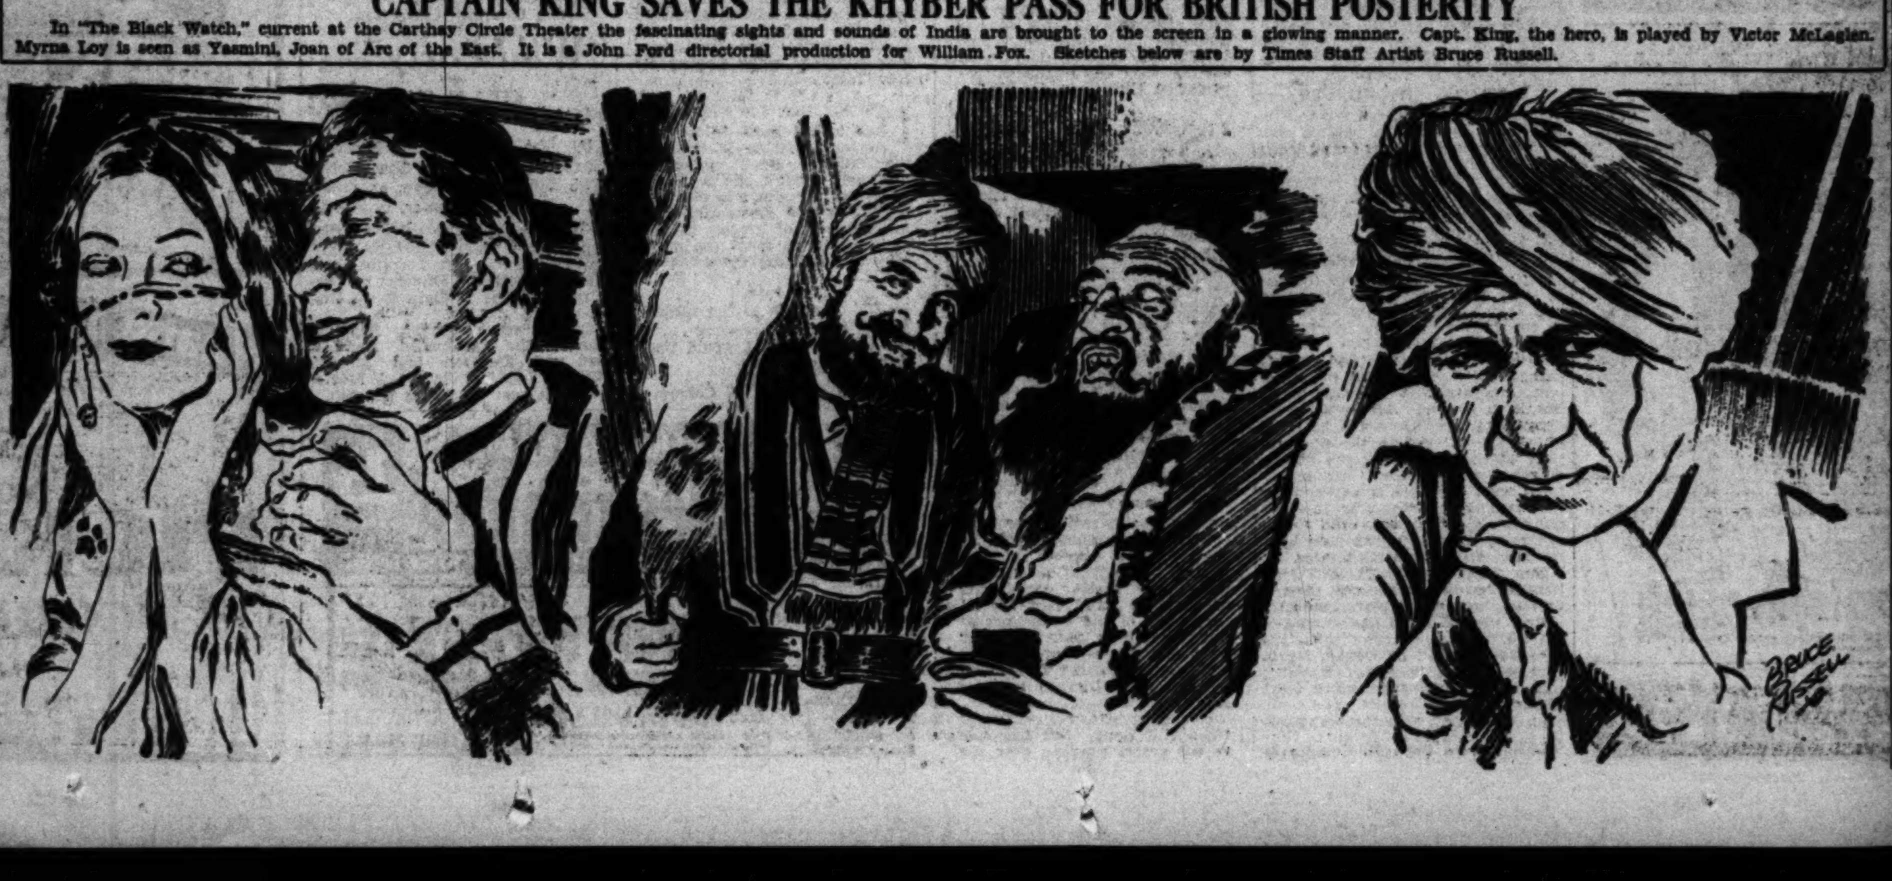
As trite as it may sound "Strange Interlude" is again demonstrating by its great success in its limited engagement at the Hollywood Music Box, Hollywood, that "nothing succeeds like success."

Going in there last Monday for only one week, and against the judgment of experienced showmen who predicted that it was too soon after the long run in the Biltmore Theater downtown, this epoch-making drama of Eugene O'Neill scored so heavily in the very beginning of the engagement that Manager O. D. Woodward was compelled to negotiate for an additional week.

The house is packed at practically every performance. The present engagement terminates the 18th inst.

CAPTAIN KING SAVES THE KHYBER PASS FOR BRITISH POSTERITY

In "The Black Watch," current at the Carthay Circle Theater the fascinating sights and sounds of India are brought to the screen in a glowing manner. Capt. King, the hero, is played by Victor McLaglen. Myrna Loy is seen as Yasmini, Joan of Arc of the East. It is a John Ford directorial production for William Fox. Sketches below are by Times Staff Artist Bruce Russell.



New York Theaters

BY PERCY HAMMOND

NEW YORK, May 11. [illegible] Prophets of ill tell the [illegible] of still another peril [illegible] the drama. To the [illegible] chiefs that already harass [illegible] being they add the horrid [illegible] of a famine in actors. The movie phones, they say, are [illegible] themselves with Broadway [illegible] and even now the cupboard [illegible] signs of being bare. Earnest [illegible] ers desiring to hire a [illegible] player for any special role [illegible] that he has gone to Hollywood [illegible] there to lead the lucrative [illegible]. As the talking pictures [illegible] from an art in its infancy [illegible] it is predicted, consume the [illegible] world's output of players, [illegible] none available for the old-fashioned Broadway shows.

Similar portents have been [illegible] pressed for many years about [illegible] drama and all have proved [illegible] but the mutterings of [illegible] pessimists. "To mask the [illegible] of coming evil is their great [illegible] and they revel in forecasting [illegible] asters that never come to pass. [illegible] spondency is a characteristic [illegible] New York managers as a [illegible] Sometimes gay but seldom [illegible] they regard hope as a [illegible] rage and see only the black [illegible] of despair. I do not recall, at the moment, a happy Broadway impresario, excepting possibly A. H. Woods, and the Theater Guild.

WOEFUL WAILS

Sounds of woe have [illegible] from the offices of Gilbert Miller, Ziegfeld, George C. Tyler, Jed Harris, Mr. Cohan and [illegible] and the sighs of Morris Gest flapping his black wings [illegible] over the prosperity of the Hippodrome Passion Play, is enough to give an observer the [illegible] kins, White, Dillingham, [illegible] ris, and Dwight Deere Wiman [illegible] their suffering in secret, but their silence are echoes of the [illegible] ing of heavy hearts.

William A. Brady also [illegible] that way. I remember an interview with him some twenty [illegible] ago when he frightened me, [illegible] boy reviewer, with awful predictions that moving pictures were about to put drama [illegible] business. These, said he, [illegible] his breast, are the last moments of the stage. In an hour or two the cinema will have usurped its place as the most popular of the [illegible] entertainments. Our occupation's gone, he quoted sorrowfully. The play is done, the curtain drops.

It was in 1908 or thereabouts that Mr. Brady thus gloomed with his cypress whisperings. He led me to the churchyard of our favorite art. As he tolled [illegible] chal bells over the drama's [illegible] I bowed my head, thinking that all was over. Look at him now in his play "Street Scene" bringing him back from the cemetery more lively than usual.

SWARM OF ACTORS

The suspicion that the stage will ever suffer from a dearth of actors is ridiculous. The U. S. A. is a swarm of potential histrionics anxious to exhibit themselves before the public. Dramatized [illegible] vulgar Palm Beach poses in the Sunday rotogravure, they are competent to appear on Broadway in person. There are, I estimate, a hundred thousand students in the many universities of New York prepared to carry the so-called torch. New York U., Fordham, Columbia and Hunter College are full of pupils anxious to go upon the stage.

There are numerous [illegible] Mae Wests, William Favershams, Alfred Lunts, E. H. Sotherns, [illegible] Margaret Anglins and Mrs. [illegible] Maddern Fiskes ambitious to [illegible] themselves in public. The [illegible] of one's worries about the Broadway drama should be that [illegible] scarce in actors. There are, [illegible] New York Times informs us, [illegible] 000 little theater and community amateurs ready and eager to supplant the professionals who have absconded to Hollywood. [illegible] should not worry about the [illegible] plights, intrusting them to [illegible] traditional security. There always will be more [illegible] than are necessary.

Two small musical revues [illegible] produced last week—"The Little Show" by Messrs. Brady and [illegible] and the "Grand Street Follies," the remnant of the [illegible] playhouses. "The Little Show," uptown product, was [illegible] bright. Rumors had come to [illegible] Square from Asbury Park and Atlantic City, dependable [illegible] tions, that it was [illegible]. Monday evening it is proved [illegible] fleet, wisecracking and [illegible] cated vaudeville calculated to inspire activity among the [illegible] brokers. "The Grand Street Follies" was of a different kind. [illegible] too much confidence in the [illegible] tion of its patrons, it made [illegible] fun of the encyclopedia, [illegible] spoofing the habits of such [illegible] as the protoplasms, Helen of Troy, Adam and Eve, the Creator, Julius Caesar, Lenore Ulric, Noah, Ruth Gordon, Eden's fatal apple and Mlle. Bordoni singing a bird song innocently entitled "Let's Do It."

Lila Lee Urges Children Seek Life on Stage

"If I had a daughter and she wanted to be an actress I'd encourage her from her earliest moments." This statement comes from Lila Lee, who was a child actress.

"A stage life necessarily teaches a girl to be independent. She learns to look after herself and to carry on no matter what the obstacle. She early discovers the value of a kind word and the value of a kind [illegible] and probably no profession in the world boasts as much kindness toward its members as that of the stage.

"Altogether, I think that a child's training, backed by a mother's careful eye, is the best possible character building school for any girl," says this player, who has spent her entire life on the stage or screen.

Miss Lee now is at work at First National, playing with Jack Mulhall in "Dark Streets."

IT'S NOT HIS REAL NAME

Ian Keith, like many other stage and screen stars, does not use his christened name in his professional career. He was baptized Keith Ross, but took the stage name of Keith from his mother's family. [illegible] now playing the [illegible] in First National's [illegible] thy Mackaill in the [illegible] Vitaphone production "The Divide," with [illegible] directing.

NEW RUN RECORD MADE BY 'BROADWAY MELODY'

A new record for the engagement of a talking picture in Southern California has just been established by "The Broadway Melody" at Grauman's Chinese Theater.

[illegible] its sixteenth week the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer all-talking, [illegible] and dancing classic, with Sid Grauman's prologue, has left all other [illegible] behind, with indications that it will run many weeks [illegible].

[illegible] mark in attendance [illegible] early last week [illegible] performances will be required for it to reach the half-[illegible]. No production in the [illegible] of the Chinese has played [illegible] so many persons [illegible] length of time.

[illegible] largely for the phenomenal [illegible] of the picture is the great [illegible] of repeat visitors, many of [illegible] viewed the entertainment [illegible] as many as four [illegible] the box-office records [illegible].

The [illegible] of M.-G.-M. [illegible] the spectacular life of [illegible] White Way to the eyes of the audience, striking [illegible] of the production [illegible] nation-wide song hits and [illegible] the footlights realistically presented by Charles King and Anita Page, are outstanding characteristics of the presentation which are given credit for much of its success.

Heralded as attaining new laurels for the talking screen before its world premiere in the Chinese on February 1 by playing to capacity crowds since, the picture has fulfilled predictions despite the array of all-synchronized productions that has followed it.

PEGGY WOOD TO SING

Peggy Wood, who plays the heroine of "Wonder of Women," Clarence Brown's new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture, not only makes her debut in the talking pictures in the play, but also will sing several German folksongs to the children in the cottage scenes, with Lewis Stone accompanying at the piano.

JOAN BENNETT STARRED

Joan Bennett, daughter of Richard Bennett, makes her talkie debut as Ronald Colman's leading lady in "Bulldog Drummond," now showing at the George M. Cohan Theater in New York. Miss Bennett became known to Los Angeles theatergoers recently in "The Pirate," Doris Keane's play.

STAR FIRST APPEARED IN JOLSON ACT

Laura Hamilton's Career on Stage Began With Comedian at Winter Garden

Before the days of the "Scandals" George White, dancing in a Shubert revue at the Winter Garden, needed a girl for his dance number.

A stage director picked out the newest recruit to the Winter Garden company.

As a result Laura Hamilton, in her first season on the stage, found herself dancing with George, who afterward became one of the leading revue producers of the company.

Born in New York, Miss Hamilton made her first stage appearance with a Winter Garden show in which Al Jolson was the star. When he moved on to tour the country she remained behind. For five years she was at the Winter Garden, advancing from small roles to featured ones.

One day she decided she had entered the stage entrance on Seventh avenue long enough. She was given the lead in the eastern company of the musical comedy "Little Jessie James" and played it for a season. Then she went into the dramatic field and for another year appeared with Harry Beresford in "The Old Soak." After that she played the lead in another musical show "My Girl," which ran a season at the Vanderbilt Theater in New York.

From musical comedy Miss Hamilton went into vaudeville as a headliner in a singing and dancing act. Arthur Hopkins saw her and engaged her to play in his comedy "Burlesque" with Hal Skelly. Miss Hamilton has been acting Bonny, the wife, opposite Skelly this season in the New York production of the comedy.

Skelly came to the Coast to star in talking pictures and to play his original role of Skid in "Burlesque" for Henry Duffy. "Get Laura Hamilton for Bonny if possible," said the comedian to the actor-producer.

The wire reached her on Friday. Twenty-four hours later she caught the Coast train.

'High Road' Traveled by Pasadenans

When "The High Road," the smart Frederick Lonsdale comedy, went on the boards at Hollywood recently, it was set for presentation also at Pasadena Community Playhouse, by the Pasadena players. But out of courtesy to O. D. Woodward, a comparative newcomer to Southern California and the production field hereabouts, whom Gilmor Brown and his associates wished to welcome with every sign possible, the engagement was deferred. Now, however, the play will be staged, opening a two weeks' run Tuesday night.

Heading the cast will be Gypsy O'Brien, last seen in "Is Zat So," and a recruit to the Pasadena fold from musical comedy and the screen; William Stack, a newcomer from London, Eng., of just a year's residence and first seen here in "Hotel Imperial," with Samuel S. Hinds and A. B. Ruddock from the realms of business and society in the Crown City augmenting the supporting company of Playhouse "regulars." In the latter will be Joseph Sauers, Charles Levison, James Callahan, Albert Willard, William La Beaume, Katheryn Prather, Norah Shaw and Mrs. Harold Landreth.

KAY HAMMOND ALWAYS HAS PLAYED LEAD PARTS

Kay Hammond has played leads throughout her entire stage career.

In college she was the girl called on to interpret anything from "Candida" to "Antigone."

The illness of an actress gave her the opportunity to make her first appearance in leading role with a stock company. There were eighty "sides" to the part and Miss Hammond learned them overnight and went on the following day without forgetting a word.

The next day she was rewarded with a contract to remain as leading woman for the company for the rest of the season.

Three seasons later she was one of the best-known leading women in stock in the country. When Henry Duffy operated a stock organization in Baltimore before coming to the Pacific Coast, Miss Hammond was featured in such productions as "East is West" and "The Bird of Paradise."

Washington, Dallas and Louisville knew her as their favorite actress before Broadway managers annexed her for such productions as "Mercenary Mary" and "Polly Preferred."

Then she came here as leading woman for the stock company at the Morosco, now the President, and won high praise for her portrayals.

"When the company closed I decided I was through with stock," says Miss Hammond. "In fact, I was so tired of studying parts that I thought I was through with the theater. I went to Europe determined to forget acting. Did I? After days of sightseeing, visiting old museums and exhibitions of famous paintings I would find myself at the theater every night trying to learn something from this or that famous actress.

"I had not been home more than two weeks when Henry Duffy telephoned and offered me the part of Ann Marvin in 'This Thing Called Love.' I read the play that night and by 10 o'clock the next morning had signed my contract."

Film Declared Advanced Idea in Married Life

The vaudeville and pictures at Pantages are interwoven, with ex-picture stars featured in the vaudeville, and well-known vaudevillians in the pictures.

"Trial Marriage," on the screen, shows a number of names and faces formerly honored on the variety stage, including Norman Kerry and Sally Eilers, who have the leading roles. "Trial Marriage" is a society drama in which wives and husbands change partners in an unusual and intriguing manner, but eventually return to their first loves. It might be described as a presentation of advanced ideas on marriage or as a warning against such views, according to the standpoint of the critic.

Rex Story and Rose Lee, both known in Hollywood, are listed for comedy and song. Rex Lee was a former comedy partner of Charles Chaplin, and Miss Story enjoyed considerable distinction in the Mack Sennett bathing beauty comedies before vaudeville called her. Cardini, conjurer and magician, like the famous Merlin of King Arthur's court, is a Welshman, though commonly described as The English Conjurer. The Kincaid Kilties offer Highland dances and Highland airs. The Frolic Four and Ploetz Brothers are, respectively, dancers and acrobats.

SCHOOLMATES COLLABORATE

Tay Garnett, directing William Boyd in Pathe's all-talking air picture, "The Flying Fool," and George Green, who composed the melody for the theme song of the picture, were schoolmates when they both attended Poly High School and Los Angeles High School. "If I Had My Way," is the name of the song to be featured in the production and sung by Marie Prevost. George Wagner wrote the lyrics. Supporting Boyd in the production are Tom O'Brien, Russell Gleason, Dan Wolheim, Dorothy Ward and Kate Bruce.

'Under Cover' Played by Colored Actors

"Under Cover," "crook" drama, comes to the Lincoln stage on Monday night with the colored Lafayette Players featured. "Under Cover" deals with the efforts of United States custom agents to run down expert diamond smugglers.

Evelyn Preer plays Ethel Cartwright, who finds herself drafted into the service of the customs forces to gather evidence against Steven Denby, a wealthy young society man who has been smuggling valuable jewels from Europe. Edward Thompson plays opposite.

Street Scene Talkie Taken Despite Noise

While Jack Mulhall, Dorothy Mackaill and others in the cast of their first talking picture, "Two Weeks Off," which opens at the Hillstreet Theater today, spoke their lines on a city street scene at the First National studios, there was plenty of conversation on the side lines, fifty feet away.

For the first time the red "Vitaphoning—Keep Out!" sign was removed from a talking picture set, and in its place another red sign: "Quiet please! Stay Behind Ropes; No Loud Talk."

The spectators, representing nearly every department in the studio, assembled to see the new sound device, heard the players speak in a regular scene for "Two Weeks Off," and presently heard the "play-back" from the recording room.

Carl Freed and his Orchestra, and Lulu McConnell head the RKO program at the Hillstreet. Among others on the bill are Frankie Heath and the Three Whirlwinds.

NATION'S SCULPTURE SHOWN

and it is admirably displayed here—divides into two groups for purely economic reasons. These are monuments, usually for memorials, occasionally to glorify an event, an individual or an industry; and bronzes for the garden and the home. In both these classes literary or sentimental conceptions dominate, the possibility of emotional drive is slight and the result is usually illustration.

FRENCH IS TYPICAL

One of the most instructive rooms in the exhibition is Gallery Fifteen, devoted entirely to the works of Daniel Chester French, honorary president of the National Sculpture Association, a man possessing native sensitiveness to a high degree. French is probably the best of our living, typical professional sculptors, and by them I mean the men who get a large slice of the monumental commissions. He is represented by forty-one pieces, including such large works as "In Flanders Fields," a huge figure of a suffering youth holding aloft a torch, made for Milton, Mass., his well-known seated "Lincoln" at Washington and "Death and the Warrior," a war memorial at Concord.

But now turn from these large pieces to the two charming bas reliefs of winged children and the very beautiful "Study of Head-Mourning Victory," a bronze fragment. Is there not a noteworthy difference?

NATIONAL SCULPTURE

These smaller works are admirable in themselves as sculpture, quite apart from any sentiment they attempt to convey, and so they can never quite go out of fashion. But what will future generations think of the monumental works when they no longer share the particular sentiment that brought them into being?

EPSTEIN'S VITALITY

In the midst of a horde of pseudo-classic puerilities one suddenly experiences a pang of stimulating—I was about to say, ugliness—but no, they are far from being ugly. If the reader has seen the exhibit he may guess that I am speaking of the live spot in Gallery 14, where Jacob Epstein's bronzes occupy the center of one wall. There are only three of them, a small number compared with French or Weinman, but the vitality of this artist floods the room. Only the single head of a Hopi woman by Maurice Sterne seems to escape their tell-tale influence.

Sacramento's much publicised "Inspiration," by E. F. Sanford, reveals her total lack of life, and the huge "Victory," by James Earle Fraser, a massive, bovine woman holding a bundle of palm leaves and a sword, appears by contrast a ghastly example of the war memorial at its worst. That is one virtue of such a massed and mixed exhibit; it provides occasional touch-stones.

Epstein has been much criticised for his manner of modeling the clay with a nervous, broken-up surface, but before his "Weeping Woman," "Mother and Child" and "The Artist Kramer," it is at once apparent how his treatment fits his impassioned vision. His bronzes fairly cry out. We are a long way from the "classic" poise of the Greeks, so vainly sought by many a modern sculptor, and nearer to the crying stones of the caves and temples of India.

Next to Epstein, the most powerful group of sculpture here seems to me to be the work of a noted woman, Malvina Hoffman, who, like the Jewish sculptor, was also born in New York City. She is represented by two superb, large heads, "Martinique Woman" and "Senegalese Soldier," in Gallery 10, these vital works serving as the touchstone that crumbles A. Stirling Calder's enormous piece of magazine illustration for the Shakespeare Memorial in Philadelphia, shown in the same gallery. Other works by Miss Hoffman are a sensitive head of John Keats and a large bust of Ivan Mestrovic.

It is difficult to define the qualities that differentiate a piece of sculpture from a plaster platitude. Obviously one cannot include the rough, vital portrait busts by Jo Davidson, which are happily found in a number of galleries, if one bows to the hard and fast rule of the "cut direct" sculptors, extremists among whom aver that modeling is not sculpture. One would have to rule out Epstein on a purist count like that. Vital art has always been able to jump all the barriers and do the forbidden. So one must search through these galleries with all one's sensibilities alert for sincerity and vitality.

A SAMPLE ROOM

Gallery 6, a full and varied room, will serve as an experimental ground in which to test our art-sense. Chester Beach's huge "Service to the Nation" group, the full-size model for his monument on the American Telephone and Telegraph Building, New York City, surely falls down by any test. Not an atom of life, either naturalistic or genuinely plastic, animates the mass of anatomy that is the central standing figure. The smaller flying figures escape the design. It reminds me of the pompous doorways that mar so many of our office buildings; intended to represent power they achieve only emptiness.

"Torso in Wood," by Gleb Derujinsky.

The large "Isoult," by Edward McCartain, a seductive young female figure with a fawn, is harder to place. It is a pretty figure, but it does not take long to decide that we are in the presence of the studio model in a stagy pose. Finally "San Francisco Gold Star," a large figure of a soldier by M. Earl Cummings, strikes bottom. Contemplating the innumerable works of this last type, in which one can almost smell the leather of the shoes, I am tempted to hope for the solution of the public memorial nuisance found by the natives of "Erehwon," who paid the sculptor his fee on condition that he would leave the statue in the garden of his imagination.

C. P. Jennewein's Pediment for the Philadelphia Museum is in still another class. With its revival of the Greek custom of painting figures with strong colors it is very attractive and bright, but it remains a decorative novelty, without nobility, bringing the Greek gods down to the level of actors in a revue.

The large garden figures by Sherry Fry, appallingly blank conceptions, and even Robert Aitkin's purely pictorial bronze, the "George Rogers Clark Monument," which received a Wattrous medal at the academy, fail, in my estimation, to be authentic sculpture, and remain literary picturization.

Albin Polasek's "Forest Idyll," a graceful small bronze in the Florentine tradition; Paul Manship's clear-cut "Baby Elizabeth," and Jo Davidson's heads of Clemenceau and Foch, all gain by the company they keep. They are sculpture and so are Trygue Hammer's two heads, "Eleanor" and "Woman's Portrait." These have living qualities of form whereas A. A. Weinman's "Duet," a faun with a young satyr, is just decorative modeling.

SOME HIGH LIGHTS

So one could go on through gallery after gallery exercising his personal critical sense. This would be tiresome reading and would, after all, only be one man's opinion. Without attempting any more such "tests" I propose to point out to the visitor a number of works which seem to me of especial quality.

In Gallery No. 5, George Stanley, young Los Angeles sculptor, shines brightly amid the wastes of plaster and bronze illustrations with his small figure in red stone. Again in Gallery No. 9 he gives us two of the few sculptural moments with his standing figures, while elsewhere he has a fine simple head of a girl. Any young artist who can stand out so clearly in such a national exhibition has a gift that should be given all possible employment here. Else we shall lose him. He is one of the really promising young Americans.

Among the many unspeakable monuments in Gallery No. 1 is a fine, sensitive "Torso-Volupte" by Katharine Lee, whose biography does not appear; Hilda Christina Lascari's head of a young girl in yellow marble, "Dawn," and Heinz Warneke's good "Mother Cat and Kittens."

Gallery No. 2, dominated by Cyrus Dallin's huge illustrative Indian has a fine direct portrait by a young worker, Emily Winthrop Miles, and a good torso by the versatile Jo Davidson. Gallery No. 5 also has a good architectural portrait of Napoleon B. Taylor by Myra R. Richards and a pleasing marble bas-relief by Seth M. Velsey, "West Wind." Velsey, pupil of Lorado Taft, is only 26 years of age, while Myra Richards's only affiliation is with the Hoosier Salon, Chicago. It is apparent that much of the best work here is by the lesser-known artists. Warneke has only just turned 30.

One of the few successful large architectural pieces is Lawrence T. Stevens's "Renaissaince," a symmetrical design of a male and female figure holding aloft a symbolical child (Gallery No. 13.) There is no great feeling manifested, but design and workmanship are splendid and works of this character would really enhance a building. I pass by with averted gaze the Indians by Jo Mora and Cyrus Dallin's immortal (sic. "Appeal to the Great Spirit" to discover a really fine crouching figure, "Despair," carved in stone by Erwin Winterhalder of San Francisco, who has four panels in the State Building at Sacramento.

Nadelman Shines

In Gallery No. 16 I find Elie Nadelman's solitary exhibit, a head of a woman executed in what looks like porcelain and is perhaps highly polished marble. What a fine artist is revealed in this single work, genuinely in the Greek tradition and equally of today. Here also are Paul Manship's three panels of medals and insignia and his beautiful coins for the Irish Free State. Their frank, simple designs put to shame the majority of the mealy medals shown by the official sculptors, and the frank treatment of his large and small figures throughout the exhibit sets Manship far apart from the ranks of the clay puddlers.

In Gallery No. 17 I like especially Heinz Warneke's compact figure carved in teak, "Meditation," and a head of a young woman, also in wood, by Erwin F. Frey, young sculptor of Columbus, O. "Negro Boy," by Benjamin Kurtz and "Anatole France," by Jo Davidson are also outstanding. Gallery No. 18 yields up "Head of a Cambodian," by Ernest Dielman, young "cut-direct" sculptor of New York City. It appeals to the sense of touch as all good sculpture should. Hunt Diederich, brilliant ironworker, has a lively pair of dogs here whose swift action is made to achieve repose by the composition.

Gallery No. 19 is the chamber of horrors that contains photographs and details of innumerable war memorials. Most of them are true to type. Sometimes the soldier wears a toga and sandals and a World War tin hat, sometimes he has on the pulpy clothes, almost invariably he makes stage gestures of heroism. Well done, popular, but deadly.

Even a full-sized volume could not do justice to the variety of this huge exhibit, which must be visited to be appreciated. A brief review like this one can only touch a few points. But the most heartening aspect of the affair, to me, is the fact that so many younger sculptors are working in a more honestly sculptural manner than the older group who compose the principal membership of the National Sculpture Society, and for showing their works the society is to be complimented. As a general view of the field of American sculpture, despite the many omissions, the exhibition at the California Palace of the Legion of Honor could hardly be bettered. But the visitor should take all his critical faculties with him when he visits it.

ROBE DESCRIBED

Ancient Chinese specifications for an emperor's robe are exemplified in a Ching dynasty robe recently acquired by the Metropolitan Museum, New York. In accordance with regulations in Ta Ching Hui Tien, the robe is bright fellow with collar and sleeves of slate blue. Nine gold dragons and five-colored clouds are interspersed with a group of twelve ornaments. Among these are the double "hsi," symbol of conjugal felicity, and the bat, symbol of happiness. The Ching dynasty extended from 1644 to 1911.

NEW AND OLD EXHIBITORS

Drawings and wood sculpture by Ward Montague, young sculptor recently come here to live from San Francisco, are receiving their first local showing in the modern section on the sixth floor at Bullock's.

Montague, who worked in San Francisco with Ralph Stackpole and later in Mexico City with Diego Rivera, is an excellent product of the young school of "cut-direct" sculptors upon whom Stackpole has shed his fine influence, a group that, after reviewing the great exhibit of American sculpture in the northern city, I am more than ever convinced will play a great part in the dawning future.

This group are at once in revolt against the "puddeny" practices of clay modellers, and, through various courses have made connections with the revived native art of Mexico. Their aim is to bring back, by the habit of cutting directly their ideas into stone or wood, the lost relation between the sculptur's aim, his tools and his materials.

The material often plays a part in the formation of the idea. Thus in Montague's panel of two heads the nature of the grain obviously dictated the composition. The graceful little work of a girl's half-figure holds carefully the column of the wood, while the wide head of a girl in the center of the room finely retains the beauty and simplicity of its massy roundness without offending one's sense of proportion.

His aim, I judge from the few pieces shown, is to vitalise the material he works in by giving it human qualities, rather than to attempt an imitation of humanity in wood. This is sound sculptural doctrine and is obviously producing results.

Many of the drawings are very beautiful indeed. They are sensitive studies of women's heads and bodies, even the most detailed of them never losing the sculptor's sense of form. The combination of grace and clarity in his work is very satisfying. There are also two studies of superb Chinese carved heads in the Munthe collection that indicate the young artist knows where he can best learn.

A panel by Clifford Wight in wood and a stone relief, also shown here, reflect more strongly the native Mexican influence and do not reveal the sensitiveness of Montague's work. It is possible, however, that they were done in Mexico for Mexican eyes, as Wight also worked with Rivera. These two artists are forming classes for the summer in direct carving, forging and tempering of tools, and selection and preparation of materials.

Brigante's Drawings

Nicholas Brigante has not put his work before the public since the historic "Independents" show in the old Taos Block many years ago. Now he emerges with water colors and ink drawings at Zeitlin's book shop.

The water colors are landscapes and still lifes in which he extracts the essential lines and forms, building up a picture which floats and moves on the paper. Those which show mountains and trees are especially attractive and it is good to note that while he has obviously studied the Chinese landscape masters, he has not imitated their manner but has been led by their example to study carefully the forms of our own California mountains and trees. His compositions, built always in fine rhythmic movement, are very satisfying.

The drawings are done with ordinary blue-black ink in thin pen-line and full brush and with this medium he has done a number of works of an extraordinary suggestive beauty showing figures moving amid trees or a solitary woman in a great landscape, the actual setting of which is not revealed but is only conveyed to us by the beauty of his black and white design and spacing.

Orrin White

At the Ainslie Galleries Orrin White has a group of California landscapes and several of the graceful decorative pictures which he extracts from the beauty spots hereabout.

White, who lives north of Pasadena, has come to know the effects of light and color on the Sierra Madre. One of the best pictures here shows the last glow on these mountains seen through well-arranged clumps of eucalyptus.

Sycamores in green canyons, alders of the Sierras yellow against glowing granite, a decorative picture of Catalina's trees, cliffs and blue sea, and a picture of a Mexican market beneath an old church, are among the subjects shown.

PORTRAIT PRESENTED

A portrait of Rev. Gregory V. Biddle by John Neagle and a portrait of Edward Everett by Samuel F. B. Morse, inventor of the telegraph, have been given the Detroit Institute of Arts by Dexter M. Ferry, Jr.

News of the Art World

The Argus, San Francisco monthly magazine devoted to art in the West, discontinued publication with its April issue after two years of excellent work. This is a real loss because it was a genuinely educational publication. Unexpired subscriptions have been transferred to the Art Digest, published by Peyton Boswell at Hopewell, N. J., which, beginning with its May issue, will devote more space than heretofore to art in the West. Nelson H. Partridge, Jr., publisher of the Argus, announces that while his paper closed books with all bills paid, he could no longer meet the monthly deficit.

Art News Annual

Once more the Art News, sumptuously printed and lavishly illustrated annual supplement is at hand, containing eighteen plates in color by old and modern masters and a series of articles by eminent authorities on various art subjects. Walter Heil writes on the Jules Bache collection, Ananda K. Coomaraswamy on Indian sculpture, Maud Dale on French Art in the Chester Dale collection, Royal Cortissoz on the character and art of Arthur B. Davies, Malcolm Vaughan on the Carl Hamilton collection. Not only the illustrations to the 100 pages of text, but those in the advertisements of art dealers the world over make this annual an invaluable reference work. The Art News is published at 20 East Fifty-seventh street, New York City.

San Pedro Exhibit

The San Pedro branch of the Los Angeles Public Library will exhibit through June, opening the 15th inst. the S. Macdonald Wright and the Charles Joseph Rider collections of modern American paintings. Recent sales to the latter collection include "Water Lily Synchromy No. 3" by S. Macdonald Wright, "Two Goats" by James Redmond and "Still Life" by Albert H. King.

Superb Drypoints

The long-awaited series of drypoint heads by the American etcher Cadwalader Washburn has arrived at the Print Rooms and is now on exhibition. In this field Washburn has no peer. Among his portraits are some of the finest that have ever been executed in dry-point.

New Exhibitions

The Wilshire Galleries are showing this month a selected group of works by California painters. At the Jules Kievits Galleries, Pasadena, desert paintings by John L. O'Hagan and paintings by American and European artists are on view.

Bertha Lum's Prints

Bertha Lum, known the world over for her color block prints of Chinese and Japanese subjects, has just returned to Pasadena from two years in China. An exhibition of her prints, paintings and screens will open at the Montmartre Cafe, Hollywood, on the 15th inst., for two months.

Finds Greek Statues

A Grecian farmer has recently found two well-preserved statues—one representing Niobe with her daughter; the other Artemis shooting arrows at Niobe's children—according to a Crete report in the Manchester Guardian. It is planned to excavate at the site of the finds.

Wendt Recovers

William Wendt, A.N.A., is reported nearing complete recovery following a recent serious operation which synchronized with the opening of his April exhibition at the Stendahl Galleries.

A group of California painters are exhibiting on the second floor at Bullock's. Landscapes predominate in the showing though Stewart Robertson and Ann Baldaugh contribute interesting figure subjects.

Hanson Puthuff shows two fine landscapes, notably "Autumn Sky," and has also a group of smaller works here. Leland Curtis is represented by his vigorous High Sierra subjects and George Brandriff by "Holiday," with its dancing play of reflections in the water of San Pedro Harbor.

Two large desert canvases by F. Grayson Sayre show him at his best. Duncan Gleason shows both his popular ship subjects and some figure paintings. Others represented are Cuprien, William M. Griffith and Anna Hills of Laguna, and Ralph Holmes, Pastor, Alice Blair, Thomas and L. Berman, the latter exhibiting for the first time.

MUSEUM INVITES MURALS

The Los Angeles Museum, Exposition Park, has just published a prospectus inviting artists the world over to submit designs for a mural painting to adorn a continuous friese space on the four walls of Mural Hall, the recently completed great central foyer of the second unit of the museum.

"White Torso," by Alexander Archipenko.

The prospectus itself is a remarkable document and if designs submitted, the selection of the committee, and the final judgment of the museum authorities in choosing the winning design bear out the spirit of the prospectus, Mural Hall should some day bear upon its walls a great work of art. Excerpts from the invitation follow:

A design is desired which will reveal, largely and beautifully, the great wonder and value of man's creative spirit as manifested in artistic and scientific endeavor. Los Angeles Museum is an educational institution devoted to the historical, scientific and artistic interests of man and it is appropriate that the great mural of Mural Hall should organize into one great [illegible] Dynamic of Man's Creative [illegible]

The design is not restricted as to treatment; it may be done abstract[illegible] ly, concretely, or in a combination of the abstract and the concrete. The theme of the mural outlined below may be developed as the designer wishes; the suggestion is made however that the south wall, together with the southern halves of the east and west walls, be utilized for that portion of the mural which is expressive of artistic and scientific development in the "Past." Central in the south wall should be the motif of creation, man's [illegible] and power to embody his thinking, feeling and perception in new forms—forms which are both commentary of the past and productive of continuously renewed interests and satisfactions. This motif should be progressively developed on the walls of the southern half of the room to the points at the top of the arched openings in the east and west walls, these two points representing "Today," this brief interlude between the past and the future. Springing from these two points the mural should open out on the northern halves of these walls and culminate on the north wall in a magnificent design expressive of man's forward reaching spirit which, in the "Future," through the production of new perceptions and new objects, will open new life to us, refreshing and enlarging our spirit and preparing the way for still greater progressions, still greater consummations in art and science.

[illegible] POEMS OF EMILY [illegible] Edited by her [illegible] Martha Dickinson Bianchi [illegible] Alfred Leete Hampson. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

[illegible] discovery of over a hundred [illegible] unpublished poems of [illegible] Dickinson has naturally cre[illegible] among the [illegible] sister La[illegible] called them out and [illegible] long years ago. [illegible] in an attic they were [illegible] While some seem [illegible] adding and [illegible] can be taken as [illegible] in the form in which [illegible] Emily left them. [illegible] for the [illegible] of Emily Dick[illegible] is the acceptance of [illegible] that "It is [illegible] but a metre-making [illegible] that makes poetry." [illegible] Wentworth Higginson, to [illegible] first sent her poems, [illegible] publish[illegible] somewhat slow in [illegible] practicing this [illegible] W. D. Howells, [illegible] of the Atlantic, in first [illegible] and then returning a par[illegible] of Emily's [illegible] to correct a [illegible] before it could be [illegible] to appear in print, seemed to them quite justifiable. But Father Time leisurely proceeded to bring about another of his celebrated revenges. At this date Emily Dickinson's work—halting rhymes included—is not only accepted at its full and really great value, but is sometimes praised to the point of fulsomeness. English critics now couple her name with that of Poe and declare this pair to be the only American poets worthy of the name. Yet the two are mutually exclusive, since no poet of his generation so thoroughly understood the mystic power, the rhythmic tyranny of ordered sound over the human spirit. It was this deep knowledge combined with well-nigh perfect artistry that ennobled Poe.

Emily's pre-eminence depends largely on the fact that her verse is an absolutely sincere diary of a soul's sojourn in matter; on her understanding and secret sympathy with less developed forms of life; on her occasional golden phrases; her unusual and striking metaphors, as well as on the plenitude of garnered and guarded emotion which gives a rare quality to her lightest line.

That Miss Dickinson was herself unaware of the extent of this hidden hoard until her one lover appeared and revealed it to her astounded self, is quite evident in her love poems, as for instance, in her quaint saying that her life "stood like a loaded gun, in corners" until its owner came. In this new volume are many love poems, inspired by the man she loved and could not permit herself to take, since he was married.

Since burning Sappho's day the only feminine love poems that compare with Emily Dickinson's are the "Sonnets From the Portuguese." There is a tragic divergence between the two, since the tone of having and holding is one and the voice of her who finds the Angel with the flaming sword guarding the gateway leading to The Land of Heart's Desire, is quite another.

THE COMPLETE POEMS OF ERNEST DOWSON. With illustrations by Elinore Blaisdell. The Medusa Head, New York.

This beautiful limited edition of the poems of Ernest Dowson is suitably illustrated by Elinore Blaisdell. It is bound and boxed in royal purple and is in every way a choice volume. It carries the preface written in 1896.

Those who long ago learned to value Ernest Dowson's poems know what an authentic lyric strain was his, reminiscent of the polished seventeenth-century lyricists to whom we still turn for lovely, musical verse.

His rythms fall like delicate traceries etched by the frost on glass. They are musical, tender, appealing and, admittedly, sentimental.

We see in them the lonely poet mourning for his lost love, the musing poet watching nuns at adoration, the exiled poet singing of the sad waters of separation, the reflective poet apostrophising one in Bedlam. Each poem is like chiseled porphyry a work of art artfully contrived. Dowson loved the intricate old forms—the ballade, the rondeau, the villanelle, the requiem, the elegy, and he did each with beauty and precision. If he availed himself too freely of poetic license in the way of rhyme, that, too, was a part of the mannered style he made his own.

The following is one of the lovely poems:

THE GARDEN OF SHADOW

Love heeds no more the sighing of the wind
Against the perfect flowers: thy garden's close
Is grown a wilderness, where none shall find
One strayed, last petal of one last year's rose.

O bright, bright hair! O mouth like a ripe fruit!
Can famine be so nigh to harvesting?
Love, that was songful, with a broken lute
In grass of graveyards goeth murmuring.

Let the wind blow against the perfect flowers,
And all thy garden change and glow with spring:
Love is grown blind with no more count of hours
Nor part in seed-time nor in harvesting.

Oscar Sherwin became a full-fledged author by coincidence rather than design. He dropped into the John Day Company's office last year in search of an editorial job. When asked about his qualifications he stated that he had written three books. He didn't get the job—there was none open—but he did get invited to bring his books in for consideration. The first of them, "Mr. Gay," being a picture of the life and times of the author of the "Beggar's Opera," is published by the John Day Company. His two other "qualifications" are scheduled for later publication.

A Group of Recent Books

HISTORY OF EUROPEAN MORALS. By William E. H. Lecky. D. Appleton, New York.

When Lecky published in 1869 his "History of European Morals" he gave the world quite as much of a shock as ever it has received from later iconoclasts. His philosophical consideration of such virtues as chastity, patriotism, charity and humility, placing them as qualities which in some ages have been considered as of transcendant importance and in others as of minor value; his division of the virtues as the heroic, the amiable and the religious, and his inquiry into the effect the changing emphasis on each group has had on history from time to time, startled his readers of half a century ago. There is many a person who now considers himself an intellectual who might read and ponder with profit these two volumes. For in them Lecky has laid down principles that have withstood the test of time and are still vital and applicable to life today.

These are two of the volumes in the Appleton Dollar Library, which includes books of lasting interest in all fields. They are in pocket size and are attractively bound. Other titles are Huxley's "Man's Place in Nature," Isaacson's "Face to Face With Great Musicians," Herndon and Weik's "Abraham Lincoln" and Spencer's "Education."

A TOUR THROUGH ENGLAND AND WALES. By Daniel Defoe. Everyman's Library. E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.

This addition to Everyman's Library is in two volumes. It has an introduction by G. D. H. Cole in which he points out the fact that the book still has historical value. It is one of those books I have long had a speaking acquaintance with without having read from cover to cover. When in Warwick two years ago I recalled pleasantly Defoe's clear description of the town and castle and was surprised to find that it still held good. The same is true of much of the book, for in it we find Defoe laid his foundations firmly, which is why his structure stands.

This is only one of several new volumes in Everyman's Library. Others are "A New Book of Sense and Nonsense," edited by Ernest Rhys, with illustrations by Arthur Rackham; Bunyan's "Grace Abounding;" "Eighteenth Century Plays," edited by John Hampden, which contains some of the best of the Restoration drama, and Hazlett's "Plain Speaker," a group of essays with an introduction by P. P. Howe.

THE ART OF PLAY PRODUCTION. By John Dolman, Jr. Harper & Bros., New York.

This is an exhaustive and autoritative treatise on the art of play producing, setting, casting, acting and directing. The chapters include the initiative impulse; artistic detachment in the theater; play production and design; preparation of the play; planning the action; stage business and, in fact, every phase of the art as it exists today.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF DRAMATIC ART. By Donald Clive Stuart. D. Appleton & Co., New York.

Donald Clive Stuart here presents an interesting account of the development of dramatic art from its origin in Greek tragedy to its latest forms as evidenced in expressionism and the new stagecraft. His book is not a discussion of individual plays as examples of technique, but rather a study of movements and the long, slow growth by which drama among the western nations evolved from its crude beginnings to its sometimes exotic flowering among the moderns.

Prof. Stuart has supplied detailed sections on Greek tragedy and comedy; on the medieval drama (Latin, French and English;) the French and Italian drama of the Renaissance; later continental drama in Germany, French and Russia. He includes only those forms which have contributed definitely to the development of the art as it appears on the modern stage. "The Development of the Dramatic Art" supplements most admirably Barret H. Clark's well-known "A Study of the Modern Drama."

THE PHILOSOPHER-COURTIER

BY F. C. S. SCHILLER

LEIBNIZ. By Herbert Wildon Carr. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

Publishers evidently think, since Dr. Will Durant created such a furor, that there is a public for books on the history of philosophy, and in consequence several series of such books are springing up both in this country and in England. The Leaders of Philosophy series, originated in England by Messrs. Benn, is under the competent editorship of Prof. J. L. Stocks of Manchester University, and Prof. Carr's book on Leibnitz is the first fruit of this enterprise.

It gives a readable, lucid and attractive picture of a sage who succeeded where Plato failed and contentedly remained a philosopher-courtier, with no ambition to become a philosopher-king. Or at any rate, he continued patiently to ply his royal and princely correspondents with the subtle speculations of his ingenious mind, though it is difficult to believe that they really appreciated them.

The relations of philosophers to princes forms a curious and pathetic chapter in the history of thought. Plato was sold into slavery by the elder Dionysius and sent home from Syracuse by the younger. Aristotle was valued by Alexander only as an editor of Homer and indulged in as a collector of zoological curios. Christina of Sweden's love of philosophy and of untimely lectures at 5 a.m. speedily finished off Descartes. Voltaire and Frederick of Prussia led as much of a cat-and-dog life as if they had been man and wife. As kings get rarer and philosophers commoner such catastrophes will undoubtedly grow less likely; but Leibnis is likely to remain the supreme example of the philosopher-courtier.

His place as a philosopher, on the other hand, will probably remain ambiguous. For the more he is studied the more his ingenuity is recognized; yet such recognition does not appear to mean that he carries conviction. He always seems too ingenious to be credible. All his suggestions, the pre-established harmony, the resolution of nature into windowless monads, the optimism of his best of all possible world produce this same impression. Moreover, in none of these cases will his suggestion bear thinking out quite to the bitter end. The pre-established harmony between free acts which are yet completely predetermined and predestined; the relation of the monads to the Central Monad (God); the latter's choice of the best possible world (because he either could not think of, or could not create, one perfectly good?)—all seem finally to end in obscurity.

Either Leibniz was too anxious to smooth over difficulties or he was too much of a courtier to drive his argument home. Prof. Carr does his best to make the most of his hero and claims that he was a forerunner of post-Newtonian physics and the inventor of a new theory of substance. But he rather overlooks that Leibniz had studied Aristotle at first hand in a way none of his predecessors among modern philosophers had. So he may well have got the idea of substance as activity from Aristotle, in whom may be found both the view of substance as a substratum and also as an energeia. But the latter takes some finding and so is missed by those Aristotelians who merely follow traditional interpretations; moreover, Prof. Carr perhaps exaggerates a little the definiteness of Leibniz's anticipations of modern activism. Still, one is glad to get his stimulating study on a fascinating figure in the history of thought.

Will Rogers is the latest recruit to those cheering for Walter Duranty's "Curious Lottery." Rogers says, "I think it is great. Duranty is a great fellow, and when he writes anything about Russia, you can know that he knows it. I hope his book does fine, he is awfully deserving, and is simply a godsend to all Americans visiting Russia."

"Modern youth is unhappy—it is out for a good time, but doesn't know the technique. It thinks all it has to do is let itself go and not give a damn. Having a good time is an art"—from "They Still Fall in Love," by Jesse Lynch Williams, published by Charles Scribner's Sons.

WORLD PEACE CAUSE ADVANCED

David Hunter Miller and James T. Shotwell in Two Authoritative Volumes Give Us Accounts of the Paris Peace Pact and the League Covenant

BY THOMAS F. FORD

THE PEACE PACT OF PARIS. A Study of the Briand-Kellogg Treaty. By David Hunter Miller. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.

To all those who believe in the efficacy of treaties in the promotion of peace, the Peace Pact of Paris is one of the most significant steps toward world peace that has been taken since the formation of the League of Nations.

When on April 6, 1927, M. Briand, in his now famous message to the people of the United States, declared that France "would be willing to enter into an agreement with America mutually outlawing war," the first stone was laid for the rearing of a structure that promises to be a powerful factor in the peace of all nations.

The treaty, known here as the "Kellog-Briand Pact" has been ratified by the United States Senate. Most of the nations have become signatory to it. Not the least significant feature is that Russia was one of the early signatories.

The book breaks naturally into two parts. The first part deals with the history, inception and formation of the treaty. The second part covers the diplomatic correspondence, the complete text and all the important documents that came into being as a result of the treaty's formation.

Dr. Miller is sure that the pact will in no way interfere with the League of Nations. He is confident, indeed, that it will strengthen that organization and give a new and vigorous impulse to its already numerous and important achievements.

The spirit and purpose of the pact were well stated by Mr. Kellogg when he said: "It is peace, not war, that we are seeking." With that spirit as its guiding force, there is every hope that the pact will become a great force for the progress of the finest ideal which blind and blundering man has ever yearned toward the ideal of universal peace.

BOOKS DISCUSS PEACE ADVANCE

THE DRAFTING OF THE COVENANT. By David Hunter Miller. Introduction by Nicholas Murray Butler. 2 Vols. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.

In these two volumes we find the inner history of the projects, conferences and debates which preceded and accompanied the framing of the Covenant of the League of Nations. This work will be at once invaluable and indispensable to the historian as source material. The author speaks with the fullest knowledge and authority. He was legal adviser to President Wilson and was intimately acquainted with every step taken in the Paris conference.

The story has been reconstructed from the wealth of documents and papers, many of which are now revealed to public gaze for the first time, as well as from personal records kept at the time. Every step in the long and important conference is here set down together with the views of Smuts, Lord Cecil, and, in fact, all of the prominent statesmen, diplomats and soldiers who took part in the framing of that historic document.

WAR AS AN INSTRUMENT OF NATIONAL POLICY. And Its Renunciation in the Pact of Paris. By James T. Shotwell, Harcourt, Brace & Co., New York.

This is a penetrating and authoritative analysis of the Paris Pact or the Kellogg-Briand Pact, as we are wont to call it in this country. The author has included an able, original and profound study of the whole history of war, and of the vital part it has played in the conduct of human affairs. He gives clear and cogent reasons why, in the past, at least, it has been impossible to conduct international affairs of nations on other than a force or war basis.

Like Dr. Miller, who writes the book reviewed above, Prof. Shotwell has been closely associated with European political affairs. It has even been hinted that Prof. Shotwell had a hand in suggesting to M. Briand the feasibility of the treaty with the United States. Whatever there may be in this, the author shows clearly that he is in complete command of his subject.

Prof. Shotwell would have the United States take a more active part in the international conferences that will be called from time to time in efforts to advance the political and economic position of Europe. He believes that we would be the gainer by participating in these conferences and that our cooperation would go far toward encouraging Europe in her valliant struggle to get back onto a pre-war basis.

The book is one that has in it a heartening message for all those interested in the progress of peace. In the outlawing of war by treaty, the peace movement is given a fresh impetus. In the renunciation of war as a national policy there is a fine hope, for this means that we shall substitute some more sane method, a method more in keeping with our vaunted Christian principles and our supposedly good common sense.

NOBEL. Dynamite and Peace. By Ragnar Sohlman and Henrik Schuck. Translated by Brian and Beatrix Lunn. The Cosmopolitan Book Corporation, New York.

Alfred Nobel was one of the world's greatest inventive geniuses and also one of its most baffling enigmas. His tremendous fortune built up in the manufacture of the two most destructive agencies known to man, dynamite and nytroglycerine, is paradoxically being used, through the Nobel Prize Foundation, for the furtherance of world peace and the encouragement of scientific research and literary excellence.

In this biography the whole story of his long and busy life is told. It is as fascinating as fiction and as dramatic as an account of the most daring and reckless soldier of fortune. Noble was, while a dreamer and an idealist, at the same time a hard-headed, but not a hard-hearted person. He was an excellent business man and even to the last was thoroughly familiar with all the multitudinous details of the vast business structure he built up.

The Book League of America has chosen for its April book, "Instinct and Intelligence," by Maj. R. W. G. Hingston, a Macmillan publication. It is an intensely interesting study by a well-known scientist who knows how to write, of instinct in animals.

CHURCH DESIGN IN AMERICA

THE WORK OF CRAM AND FERGUSON, Architects. Including work by Cram, Gordon and Ferguson. With introduction by Charles D. Maginnis. The Pencil Points Press, New York.

This magnificent volume is a monument to the architects whose work it presents in a series of pictures that proves even to the most casual observer that there is such a thing as ecclesiastical architecture in America.

Mr. Maginnis, in his able introduction, gives to Cram the credit for the great achievement of "deflecting the incipient Romanesque intention so as to issue in a superbly plausible and even triumphant Gothic fabric."

Cram, he finds, "has never for a moment ceased to be heart and soul a Mediaevalist. The Gothic idea is the very core of his philosophy. Throughout the years he has continued to challenge the spiritual claims of our own confident civilization and to declare his faith in the mediaeval type of society."

Cram and Gordon remained in partnership until 1913. After that the divergence of the two became apparent. Cram remained the mediaevalist, while Gordon became more and more a modernist.

Contrasting the two we have this: "In the austere quality of his (Cram's) mind and the logical enterprise of his pencil one detects a resemblance to McKim as certainly as one perceives the anology between Goodhue and Stanford White. If, in his later years of independence, Goodhue's sympathies inclined more and more to the delicate flamboyance of the French Gothic, no less significantly was Cram observed to resort to the early and more massive English sobriety."

Those who take the time to study the many magnificent illustrations in this beautiful quarto will be impressed at our achievements in church architecture in America, and in other types of building here shown.

Original Story by Elsie Janis

"Close Harmony," Paramount's all-talking picture featuring Buddy Rogers and Nancy Carroll, is now playing at Lazarus's Alhambra, with a supporting cast which includes Jack Oakie, Skeets Gallagher, Greta Granstedt, Harry Green and a group of Fanchon and Marco dancing girls.

Elsie Janis wrote the original story of "Close Harmony," which reveals the romance between the youthful leader of a "hot melody" jazz band and a beautiful tap dancer. Buddy Rogers plays soothing tunes on his saxophone and also registers as a trap drummer, while a pair of song-and-dance men provide the comedy relief. Outstanding song hits of the picture are "She's So, I Dunno" and "I'm All A-Twitter."

Added features on the current program at Lazarus's Alhambra include "In a Toy Shop," new musical novelty; "Whirls and Girls," new Mack Sennett talking comedy; Jack Benny, in a new Vitaphone comedy, and Fox Movietone news.

HAWAIIAN SETTING USED

Armed with two yards of mosquito nettings, a raincoat and a pair of boots, Paul Page left for New Orleans with Benjamin Stoloff and members of the Fox company. The company, which includes Lola Lane and Warren Hymer, will proceed from New Orleans to Havana, where exterior scenes will be made for the Fox production, "The Girl From Havana." The company will remain at the Cuban metropolis for seventeen days and return by boat through the Panama Canal to Los Angeles. "The Girl From Havana" will be a Fox all-talking production.

MONEY IN PLENTY

Stuart Erwin, the comedian, says he has never had so much money in his pockets before. Although the currency is all stage money "Stew" claims the deception is a pleasant feeling. He is playing the role of a "butter and egg man" in Cara Bow's "Dangerous Curves," a Paramount production.

GOSSIP OF THE BOOK WORLD

Varina Howell, the wife of the ill-fated President Jefferson Davis.

The Overland Monthly, founded by Bret Harte in 1868, issued a Mark Twain Number this April. It will be recalled that Mark Twain helped his friend Harte establish this magazine and contributed the article, "By Rail Through France," to the first number. This special edition contains reminiscences of Mark Twain by Julian Hawthorne, James R. Clemens, and William R. Gillis. There are also tributes to Mark Twain by Henry Van Dyke, Walter De la Mare, and E. F. Benson.

To add a few European titles to the list of spring books, the editor of Cosmopolitan Book Corporation went to England. But the best book he found, a biographical novel of Shakespeare, called "To the Sun," was written by an American living in Paris, A. E. Fisher.

"Memoirs of a Fox-Hunting Man" by Siegfried Sassoon, which Coward-McCann published in America, has been awarded the James Tait Black Memorial Prize for the year's best novel, according to Faber & Gwyer, the London publishers. The prize is for 250 pounds, the most valuable in Great Britain, and has been won in previous years by such books and men as "Riceyman's Steps," Arnold Bennett; "A Passage to India," E. M. Forster; "Memoirs of a Midget," Walter De la Mare; "Queen Victoria," Lytton Strachey; "The Lost Girl," D. H. Lawrence.

There is a generous part of Ludwig Lewishon's "Mid-Channel" devoted to an examination of the fundamental Jewish teachings as expressed in the Talmud, which Mr. Lewisohn has been studying for several years. He learned to read Hebrew for this purpose.

The second book in the "American Trials" series being published by Alfred A. Knopf, is "The Molineux Case." The first trial was one of the most important to the cause of civil liberties ever tried, the second one of the most baffling and interesting of criminal cases. The series is being edited by Samuel Klaus of the New York Bar.

If one is to judge from what R. H. Mottram ("The Spanish Farm") has written in the preface to "Joseph and His Brethren" we would not say, offhand, that he partook of what he calls "the Cocktail School of Literature." Of Course, as he says, "It all depends on what you want. If you like that school of fiction—which plays variations upon such incidents as that of Lord Snooks shooting the lovely Miss Jones in the back as she is coming out of the bathroom—all right! But if so, you had better not read Mr. Mottram's new book "The Boroughmonger" (published by Little, Brown & Co.) a story about a young "backstairs descendant" who is jockeyed into political constituency, the election providing one of the central episodes of the book.

PROFESSORS AND DETECTIVES

What do college professors talk about in social gatherings of their own kind? According to Marjorie Nicolson, who writes in the April Atlantic Monthly on "The Professor and the Detective," they are more likely to discuss detective stories than anything else. They are, she tells us, devoted readers of this type of fiction. And Marjorie Nicolson ought to know, for she is an associate professor of English at Smith College. Replying to those who would say that professors find in such stories an escape from the drab lives they lead, she begins by denying that professors do lead drab lives and then continues:

"Yes, the detective story does constitute escape; but it is escape not from life, but from literature. We grant willingly that we find in it release. Our 'revolt'—so mysteriously explained by the psychologists—is simple enough: We have revolted from an excessive subjectivity to welcome objectivity; from long-drawn-out dissections of emotion to straightforward appeal to intellect; from reiterated emphasis upon men and women as victims either of circumstances or of their glands to a suggestion that men and women may consciously plot and consciously plan; from the 'stream of consciousness' which threatens to engulf us in its Lethean monotony to analyses of purpose, controlled and directed by a thinking mind; from formlessness to form; from the sophomoric to the mature; most of all, from a smart and easy pessimism, which interprets men and the universe in terms of unmoral purposelessness to a rebelief in a universe governed by cause and effect. All this we find in the detective story.

"We are not alone in our revolt against the 'psychological novel,' but perhaps our cry for release is more passionate than that of any other group. As the new book lists appear in spring and autumn, as the brilliant new covers in violent hues bedeck the windows of the book shops, as the publishers' blurbs grow necessarily more and more superlative, you may hear rising and swelling in protest the litany of the professors: 'From the most profound and searching dissection of human emotions; from the poignant cry of the human soul; from the daring analysis of the springs of human action; from the wings of pain and ecstasy; from the brutal frankness of the seeker after truth; from the lyric passion of a youthful heart; from the biting and mordant wit of a satirist swifter than Swift; from the provocative demolishment of a fusty Victorianism; from the ruthless exposure of the shams and hypocrisies of the age—good Lord, deliver us!'"

How can we be sure of the difference between right and wrong? Is there any difference? Has our rebellion against the old order of conventional rules of conduct, based on premises which we can no longer believe, accomplished anything? What is the use of rebellion if it does not bring with it a new and more sane order? In "A Preface to Morals," Walter Lippmann says: "What most distinguishes the generation who have approached maturity since the debacle of idealism at the end of the war is not their rebellion against the religion and the moral code of their parents, but their disillusionment with their own rebellion." A Macmillan publication.

'Breezy Times' Follies Show

Tuneful songs, graceful dances, comedy aplenty and pretty girls feature the burlesque at the Follies for the engagement of "Breezy Times" announced to open today. Evelyn Myers, known as "The Little Venus," will feature several new dance routines. Louise Kellar and Mary Walton are cast in the bill and will have opportunity to display their singing and dancing talents. Comedy will be furnished by Max Coleman and Bumps Mack, who will attack "Old George Gloom" in eccentric character fashion. Other principals are Bob Burch, Melene Chorka and Syd Ray.

Hut in France Film Setting

Nancy Carroll and Buddy Rogers talk, dance and sing in "Abie's Irish Rose," Paramount's screen version of Anne Nichols's famous stage success, now playing at Lazarus's Million Dollar, with an all-star cast, which also includes Jean Hersholt, J. Farrell MacDonald and Bernard Gorcey. As an added feature today Abbey Krause, organist, will play a Mother's Day program.

Highlights of the picture are the scenes at the "Y" hut in France, where Abie meets Rosie and falls in love with her; the wedding day in Levy's house, when Abie and Rosemary are married, first by a rabbi and then by a priest, causing their fathers to disown them, and Christmas Eve, when the two fathers meet to see their grandchildren and forgive and plan for a happy future.

The supporting program at Lazarus's Million Dollar includes "Broadway Blues," new talking comedy; Ruth Etting, new songs; Talking Sportlight and Pathe talking news.

VAUDEVILLIAN SIGNED

Lowell D. Drew, vaudeville headliner, makes his talking picture debut in Paramount's filmization of S. S. Van Dine's mystery, "The Greene Murder Case."

Clogged Skin Pores

Cleaned by This Method

No more squeezing and pinching to get rid of those unsightly blemishes—blackheads. There is one simple, safe and sure way to get them out, and that is to dissolve them. To do this, just get about two ounces of calonite powder from your druggist—sprinkle a little on a hot, wet sponge—rub briskly over the blackheads for a few seconds—wash the parts and every blackhead will be gone.

Pinching and squeezing out blackheads make large pores, and you cannot get all of the blackheads out that way—while this simple application of calonite powder and water dissolves every particle of them and leaves the skin and pores in their natural condition.—[Advertisement.

"I didn't believe that I'd be any good, but I thought it was a fine excuse to stay here a few more days," said Sue, bobbing into the conversation again. "I wired my mother and had the test and—"

"Here she is," said Nick and beamed broadly.

HER WEAKNESS NOW

"He's my favorite actor," remarked Sue apropos of nothing at all.

"She's mine," from Nick, twiddling the salt and pepper shakers.

"How was it to work in the same picture? Oh, grand," from both together.

"Only," explained Sue. "Nick was afraid I wasn't getting enough close-ups and I was afraid to do very much acting for fear he wouldn't be seen enough, so neither of us know whether it was a good thing for the studio to work together or not. Embarrassed during the love scenes? I wasn't."

"Nor I," grinned Nick.

"He has two dimples and brown eyes," remarked Sue. "He's awfully nice and clean-cut, one of these freshly-scrubbed boys."

"She eats everything except string beans and green peas," from Nick.

And then they both laughed again.

"Did Nick say," said Sue turning serious, "that he's in 'Joy Street' coming to Loew's State in a week or two? That the studio is going to put talking sequences into his 'Chasing Through Europe,' that he's one of the rising young actors of Hollywood today?"

"And Sue's last picture is 'The Exalted Flapper,' and she's a big hit in the Fox Movietone Follies, and has a grand voice for the talkies?" queried Nick.

"I think it would be nice," said Sue dreamily, "if we were costarred together again."

Nick just grinned.

stance at least, she assures the skeptics, it will be she herself who will be heard when the Photophone production is released.

Menjou Plays Famous Piano in New Talkie

A piano used by the foremost concert masters of the day plays an important part in Adolphe Menjou's first all-talking picture for Paramount. The Menjou part in "The Concert" is that of a popular French pianist who is idolized by concert audiences everywhere.

The piano used is a large grand obtained for Paramount through L. E. Behymer. When Paderewski, Rachmaninoff, Pavlowa, Galli Curci and others of their fraternity come to the West it is Behymer who arranges their tour. The specially-built grand piano used by Menjou in "The Concert" has been played by many famous hands.

Menjou took his share of music lessons when he was a boy and followed this work for his own pleasure through the ensuing years.

Now Mrs. Hale to be Heard From Screen

Twelve years ago, when Gretchen Hartman was a slip of a girl playing in Broadway shows, William Fox, entranced by her voice and personality, signed her for his company. Then there were no devices by which Miss Hartman's lovely voice could be projected from the screen. Another handicap to Miss Hartman's picture career was that she was renamed Sonia Markova and endowed with a Russian background and a continental "past." The myth of Sonia Markova soon exploded and destroyed with it the cinema career of Gretchen Hartman. Now Miss Hartman, in private life the wife of Alan Hale and mother of two charming Hale youngsters, is again in vogue. Her children at school, she has harkened with even admitted eagerness to the inviting tones of the Movietone, Vitaphone and Photophone makers.

In "The Time, the Place and the Girl," opening at Warners' tomorrow, Miss Hartman plays Mrs. Winter, a colorful, dramatic role in support of Grant Wither and Betty Compson.

She also appears in Henry King's production, "She Goes to War," and has a role in the First National production starring Billie Dove, "Careers." This was directed by John Francis Dillon.

CARR GOES TO CANNON

Robert Carr, the 19-year-old writer under contract to Fox, has again been assigned to Raymond Cannon's staff as story adviser. He will assist on the talking-singing version of "Cradle Snatchers," the next production for the young director. After studio hours Carr is working on a screen adaptation of his novel, "The Rampant Age," which has run several editions in this country and abroad, as he has received offers for it in scenario form.

WILSHIRE... a new name for Barker Bros.' Upholstered Furniture

"The Wells" Occasional Chair, a new Wilshire model, $39.50*

15,000 Pieces of WILSHIRE Furniture Went Into Los Angeles Homes in 1928

A christening! Now Barker Bros.' upholstered furniture takes a new name—WILSHIRE. A name that in this locality represents an accepted residential district—a district that knows style and demands it. An appropriate name for this furniture which we can justly say is accepted. Last year 1200 chairs of one model were sold; 250 sofas of one favored style. A furniture that is moderately priced, yet of fine, dependable quality and always smartly styled. A substantial value for those who know style and recognize quality. Barker Bros. firmly believe WILSHIRE is the greatest possible furniture value at the price. 15,000 satisfied customers in 1928 agree. Because it was such an unquestioned success last year, plans for this year are bigger than ever. A few of the old models have been kept and are now shown in many coverings, and many new designs have been added. See the complete display, fifth floor.

*As a feature to introduce the new name, WILSHIRE, Barker Bros. have produced the new occasional chair, shown above—"The Wells." 18th century design, unusually large with solid mahogany frame. Shown in damask in the sponsored colors for the season; copper rose, reseda green and gold, and in henna tapestry, featured $39⁵⁰

What it means to produce yearly 15,000 pieces of Wilshire Furniture

Only because we can produce WILSHIRE in quantity is it possible to sell such quality and style at prices so outstandingly low. It takes expert buying, perfect organization to accomplish so successful a result.

197,654 ft. of selected woods

Last year this was the quantity of well-chosen woods that went into the 15,000 WILSHIRE pieces that were produced; 153,504 ft. of quartered gum wood; 14,549 ft. of birch; 9804 ft. of walnut; 19,397 ft. of tabasco mahogany.

$550,000 worth of fabrics

were used last year—120,000 yards. Damask is the leading fabric. The cuttings in damask alone are now averaging $10,500 per month.

Fabrics from nine countries

To get the best fabrics possible at the lowest price, foreign as well as domestic markets are used. This year our fabrics came from United States, England, Germany, Italy, France, Scotland, Belgium, China and Austria.

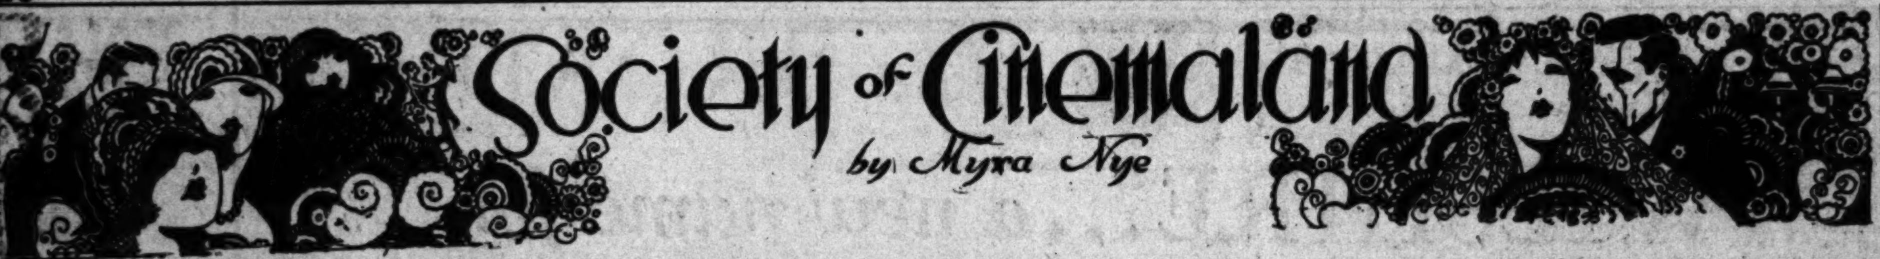
234,040 pounds of filling

Absolutely nothing but fine, clean filling goes into our upholstered pieces. Of the 234,040 pounds of filling that went to make these WILSHIRE pieces comforable, 94,000 pounds were fine middling cotton, 11,897 pounds of down; 87,378 pounds of moss and 40,765 pounds of hair.

And other materials

Even the little items like thread mount into amazing figures when such a quantity is produced. Over six million yards of thread were used last year! 5,560,000 ft. of twine; 465,000 upholstery springs; 618,000 ft. of webbing.

It is by watching these expenditures and buying skillfully that production costs are kept 'way below the usual, making the low price of WILSHIRE possible.



Society of Cinemaland

by Myra Nye

"Here comes that 'Show Boat.' Here comes that 'Show Boat.' Here comes . . ." With that one thought running like a refrain through the minds of all the Cinemalite, the long-heralded arrival of the famous vessel Monday evening at the Biltmore Theater, found a record assemblage waiting for the first faraway sounds of the steam calliope, the [illegible] and the crooning of the darkies, the first glimpse of Laura Plante as Magnolia and of Joseph Schildkraut as Ravenal.

Interesting for many reasons was this great western premiere, for was it not a picturization of Edna Ferber's novel? Was there not to be a prologue featuring the songs of Helen Morgan? Has not all Cinemaland been dancing to "Old Man River" and "I Can't Help Lovin' that Man," these many months? And was not James Gleason to be master of ceremonies? But final interest in the end centered upon the dazzling parties of the evening—fanfare indeed for the star-gazer.

Laura La Plante entertained—but here one must pause a moment to pay tribute to her appearance. In a flame-colored chiffon gown of that shade so obviously adopted by the brunette that no one ever associates it with a blond, the golden-haired star made a picture of subtle artistry, a consummate touch being the purple orchids at her shoulder. Her wrap was of gold and flame brocade. In her party were Messrs. and Mmes. Harold Lloyd, John C. Flynn, Robert Leonard, Lloyd Hughes, John Boles, Harold [illegible], Paul Conlon, Mervyn LeRoy, B. O. Bailiff, R. H. McCann, Dr. Leo Shulman, John McCormick, Ben Bard, Reginald Denny, Irvin Willat, Mrs. Lydia La Plante and Violet La Plante, Pauline Garon, Carmel Myers, Helen Ferguson, Patsy Ruth Miller, Carlotta King, Virginia Valli, Zasu Pitts, Lois Wilson, May McAvoy, Mrs. Frances [illegible], Julanne Johnston, Betty [illegible], Carmelita Geraghty, Lila Lee, Dorothy Mackaill, Kathryn Crawford, Charles Farrell, William Seiter, Maurice Cleary, George Baxter, and many others.

Carl Laemmle, had in his party Dr. Louis Ferdinand, Prince of Prussia, Anita Page, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Kester, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice DeMond, Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Wilhelm, and his daughter, while Carl Laemmle, Jr., entertained Sue Carol, Alice and Marceline Day, Fannie Hurst and Herbert Brenon.

A party which attracted much attention was that of Charlie Chaplin, who was with a lovely lady all in white. Harry Crocker and Diane Ellis. Lovely little Pauline Garon, in shell-pink chiffon with matching wrap, and wearing a dainty corsage of baby roses and fern, was with that tall and handsome George Baxter, and a fascinating couple they made.

Mrs. Joseph Schildkraut wore green taffeta with earrings, necklace, ring and bracelets of real jade.

Ruth Elder's costume was a Patou ensemble of salmon colored satin, trimmed with brown, and worn with a wrap of sable.

Kathryn Crawford, jewelled bodice and white tulle skirt, wrap of heavy green crepe-satin.

Barbara Kent, a bouffant orchid gown, matching chiffon velvet wrap lined with silver.

Merna Kennedy, yellow tulle and yellow chiffon velvet wrap, with corsage of orchids.

Mrs. Stanley Bergerman (Rosabelle Laemmle,) an imported gown of white taffeta, very bouffant, with bodice embroidered in pearls, her one ornament was a string of exquisite pearls.

Josephine Dunn, atmosphere lace with crimson velvet, silver-lined wrap.

Mrs. Craford Kent, Black velvet gown worn with white Spanish shawl and gardenias.

Mrs. James Gleason (Lucile Webster,) ecru lace over eggshell satin, her wrap being of the same shade with bias tiers and a "splash" bow at the shoulder.

Mrs. J. C. Draught, mother of Edward Laemmle, a rose pink chiffon gown with a handsome rose pink Chinese coat to match.

Peggy Hamilton was a vision in gold, her wrap of gold metal cloth and yellow velvet, interestingly draped and tied at the left shoulder in a large bow.

Wednesday evening saw another premier, this time at the Carthay Circle Theater, with Victor McLaglen as star and honored guest, and with an atmosphere decidedly different, the setting being laid in the Khyber Pass in Peshawar and in Flanders during the World War. Walter Catlett, as master of ceremonies, introduced Mr. McLaglen and Myrna Loy, lovely in an unusually long lace gown of a biscuit-shade, David Rollins, Mitchell Lewis, Francis Ford, Walter Long and others. Glimpsed during the intermission were Thelma Todd, in a very decollete green gown, Claire Windsor, stately in [illegible] and gossiping with friends about her trip; Peggy Hamilton, in orchid and green; Mrs. William [illegible], in black lace and white ermine; Sally Eilers, Fritz Feld and many of the officers of the picture, who lent added atmosphere by wearing their Black Watch costumes.

Reservations for the opening tomorrow evening of "The World We Live In," at the Repertory Theater, have been made by Cecil B. De Mille, Reginald Denny, Conrad Nagel, Fred Niblo, Mary Pickford, Joseph Schenck, Andres De Segurola, Joseph Schildkraut, Ernst Lubitsch, Sidney Howard, Paul Bern, Evelyn Brent, Mrs. Zane Grey, Myrna Loy, Anita Baldwin, Vera Gordon, Mrs. Guy Bates Post and scores of others.

For Prince Louis Ferdinand

The Breakfast Club in Riverside Drive was the scene of one of the most brilliant dinner-dances of the season Friday evening, when Peggy Hamilton entertained in honor of Prince Louis Ferdinand of Prussia.

Favors and place cards were in the form of engraved booklets, carrying pictures of the Prince, personally autographed, and the list of guests.

Joan Meredith Weds

One of the loveliest weddings of the season in Cinemaland was that of Joan Meredith who, at 4 p.m. Tuesday of last week in the Wilshire First Congregational Church, became the bride of Harry Kiener, in the presence of several hundred friends. The church was filled with spring blossoms, masses of white lilies and orchids banking the altar.

Given in marriage by her father, Dr. J. T. Jelks of Hot Springs, Ark., the bride made an exquisite picture in her imported gown of white taffeta, made en train and worn with a long veil, a family heirloom, caught into a Juliet cap embroidered with seed pearls. Her bouquet was of gardenias, lilies of the valley and maidenhair fern.

Miss Isabelle Jelks, sister of the bride, assisted as maid of honor, wearing a gown of yellow taffeta and matching picture hat, and carrying an arm bouquet of yellow tulips and fern. The attendants were Duane Thompson, in orchid georgette and carrying orchid tulips and maidenhair fern, and Mrs. Paul Edward Rising, a lifelong friend of the bride, who wore rose pink taffeta, made robe de style and painted in an unusual wild-rose design. Her bouquet was of rose pink tulips and lilacs.

Following the ceremony a reception and buffet supper took place at the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. Kiener in Warner Drive, Carthay Circle, 200 guests being in attendance, and among them the entire membership of "The Regulars," of which the bride is a member.

Mr. and Mrs. Kiener left at 7 p.m. for an extended honeymoon trip, the destination of which has been kept a secret.

Home from Trip

Claire Windsor returned last week from a trip of several months which took her via the Panama Canal to Havana, Miami, Palm Beach, New York City and Washington, D. C., as the guest of Capt. and Mrs. William Fawcett.

Miss Windsor was the recipient of many complimentary affairs in the East, among them a ball given in her honor at the Ritz-Carlton by Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Baruch of New York. Prior to her departure for Hollywood she also was given a luncheon at the Motion-Picture Club in New York by the Associated Motion-Picture Advertisers.

Among social events in Washington, Miss Windsor was presented to President Hoover and Vice-President Curtis, with whom she was photographed.

Many interesting affairs have been planned as a welcome to her by friends in Southern California.

Distinguished Exhibition

An event of interest for the coming week will be the opening of an exhibition of color prints from wood blocks at the Montmartre, Wednesday, the 15th inst. The exhibit is the work of Mrs. Bertha Lum, who has recently returned to the United States from her home in Peking.

Mrs. Lum, who with her younger daughter, Miss Peter Lum, is domiciled for the present in Pasadena, is well known in Hollywood, where she is being much entertained. Patronesses for the exhibit, which will be on display for some two months, will be Mrs. B. P. Schulberg, Mrs. Jack Dempsey (Estelle Taylor,) Mrs. Finis Fox, Mrs. Irvin Willat (Billie Dove,) Claire Windsor, Sue Carol and Ruth Elder.

Club Anniversary

In observance of the anniversary of its third year in the new building, 1215 Lodi Place, the Hollywood Studio Club entertained Tuesday evening with a formal "at home" for its friends. Several hundred members and guests were in attendance, dancing and cards being enjoyed throughout the evening.

Beach Parties

Lunching at the beach these days has become a favorite pastime of several of the Wampas Baby stars. Recently the Sea Breeze Beach Club was the setting for a charming affair given by Doris Dawson, who entertained Helen Twelvetrees, Betty Boyd, Helen Foster and Doris Hill.

Mr. and Mrs. "Buddy" Wattles (Duane Thompson) entertained at a pleasant dinner party given at the Sea Breeze recently. Their guests included Collette Merton, Mona Merton, Bubbles Dawn, T. Kendall Everest, Donald McDermott, Paul D. Endicott.

At the Plaza

Zita Moulton of "This Thing Called Love," is receiving her friends these days in her suite at the Hollywood Plaza. She is a graduate of Radcliff College and wife of Capt. H. Mountjoy Gordon, British officer in the World War and now a San Francisco resident. During her sojourn here the actress is being honored at many social functions.

Seen during the luncheon at the Hollywood Plaza Pig'n Whistle one day last week were John Barrymore, who came with Col. Mitchell, Molly O'Day and Sally O'Neill, Priscilla Dean, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Laemmle, Aileen Pringle, Dorothy Donnell, Franklin Pangborn, Ivan Lebedeff and Lloyd Hamilton.

The ushers were Charlie Banks and M. Davis. After a honeymoon trip Mr. and Mrs. Kiener will live in Carthay Circle.

At the age of 6 Ralph Theadore was little Willie in "East Lynne" with Ada Grey. Two years later he was young Bob Berry in the original production of "Shore Acres" staged by James A. Herne at McVicker's Theater in Chicago.

Hamlet's dad, wouldn't stay in its wooden overcoat; it bobbed up again, and this is the genesis of talking pictures that did talk, in Los Angeles:

At a secret showing in New York, audible movies that actually spoke were displayed to a select group of wealthy amusement purveyors, about 1910-11. The showing was proclaimed a tremendous success. Persons actually spoke and sang, miniature plays and operettas were given—anything, it was declared, could be reproduced to sight and hearing simultaneously. Martin Beck, then general manager of the Orpheum circuit, was one of the awed company, and he bid in the rights for some fabulous sum for the houses he controlled.

We were building the first Broadway Orpheum at the time, and were instructed to install the new talking pictures there as "one of the wonders of the age." We did, and here's how we did it, the then veil of secrecy now being rent:

In the picture booth in the rear of the balcony was the usual machine for projection. In the stage floor, almost half a block away, was a pit wherein a phonograph with a loud speaker horn was installed. Lew Smith, the operator in the booth, turned the crank of his projector to throw the pictures on the screen; Paul Paulsen, on the stage, cranked the phonograph. Push buttons were the only means of communication between them. They were supposed to operate the machines at a fixed, simultaneous rate of speed. The recording apparatus and the camera were integrally connected when the making was done, and they synchronized, but what two humans half a block apart could be expected to synchronize, especially when one couldn't see the result, and the other couldn't hear it? And there we were!

Paul has a quick, nervous temperament; Lew is a stolid, slow-moving individual. Lew in the booth could see but not hear; Paul on the stage back of the screen could hear, but couldn't see. The push buttons punched nervously by Paul hadn't the speedy reaction on Lew that Lew's push did on Paul; there were psychological differences in the men and thus there were infinitesimal differences in the speed of their signals, and greater discrepancies in the speed of their cranking. If the film flickered or jumped, Lew had to stop and adjust, but how should Paul know? He went right on—you heard voices, but saw nothing. If Paul's phongraph needle left the track or hopped a space, how should Lew know? The picture unwound, and lips moved futilely. Oh, it was ghastly!

CUSTOMERS WALK OUT

Now and then the film and the record did synchronize, by some marvel—and then we had just as good talking pictures as any I've seen since, even today; the same principle seems to govern now as then; I saw the first Vitaphone showing here a couple years ago and it wasn't a bit different from our showing in 1911. But how rarely they synchronized! When they did, it was seldom, and an accident purely; when they didn't, which was mostly always, it was tragedy to us—but to the dear public, the prize joke of the era. We had so blatantly and boisterously exploited our talking pictures that the reaction was something terrible. Folks walked out on 'em in droves; those who stayed did so to scoff and hoot us. We early ran out of subjects; the size of the disc regulated the length of the productions, and they were all very short, very puerile, very punk. The eastern producers early saw the futility of it, and in no time at all—a matter of weeks, as I recall it—we were using them only for chasers and soon not at all. What peans of joy Paul and Lew sang as they dismantled the apparatus, and shipped it back whence it came So ended talking pictures in Los Angeles for more than fifteen years.

And now, with the industry wild over this "new" phase of its "art" and every studio "gone talkie," is it any wonder that I can't get up any enthusiasm about them? Every time I see one—which is darn seldom—I think back to those old days of 1911; of Paul cussing volubly at Lew, all unhearing; of Lew swearing luridly at Paul, all unseeing; of gentle Clarence Drown puting up a brave front explaining to irate customers; of the lies and lies I wrote and told the while; the talking, squawking talking pictures, neither pictured nor talked!

We were fifteen years ahead of time, that's all—and Pop Fischer, the game old showman that he was, simply antedated all of us. We'd all have had the world by the tail—if the dern things only had synchronized! It has taken that long to make 'em do it—and even now, sometimes they slip!

RONALD COLMAN GAINS TRIUMPH

ern picture some of the others exhibited this week are lacking in the more positive elements of entertainment, because they are wholly engulfed in silence or dialogue is heard only at the climax. For example "Betrayal" at the Paramount. Emil Jannings's last picture discloses some of his finest acting, in which he is splendidly supported by Esther Ralston and Gary Cooper and is further aided by fine direction. But it rates only as a moderately interesting program picture, the strong drama of which somehow fails to make itself felt. Of its kind the picture is perfect, but unfortunately it belongs to a day that is rapidly disappearing, the day of the silent picture.

The same may be said of "Desert Nights" at the Capitol. It too has a synchronized score and like the Jannings picture the story is essentially adult and the characterizations are keen and understandable, but the absence of the spoken word is a handicap which is evidently recognized by audiences at this theater where almost every John Gilbert picture has been held over.

At this writing there has been no intimation that Ramon Novarro in "The Pagan" would not fill its scheduled place on the screen of the Capitol next week, nor does it require any divination to predict that the latter will be retained after its first week if for no other reason than the promised song by its star. The trio of principals in "Desert Nights" have won encomiums from every reviewer, Mary Nolan in particular ranking high in critical esteem not only for her acting but for her indifference to her appearance when the exigencies of the story demand that she forget her pronounced beauty.

PLAYS TITLE ROLE

George Bancroft has the titular part in "Thunderbolt," his second all-talking Paramount production.

CAMERA TYROS MAKE RECORDS

W. A. Wiborn are a few other prominent Los Angeles residents who are enthusiasts.

In the film colony Lon Chaney, Jack Mulhall, Dorothy Mackaill, Conrad Nagel, Charles Christie and the James Gleasons are but a scattering few of those who delight in shooting their own pictures outside the studios. The Gleasons are now planning to write a scenario in which all their friends will be characters, shooting the picture from thus unusual script.

Not only are the artistic possibilities of amateur work limitless, but the commercial possibilities of the amateur motion-picture camera may eventually parallel those of the still camera, it is said.

MANY CAMERAS SOLD

Within the past year or two sales of the small-type camera and projection machines have leaped astoundingly. One of the leading manufacturers of equipment hasn't caught up with his orders in two and a half years, although working twenty-four-hour shifts in the factory.

Another concern, a leading manufacturer of cameras for professional use in the studios, reports 80 per cent greater sale of amateur than professional cameras.

Already, it is said, a greater degree of perfection in color photography has been achieved by the amateur, simply because of unceasing experimentation, than by the professional.

Equipment for making home talkies is on the market. Sister's singing of "He's My Weakness Now" or "Roses of Picardy" as her taste runs, can be caught just like her favorite movie star.

Two general types of film are used. There was first the standard theatrical size, thirty-five millimeters wide, just as used in studios. Now on the market is the small-size film, fifteen millimeters in width. It is rapidly becoming very popular.

Many business and industrial organizations which hitherto used the standard theatrical type film are buying equipment for the smaller film. For, of course, one of the most important phases of amateur photography is that for industrial or educational purposes schools, churches, business organizations. The Army, Navy and general departments of the government use such films. Insurance concerns, doctors, welfare workers, organizations for racial betterment have turned to motion-picture photography to promulgate their doctrines whether of salesmanship, of human betterment or educational value.

There are not less than twenty-five business organizations in Los Angeles today who use amateur motion-picture equipment regularly.

Commenting on the rise of the amateur, Terry Ramsaye, editor of nondramatic productions for Pathe, author of "A Thousand and One Nights," history of motion-pictures, said:

WHAT RAMSAYE SAYS

"The escape of the motion-picture from the so-called industry of the motion picture is most sharply exemplified in the rise of the amateur and home screen. A few years past, less than 1000 persons were in complete and exclusive possession of the technology of the making of pictures. Today, there are perhaps 100,000 or 150,000 amateurs who know nearly as much about what is fit to put on the screen and how to get it there as yesterday's masters of the art. In addition, the motion picture has gone to work for science and research, for the railroads, for the manufacturers, for the churches, for the schools and almost any one who thinks he can use it.

"The motion-picture industry has made itself ridiculous in the eyes of the occasional intelligent observer by silly endeavors to hold the art to a monopoly of those interested in purveying entertainment in the theater. Exhibitors are still passing resolutions against church shows.

"Once upon a time the art of reading and writing was reserved for the priestcraft. Sometimes I wish it still were.

"The reasons for this escape of the movies from the movie masters are simple, obvious and inevitable. The makers of cameras and the makers of raw stock achieved both a saturation of the professional market and a high degree of competition among themselves. They had to let the public in to get a new market. They had to reduce the costs of mechanisms and materials to get a volume market. The public was ready to try to use the motion picture to say things because it had been demonstrated as a good medium for saying them.

"It may now, in this day of 1929, be put down as final that no one is going to control or monopolize the art of the motion picture.

TOM-TOM JAZZ BOOMS AGAIN

into a musical show. I played Lady de Winter. No, I didn't sing; that was one of the two nonmusical parts. And then came the invitation to resume the Buddy Miles role in 'Night Hostess,' out here. So."

TALKIES LOOM

Miss Lyons, her public's curiosity appeased, sighed.

"Of course I like the talkies," she said positively. "Two of the studios—Fox and United Artists—already have asked to see me. If I do any business with them it will have to be after 'Night Hostess;' we are going to San Francisco for four weeks when we finish here.

"The play is essentially the same; a few minor changes, but otherwise Buddy Miles, the night hostess, is still the girl she used to be."

"Buddy Miles!" echoed a voice from the stage.

The rehearsal went on.

SUSPECT IN MURDER

Jean Arthur, 1929 Wampas starlet, has been given her second major role, within three months. After the completion of "The Insidious Dr. Fu Manchu" she will start work in "The Greene Murder Case," Paramount's talking successor to "The Canary Murder Case."

"FU MANCHU" IS CRAFTY

Paramount's mystery melodrama, "The Insidious Dr. Fu Manchu," is adapted from Sax Rohmer's story of that name and portrays the activities of a crafty Chinese criminal.

By the Way

By EVA G. TAYLOR

Is the function of philosophy in this age of the world different in nature and scope from that of past periods?

However, it is, the philosophic mind persists in its effort to develop a satisfactory theory of life and conduct.

Philosophy, defined by Seneca as a guide of life, may now be defined as an effort to find one trail through the labyrinth of confused speculation. For one can no longer hope to understand the world "in principle, in general and as a whole."

Yet it is not impossible to have a philosophy of life that will carry one through its mazes and give strength for its vicissitudes.

Mr. M. C. Otto of the University of Wisconsin recognizes the slim chances that philosophy has for holding its own in this age. He says:

"Living as we do in a world where the demands made upon us are constantly mounting in number, and where the tempo of life is steadily accelerating, we are inclined to forego reflection altogether. We are too busy keeping the pace to ask whither. Yet it is obvious that no age was ever more in need of asking whither than ours."

Among other functions of value which philosophy may claim it is pointed out by Mr. Otto that it "may help men to liberate themselves from their idolatry of the familiar . . . may rescue them from their inveterate provincialism and nurture in them a free mind."

If, as the author quoted suggests, "it is recognized by the plain man and by the specialist that universality of knowledge is no longer attainable by any mind" the most one can do is to "study life's concrete expressions" with a view to extracting a workable principle.

To liberate the mind, yet not to ignore the claims for recognition which the ever-present familiar holds.

In other words, to preserve continuity with the concrete world about us while orienting our concepts to the larger life. Never to disregard the things about us, but to include them in the cosmic view.

To see where each thing fits into the segment of life's circle—for a segment is all we can contact now.

It is quite essential for one to have some philosophy of life if he would live above the brutish stage. It may be formulated from experience, or from vision, or from abstract reasoning.

As Mr. Otto puts it: "To let the mind range freely about all sides of a subject, even the idols of the soul, with no hope of reward but insight, is still one of the best fruits of philosophy."

To let the mind range freely, undetached, impersonal, is the fundamental principle. For a philosophic mind must be impersonal and unbiased.

We are so accustomed to drawing sharp distinctions between the realist and the idealist that we note with a mental question mark the statement in a recent work on ideals, that all men are idealists.

As defined by the author the term "idealist" might possibly include all classes of men. He states it thus:

"The end for which other ends are sacrificed is the essence of an ideal."

We have never regarded the hard-boiled business man as in any sense an idealist, yet he sacrifices many ends to win success in the commercial or industrial field.

We have never accorded the merely utilitarian materialist a place in the ranks of the idealists. So possibly our arbitrary distinctions need revising.

The realist may not feel flattered by the new position assigned him. He has always regarded the idealist as a sort of visionary, impractical and wholly superfluous in the world of affairs. It has never occurred to him that his sacrifices for various materialistic objects might be construed as the functioning of "ideals." Or that in consequence he could be classed with idealists.

Equally, the latter class might resent the invasion into their exclusive circle of those whose ends are wholly utilitarian.

When the barriers are so effectually broken down one can hardly foresee the ultimate consequences.

For instance, the ideal cherished may have to do only with the physical existence. Or it may be stretched to include transcendent values.

It may guide the musical artist to dreams of heavenly music. Or it may express in the much maligned jazz.

If it is an ideal when it suggests something beyond what we have yet achieved and that carries us on to some yet unrealized goal it obviously revises some of our former standards.

In that sense possibly all men may be idealists. Empirical distinctions do not always satisfy, however. We still feel that there is a wide difference between the two classes.

How true it is that history repeats itself. We have but to turn to Plato's republic to find the same conditions that exist today in our own republic. Ours is not the first hectic age bristling with complexes and problems.

It kept Socrates busy working out the details of an ideal republic portrayed to his pupils.

There were the same elements of political economy in the State which Plato would construct. The same evils in civic and public life existed that beset us today. There was the same problem of training the youth of the period to fit them for their duties as future leaders.

There were differences of opinion in that far-off age as to methods and measures, ways and means. It is noteworthy that the ideal of goodness, beauty and truth held constantly before the young was supposed to produce the flower of citizenship. Body and soul were included in education. Musical training was insisted upon "because rhythm and harmony find their way into the inward places of the soul."

Justice seemed to have as sorry a time of it in that day as in this. So also with other virtues.

It is sometimes good to look backward as well as forward. It gives us a standard of comparison and helps us to carry on our activities with renewed hope. Humanity's progress is slow. At times we seem to retrograde, but ideals of goodness, beauty and truth—ideals which inspired the philosophers of old, held continually before us will point the way to a nobler and happier existence.

DUNCAN SISTERS TOLD THEY COULDN'T SUCCEED

"You'll never amount to anything" isn't necessarily the cruel forecast it seems, according to the Duncan Sisters, Rosetta and Vivian, who are celebrating their return from European triumphs with a second week's engagement at the Orpheum.

The phrase, clothed in its most torturous enunciation, was once hurled at the girls by an irate Middle West theater manager. Switched bookings caused their late arrival at a one-night stand. The house impresario was furious. Unfamiliar as he was with the talent that was soon to rock theaterdom he greeted the girls with his crushing, uncalled-for prediction, their spirits falling by the wayside.

"Gee! That was disheartening," said one of the Duncans recently. "We were just kids at the time, working like Trojans to make good. He was mad and probably thought little of it, but it hurt little Topsy and Eva."

Urged onward by the taunt, the girls emerged from the Middle West into subsequent stardom in New York, where years later they again encountered their one-night stand antagonist. They were starring in "Topsy and Eva." He approached them backstage and, in the words of the famous sisters, "didn't remember his dire forecast at all, but acted like an old school chum!"

Public Demands Better Films, Thinks Wallace

The greatest advancement in motion pictures has occurred since the public expressed to the exhibitors an interest in the better classic literature and in sophisticated, mature drama, in the opinion of Richard Wallace, Paramount director. Wallace's film, "The Innocents of Paris," recently had a triumphant world premiere at the Criterion Theater in New York.

"In the old days," he says "producers thought the public could appreciate only stories dealing with simple, primitive emotions. The result was melodrama—the obvious and trite film dealing with hate, lust and revenge. These emotions tied up with impossible heroic exploits of leading characters made up our movie fare.

"Just how drastically the old order has changed may be seen in the announcement that Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford are about to embark upon a picturization of Shakespeare's 'The Taming of the Shrew.' I think there is no doubt but that the picture will be a great box-office success."

Following the completion of "The Innocents of Paris," starring the French music-hall idol, Maurice Chevalier, Director Wallace has started to direct "Magnolia," a story of the old South in which Buddy Rogers is starred, with Mary Brian as the featured feminine player.

Art Students Will Exhibit Many Studies

An art exhibit by the pupils of the Perry Art Studio will open Saturday in Bullock's on the tenth floor.

The work of the painters is unique and interesting because all ages are represented and they work as a pastime and diversion to express themselves in color that is the spirit of the modern age. Among the canvases will be the work of Mary Pickford, Billie Dove, Clair Windsor, Mary Alden, Margaret Mann, Nancy Welford and many others. About 180 canvases are hung in the showing.

Mrs. Annette Perry, a pupil of Mandeville of Paris, is responsible for the inspiration and development of this coterie of art students.

Belcher Normal Course Plans Are Completed

Plans for Ernest Belcher's eighth annual teachers' normal course from July 2 to 26, have been completed, according to advice received from this ballet master. The course is to embrace work in both the art of ballet and the latest in step and tap dancing. A number of Belcher-trained dancers now appearing in the British Isles and Continental Europe have turned the eyes of dancing instructors to this city. At the present time Belcher pupils appearing in Europe include Georgia Graves, premiere danseuse of the Folies Bergere, Paris; June Roper and Jack Kinney in C. B. Cochran's Revue in London, and Mildred Burns, now making a twenty-four-week tour of leading vaudeville theaters in Central Europe.

LUCILLE GIBBS RETURNS

Word has been received from Lucille Gibbs, coloratura soprano, who left California to teach at the Florida State College, Tallahassee, Fla., that she is to return to California the early part of June, at which time she will make arrangements to appear in several summer recitals.

GILBERT COMPOSES

"Golden Sands," a ballad for voice and piano, is the latest composition to be completed by Joseph Jean Gilbert, flutist, the lyrics of which were written by Rub. Culver Corsaw, Burbank poetess. This makes the fifth composition written by Gilbert since early fall, which include "Morning," "The Brook," "Dissolusionment," and a group of three vocal numbers.

BUNOLA KAY TO SING

Bunola Kay, soprano, will sing the soprano part in Charles Wakefield Cadman's cantata "Morning of the Year" to be presented tonight by the Hollywood Congregational Church choir. Last Sunday, Miss Kay sang the soprano part in another of Mr. Cadman's cantatas entitled "Father of the Water" given at the same church.

CHURCH MUSIC

Alexander Stewart, lecturer in church music, orchestral and choral conducting at the college of music, University of Southern California, and director of the choir of the First Baptist Church, gave a lecture and demonstration of church music before the Music Study Club of Long Beach on Monday evening.

SPRING CLASSES TO START

Spring classes in ballroom dancing and deportment for high-school students will open at the Ernest E. Ryan School of Dancing, 1500 South Figueroa street, the 24th inst. Last Friday evening Mr. and Mrs. Ryan entertained 200 high-school boys and girls at their regular monthly club dancing party.

—Raise large Army for service in France 1918.—

WHEN THE UNITED STATES DECLARED WAR ON GERMANY, AMERICANS, ACCUSTOMED TO LARGE SCALE ENTERPRISES IN BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY, APPLIED THE SAME ENERGY AND AGGRESSIVENESS, THE SAME SCIENTIFIC AND EFFICIENT METHODS TO THE TASK OF WINNING THE WAR.

THE COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE, WHICH HAD BEEN CREATED BY THE NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT OF 1916, IMMEDIATELY UNDERTOOK THE WORK OF MUSTERING THE FACILITIES AND RESOURCES OF THE NATION FOR WAR. THE COUNCIL CONSISTED OF THE SECRETARIES OF WAR, NAVY, INTERIOR, AGRICULTURE, COMMERCE AND LABOR.

AN ADVISORY COMMISSION, COMPOSED OF SEVEN LEADING EXPERTS PICKED FROM CIVIL LIFE, COLLABORATED WITH THE COUNCIL. EACH OF ITS MEMBERS WAS IN CHARGE OF ONE OF THE VITAL NECESSITIES SHOWN ABOVE. THE PRESIDENT WAS THUS ENABLED, THROUGH THE COUNCIL AND ITS ADVISORY COMMISSION, TO HAVE READY COMMAND OF THE COUNTRY'S RESOURCES.

MANY AMERICANS WHO EXPECTED THAT THE UNITED STATES WOULD IMMEDIATELY HURL A MIGHTY FORCE INTO THE THICK OF THE FIGHTING WERE MISTAKEN. IT WOULD REQUIRE MONTHS TO RAISE AND TRAIN A LARGE ARMY AND TO PRODUCE THE ENORMOUS QUANTITIES OF SUPPLIES, EQUIPMENT AND MUNITIONS NECESSARY TO MAINTAIN IT IN THE FIELD. OUR WAR PLANS HAD TO BE MADE ACCORDINGLY.

NEW RECORDS HAVE ARRIVED

Bauer for Victor, will attract attention. On one side is the B flat Chopin Impromptu and on the other is a Bach chorale. I didn't care too much for his fast tempo in the Chopin but the Bach chorale is perfect. To this, Bauer brings a tenderness and beauty that are exalting. It is well suited to a piano record with its clear theme resounding like a bell through the lacework of supplementary ideas.

De Falla's "Love, the Magician" or "El Amor Brujo," to be quite Spanish, should be in every phonograph lover's repertoire. It is an unusual work and it has a masterly recording by the English orchestra used by Columbia, with Pedro Morales conducting. Morales is a Spanish musician with a penchant for making the music of his country understood. "El Amor Brujo" is intriguing, provocative, modern music, serious and humorous by turn and filled with an entrancing romanticism. It is a poetic dream in music and De Falla has used instrumental color lavishly.

Schumann's fourth symphony has just been issued by the Columbia Company in their masterwork series with the authoritative conducting of Bruno Walter. The Mozart Festival Orchestra gathered together in Paris last year, plays it fairly well, but Walter makes up for any lack in the orchestra. It is a beautiful symphony even if the conventional symphonists do disparage it for not strictly conforming to the tradition. Schumann might have been happier to have lived in our musical age when he could do as he pleased.

mural. There should be continuity and evolutionary development as the design progresses from the "Past" through "Today," into the "Future." And the whole should organize into a unity, both physical and spiritual.

A committee of selection will appraise very carefully all sketch designs submitted in accordance with the conditions described in this announcement and will recommend to the officers of the museum the three designs which, in the opinion of the committee, best fulfill these conditions; the officers of the museum will then decide which, if any, of these three designs is desired on the walls of Mural Hall.

Three sets of sketches will be purchased: The conditions controlling the execution of murals for Los Angeles Museum are such that it is possible for the museum to pay $500 for each of the three designs recommended for purchase by the committee of selection.

Compensation for finished mural will be a matter of agreement between the designer of the sketches finally chosen and Los Angeles Museum; a limited, but, it is believed, adequate, amount is available for this mural. It is the desire of the officers of the museum to compensate the designer upon whatever basis seems most equitable; it is possible that the work may be done on a per diem basis, the museum furnishing all materials and equipment required, the designer furnishing the artistic services of himself and his assistants at agreed per diem rates of pay.

The date which sketches are due at Los Angeles Museum is October 1, 1929; they may be delivered to the museum any day previous to that time.

Any person may submit sketches. Persons in foreign lands who desire to submit sketches are invited to send to Los Angeles Museum for copies of this invitation printed in the French, German, Italian and Spanish languages.

The committee of selection will consist of three or more persons invited to serve because of their competency to evaluate all designs with sensitiveness, intelligence and fairness. The personnel of the committee will not be announced until designs have been selected.

Copies of the invitation, containing full details, may be had by addressing William Allanson Bryan, director, the Los Angeles Museum, Exposition Park, Los Angeles.

DANCERS SING

Dancers, learn to sing!

That is Maurice L. Kusell's advice to those who dance or want to dance on stage or screen.

The eighty-eight girls and twenty-two boys now dancing in the James Cruze talking, singing, dancing picture entitled "Road Show," are being rehearsed for the songs as well as the dances by Kusell. And the dancer that cannot sing may find himself relegated to the background.

Over 361 Kusell dancers are being rehearsed for the biggest dance ever seen on stage or screen.

"Road Show" will mean many days of work for Kusell dancers.

Holidays are Ahead! . . . To play IS the thing! . . .

But it is awfully hard to play without the right clothes!

Freedom of silhouette . . . Gayety of color . . . Every least detail right for the time, the place and you!

Bullock's has much understanding of the importance of play . . . How difficult it is to play without the right clothes . . . And has prepared — enthusiastically — for Holidays Ahead.

This venturesome spirit has crept into every corner of the store . . . Clothes are keyed to a bright expectancy. Windows are alive.

And if you do not already know—you will know—that there are very gay and delightful times coming.

Holidays are Ahead!

STEEB STEPS IN TO FILL SPOKANE DATE

Olga Steeb will give a recital Friday in Spokane, Wash., in substitution for Leo Ornstein, who canceled his engagement because of an injury to his hand.

This is one of a number of such engagements Miss Steeb has been called upon to fill this winter.

Paolo Gallico of New York will give courses in piano instruction at her school this summer, beginning July 15.

Interest is shown in the repertoire class. Miss Steeb wishes to repeat that the active members must of necessity be limited, so that each may be afforded the opportunity to play at least three times before the class. Auditors are unlimited.

The teachers' normal class consists of lectures and practical analytical work, and not the least interesting feature is the spirited discussions indulged in by the members.

On the 21st inst. the Olga Steeb Piano School will present Leon Becker in a graduating recital at the Artland Club Auditorium. This is the second of a series of graduating recitals which the school is giving this spring.

Mr. Becker has completed the two-year course of study given by the Olga Steeb school, which is offered only to high-school graduates.

STUDENT COMPOSITION TO FEATURE RECITALS

To encourage students of orchestration in the college of music, University of Southern California, the university orchestra, Alexander Stewart director, is giving opportunity for composers of original orchestral compositions in the university, to hear their compositions played.

Wednesday evening, at the student-union building on the campus, the orchestra will present three original compositions for full orchestra, which are as follows: Symphonic Poem, "The Round of Heaven," by Sister Mary Celestine Quinn; Prelude to the Skagland Saga, by Kenneth Winstead; "Tinkers Toy March" and "Swamp Romance," by Earle Stone. The two latter numbers are from the Barnyard Suite.

These numbers will be given in connection with a program of compositions of Los Angeles composers by advanced students of the voice department of the college of music.

CHILDREN REHEARSING SPRING FESTIVAL

The best thing the children's class of the Marta Oatman School of the Theater has worked on for some time is a program of three one-act plays for their spring festival.

The night classes of the school, specializing in talking-picture technique, is meeting in special rehearsal for the test plays to be given in the near future.

RECORDS OF "OTHER PART"

The enterprising magazine of music for the young called "Youth," has announced an original idea for those who love to play duets. Miss Kinscella, a teacher of piano, has made records (Victor) of both the primo and secondo parts of piano duets of her own composition. They are also accompanied by orchestra, which gives the young player an idea of playing with orchestra. Playing with these records should be instructive as well as enjoyable.

MUSICAL NEW-YORK

BY PIERRE V. R. KEY

NEW YORK, May 11. (Exclusive) The periods and stages of music giving have their points of interest. In a way they resemble the periods and stages in other activities; you can best attract attention, now and again, by the simple process of diverting it. And so, as we go our music-way, we at length become conscious of having gotten off the beaten path. A bit of newness appears. It may be in the form of something amazingly old . . . for this music newness is nothing if not variable. It has merely to be momentarily different, so long as it hits somewhere near the bull's-eye. Thus we find the "producers" digging in to find the morsel which will get a column in advance, as well as a column or so after the thing has been given.

A deal of fuss has been made by the League of Composers over the American premiere of Stravinsky's "Les Noces," (The Marriage Rites) and the presentation also of Monteverdi's "The Combat of Tancred and Clorinda." But in a measure it has been a justifiable fuss.

The Stravinksy piece—half ballet and half drama—I heard in Paris when it was first given there, nearly six years ago. Ansermet conducted, and badly, a none-too-good orchestra. The singers were fair, the mimes excellent . . . for it was a Diaghileff affair. At that time, however, our ears were less accustomed to discordant sounds than they have latterly become; wherefore, some of the score on which we turned down our thumbs sounds less confusing.

Quite different is the Monteverdi music. It was a happy thought to place these works on one program; contrast often makes for color, and always a topic for polite debate.

The Metropolitan Operahouse was filled, and with smart folk—partly because the affair was for the benefit of the National Music League, and partly because of the compositions and the participants . . . which included Leopold Stokowski, presiding over "Les Noces," and Werner Josten of Smith College who conducted the Monteverdi performance.

A UNIFIED EFFORT

It is questionable whether the Metropolitan was the proper auditorium or stage for these works, since each is of an intimate nature. The Monteverdi, especially, lost because of the vast space. It is lightly scored music, and not all of it got to the places intended. Nowadays too little attention is given the important matter of fitness of presentation. We attempt something touching an art and proceed at once to handicap it by selecting the wrong place in which to give it.

Still, making allowances for unsuitableness of the stage and auditorium, "The Combat" radiated charm—the charm of its time. How well it was done appears to be another matter. The performers were of uneven quality, and Mr. Jorsten's conducting while earnest, was not impressive.

Stokowski, being more the conductor than his associate, had better luck. He had also those two fine artists, Nina Koshetz, soprano, and Sophie Braslau, contralto, and others of competence. It was an occasion, no doubt as to that, and there were some spotlight moments. Incidentally, Stravinsky was revealed as writing better music than he has seemed able to write since.

MUSIC AND SCENE

When the Misses Lewisohn, in conjunction with Nikolai Sokoloff and the Cleveland Orchestra, undertook a year ago to picture the drama contained in the Bloch "Israel" symphony there ensued instant attention. Results were so satisfactory that plans were set in motion for a larger program for this season, and they have just been carried out.

Whether there is "drama" in a piece of music depends upon the composition. If it be "pure" music, then drama is pretty likely to be absent. But such a work as the "Israel" offers plenty; and so do Strauss's "Heldenleben," the "White Peacock" of Griffes, Enesco's First Roumanian Rhapsody, the two Debussy Nocturnes, "Nuages" and "Fetes," and the "Prince Igor" dances of Borodin . . . all of which made up the formidable programs of Miss Irene Lewisohn, and were given several performances within the past few days.

Those whose stimulus comes through the eyes went to see the imaginative settings and the all-star magnitude of the miming cast. Those "ear-minded" ones went for the interest of the music, which the orchestra under Sokoloff played with its accustomed taste and vitality. The old Manhattan Operahouse (which, by the way, will soon be unavailable for musical events) resounded with the applause which five audiences gave the daring spirit of Miss Lewisohn and her Cleveland partner. Arguments, which are sure to arise on an occasion of this sort, as to whether a stage presentation is not redundant with already "programmed" music, did not dampen the enthusiasm of the crowd.

AMERICA TRIUMPHANT

One applauds at the music rise of American effort. And frequently, since it is almost an every-day occurrence . . . which was not always the case. This fact was driven home last week: at the American Academy of Arts and Letters concert, held in Carnegie Hall, with Henry Hadley conducting the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, and John Powell playing his own "Rhapsodie Negre" with flashes of brilliancy and color which many a foreign luminary could not duplicate.

That feeling was further confirmed by the singing of Louise Homer at the concert she gave, with Efrem Zimbalist, in Carnegie, for the benefit of the Parnassus Club Student Loan Fund; and during the performance of "The Chocolate Soldier" by the Little Theater Opera Company at the Heckscher Theater.

Finishing touches to this gratification in American musical achievement were supplied by the splendid singing of the Philadelphia Choral Art Society, Alexander Matthews director, and the University Glee Club concert at which Reinald Werrenrath sang with a freedom and vocal spontaneity which was a good advertisement for Florida vacations.

The New in Stores & Homes

Novelties, Ideas, and Suggestions

By OLIVE GRAY

Some benefactor should create and endow a mothers' sanctuary. A place of beauty where tired mothers may rest from corroding care. A place where may be found surcease from worry, from continuous attendance upon those little ones, the burden of whose never-ceasing demands wears upon nerve and sinew, from the hour of the first protesting cry against life's harrying, to the last hour of existence. Only mother love makes possible the bearing of these never-pausing cares; and yet this all-permeating love makes the burdens heavier. Relief from mother cares, even for a week—yes, for a single day—what a boon to tired mothers!

Not Too Late

If you are belated in gifting mother, it is not yet too late to present to her the complete flower garden for summer enjoying. Seeds will spring into blossoming, growing more rapidly if planted now since the season is so backward, and many are the shrubs, trees, bulbs and in-a-can plants that will develop well, if planted during the next few weeks. And what so thoughtful as a garden gift! Also, in conferring this afterthought present, you may allow the assumption that you have awaited the arrival of precious growths. Not a deception, exactly, but—if a bit of equivocation, one that can do more good than harm, even though you may be a truth-for-truth's-saker.

Enameled

Shears with handles enameled in colors are the latest addition to the chromatic family. If affluent, you, of course, will possess a pair of these scissors in the color to match the garment upon which you are working. How esthetic we are becoming, to be sure; but always we must be certain that the chosen color is as becoming, as we are becoming esthetical.

Hurry-Ons

Wise is she who keeps ever at hand in the clothes closet plenty of crisp little hurry-on frocks—those which having every smart feature are none too fine to don hurriedly, thus enabling the homekeeper to appear instantly as self-respectingly chic as when on a downtown tour. The present vogue of cotton enables the woman who cares to thus be ready herself at little expense.

Colored Grad-Frocks

If the graduation frock thought itself able to resist the color craze, it has another thought coming. Many of these glamorous frocks are preparing in popular colors of the season. The demurity of the girl-graduate, having somewhat broadened in scope, may have somewhat to do with this en-coloration of her commencement dress.

Shall This Chromatize

Shall we next find the formal wedding gown done in colors? Who shall say, with color rife in every realm of feminine attire, that the bride's dress will not take on the tones of bridesmaids' frocks?

Study the Moth

"I never read about ants," said a woman known to be a bookworm, "because I so dislike the little pests that I do not care to enter into any knowledge concerning them! But, even though we dislike the pests themselves, it sometimes helps to know their ways if for no other purpose than to circumvent them.

For example, the moth: we should know when and where to plant the exterminator which will do him the greatest damage, ere he damage us through our possessions.

But—

But in this busy era of specialization is it not better to delegate moth prevention to those versed in ways of these flighty pests?

There are furriers—more or less at leisure during the summer season, and alert to care for our best furs and other precious possessions, which may become the objective of the moths. Let them perform this exacting task of antimothing, and do it in the very business-like manner which is theirs.

Not So Eey-Easy

Let her beware how she wears the knee bare! If symmetrical—all right for camera exposure; but bulby knees are more than likely to break the plate. The human eye, you must know, is similar in construction to the camera.

Beverly Green

Often have I advocated markage of stockings by the manufacturer, so that we may know the long-wearing from the no-goods. And now comes a most durable make of hosiery, topped by a green edge, by means of which it can be identified. Especially long wear is given by the medium weight in these Los Angeles-made stockings. Not only by the green edge may these be known, but by the sun-tan name bearing the prefix of our celebrated Moviedom suburb.

Not in Years

Not in many years have feminine garments been so lovely, so varied and so reasonably priced. No excuse for going ill-clad, this season, whether the purse be withered or distended.

"GODLESS GIRL" DUE

"Fancy Baggage" comes to the Ritz today for a one-day showing. On Monday "The Godless Girl," Cecil B. De Mille's film, will start a three-day showing. In the cast are Lina Basquette, Noah Beery and George Duryea.

After a honeymoon in the north Mr. and Mrs. Flynn will return to make their home in San Fernando.

LUNCHEON HONORS CHICAGOAN

Visitor Enjoying Many Motor Trips

[Tsamouzakis studios]

Mmes. Roy Henley and Jay B. Millard

ONE of the loveliest of the early spring affairs was the luncheon with which Mrs. Roy Henley and Mrs. Jay B. Millard entertained at the Beverly Hills Hotel several days ago, honoring Mrs. Walter B. Hemmens of Chicago, who with Mr. Hemmens is visiting in the Southland, enjoying many delightful motor trips with Mrs. Hemmens, sister of Mrs. Daniel Innes of South Hudson avenue.

The affair was in the nature of a May party and the rooms of the hotel were beautifully decorated with a profusion of spring and fruit blossoms, baskets filled with the fragrant flowers adorning the luncheon tables and arranged about the room. Bridge featured the afternoon's entertainment, and the hostesses were assisted by a coterie of friends, who presided at the various tables.

Sorority Benefit

Theta Sigma Chi Sorority sponsored a benefit bridge at the San Gabriel Woman's Club yesterday afternoon. The bridge was a great success both socially and financially. The quaint clubhouse rooms were beautifully decorated in the sorority colors, red and gold.

Hostesses were the Misses Jeanette Young, Mary Alice Packard, Jean Christianer, Elsie Schaefer, Frances Thompson, Alice Scott, Rachael Finch, Vanna Peters, Mary Sullivan, Emma Culver, Mrs. Henry Safaric, Mrs. Walter Penwarden, Mary Brown and Margaret Sullivan.

Traditional Chocolates

The traditional five-pound box of chocolates to Pi Delta Sigma Sorority, University of California at Los Angeles, revealed the engagement of Miss Rebecca (Jerry) Tripp to William Ash. The date of the wedding is undecided as yet.

Miss Tripp is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Tripp of 3407 Roseview avenue.

At Athletic Club

The Hollywood Athletic Club was the scene of a lovely luncheon party several days ago when Mrs. R. Truman Dawes and Mrs. Warren Bradley Bovard entertained, the lovely decorations being carried out in fragrant fruit blossoms and a profusion of green. Those included were Mmes. Ben Weston, Howard Stassforth, Albert George Ralphs, James W. Clune, Edmund Zucker, Alphonse, Burnaud, Ernest Becker, Loren Babcock, George Kuhrts, Jack Kuhrts, Harold Rhoades, Dudley Frank, Charles Chamberlain and Miss Virginia Giulii.

Annual Event

Carrying out an old custom of a benefit for the House of the Good Shepherd, the St. John Eude's Guild, formerly the Good Shepherd Auxiliary, is staging a bridge-tea benefit Saturday afternoon, the 18th inst., at the Biltmore, for the building fund.

The original Good Shepherd Auxiliary was formed in 1904. Those most interested at that time and who still maintain a regard for the work of the Good Shepherd nuns, are: Miss Marie Rose Mullen, Mrs. Daniel Murphy, Mrs. Emiline Childs, Mrs. O. W. Childs, Jr., Mrs. Lucien N. and Mrs. Charles Whipple. At that time there were but thirty-six children and at Brunswig the present time there are more than 200 being educated and cared for in a constructive way. The life members are Mrs. Michael Francis Regan, Mrs. John Francis, Mrs. Francis Montgomery, Mrs. Bernard Alfs, Mrs. B. A. Brennan, Mrs. E. L. Doheny, Mrs. Mary Young Moore and Mrs. R. B. Young.

Because of present-day requirements the auxiliary has been changed to St. John Eude's Guild. The officers are Mrs. Edward J. Bowen, president; Mrs. Hubert J. Quinn, secretary, and Mrs. William Schraft, treasurer, and Miss Mary McGarry, membership chairman. At the Biltmore Hotel the 18th inst. an afternoon of bridge will be conducted to liquidate part of the debt on the new buildings. The original plan was a pencil drive, but this has been discontinued for the time being and several benefit affairs will take its place.

WEDDING WILL BE NEXT MONTH EVENT

[Boye studios]

Miss Betty Farmer

Four years of outstanding prominence in collegiate activities at University of Southern California will be culminated in the wedding of Miss Betty Farmer and Lester Glenn Hellman, former Trojan track star, the ceremony to take place June 27, following Miss Farmer's being graduated at the university.

The announcement of the betrothal was made at a bridge-luncheon at the Deauville Beach Club, when eighty friends of the bride-elect were bidden.

The bridge-tea has been carefully planned and gives promise of being a very delightful affair. The door prizes have been generously donated.

Those having this undertaking in charge include the officers of the Guild and Mmes. Fred Valentine, Thomas P. White, George Hickey, Birney Donnell, Thomas Murphy, George Allen Hancock, Alfred J. Bayer, D. J. Cahill, Arnold Burkelman, Frederick O'Brien, Paul Walsh, Miss Sara Cahill, Miss Marguerite Brunswig, Miss Anne O'Keefer, Dr. Elizabeth Sullivan and scores of others prominent in charitable work and social life of Los Angeles.

Wed in June

Four years of outstanding prominence in collegiate activities at the University of Southern California are to be culminated in a June wedding for Miss Betty Farmer, who announced the date of her marriage to Lester Glenn Hellman, former Trojan track star, as June 27, following her graduation.

The announcement was made to eighty guests at a bridge luncheon at the Deauville Beach Club Saturday, the 4th inst., by means of tiny scrolls attached to individual white wedding bells at each place. All the appointments were carried out in yellow, lavender, and green.

The bride-elect is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John G. Farmer of Culver City. She received a double honor at the May Day banquet for senior women when, in addition to receiving an honor scroll as one of the ten senior co-eds who have contributed most in collegiate activties during their academic career, she was also given the Town and Gown Cup. The latter award, made for the first time this year by the organization of prominent Los Angeles club women interested in the university, is to be bestowed annually upon the senior co-ed who has the most outstanding record of service to the university.

Prominent in athletics, Mr. Hellman was graduated in 1927 from the University of Southern California where he is a member of Kappa Alpha Fraternity, Pi Delta Epsilon and Skull and Dagger. Miss Farmer belongs to Alpha Chi Omega Sorority, is vice-president of the Trojan student body and last year was president of the Women's Self-Government Association.

SOCIETY OF ARMY, NAVY

Mrs. W. C. Cole, who leaves this month for the east coast when Admiral Cole is detached from command of Battleship Division No. 4, has proved the charming inspiration for a round of interesting parties during the past week or so. Among the most attractive of these was a luncheon at Pacific Coast Club, with Mrs. Robert Threshie, U.S.S. Idaho, and Mrs. A. P. Mullinix, wife of Lieut. Mullinix, U.S.S. New Mexico, as hostesses. Garden flowers with shades of pink and blue predominating made a lovely setting for the table, and slender blue tapers burned in silver holders. Invitations were issued to Mmes. S. E. W. Kittelle, Sinclair Gannon, E. G. Small, Bayliss F. Poe, O. M. Hustvedt, James Crutchfield, C. J. Moore, Lester Dessez, W. H. P. Blandy, Alphonse Decarre, H. R. Thurber, C. L. Andrews, Sr., C. C. Kress, Van Leer Kirkman, Robert B. Huff, T. A. Solberg, John Pixton, J. D. Colomy, C. L. Jacobsen, B. H. Hanlon, Walter C. Ansel, L. J. Schaeffer, A. J. Spriggs, Henry Mullinix, Robert Bolton, R. E. Dewey, T. O. Gordon and Roy Silent and Edward Silent of Los Angeles.

Virginia Country Club was the setting for a small luncheon when Mrs. Sinclair Gannon, wife of Capt. Gannon, U.S.S. New York, entertained for Mrs. Cole. Deep crimson tulips centered the table, where covers were marked for Mmes. W. C. Cole, A. P. Mullinix, Robert Threshie, E. G. Small, W. H. P. Blandy, K. S. Hawthorne, R. E. Dewey, C. J. Allen, S. E. Heald, T. A. Solberg and Mrs. Gannon.

Six guests were bidden for an informal luncheon with which Mrs. Henry A. Wiley, wife of Admiral Wiley, commander-in-chief of the United States fleet, entertained at Virginia Country Club Thursday.

Among the most interesting arrivals in naval circles this month are Capt. and Mrs. Frederick J. Horne, who came here from Washington, D. C., and will make their home in Long Beach while Capt. Horne is in command of the U.S.S. Saratoga, having recently relieved Capt. John Halligan.

Tuesday afternoon Capt. Horne was host at an informal tea in his cabin aboard the plane carrier for officers of the ship and their wives.

Newcomers on board the U.S.S. Maryland are Maj. and Mrs. Alphonse Decarre, who came from shore duty in Philadelphia. Lieut. C. R. Landon has recently joined the U.S.S. California after completing a post-graduate course at Yale, and with Mrs. Landon is making his home in Long Beach.

As a farewell party for her mother, Mrs. P. J. McHugh, who left a short time ago for her home in Seattle, Mrs. John Hood, wife of Maj. Hood, U.S.A., was hostess at a delightful luncheon and bridge in her Fort MacArthur quarters. Pastel shades of yellow, lavender and pink were attractively combined in sweet peas centering the small luncheon tables. Those who enjoyed the affair were Mmes. Etta B. Walker, J. S. Williams, Florence Barrere of Los Angeles, Albert Cheseldon, Edward Steinhoff, M. F. Franz, H. G. Ulmo, Maurice Conlibal, E. C. Callicutt, J. E. Marsh, M. C. Bowman, W. E. Ewing and R. G. Dupuy.

Capt. and Mrs. M. M. Frucht, who left their Point Fermin home Monday for the east coast, were the incentive for any number of parties given by Procyon officers and their wives before their departure. Capt. Frucht, detached recently from command of the U.S.S. Procyon, flagship of the fleet base force, is motoring with his family across the continent and stopping at points of interest en route. They will make their headquarters in Chicago, while the captain has charge of the inspection of naval recruiting stations in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, D. C. The largest affair in their honor took place Saturday night at Pacific Coast Club and was a springtime dinner-dance presided over by wardroom officers and their wives. Baskets of early blossoms appointed the table and place cards were appropriate in the shape of miniature ships. Covers were marked for Capt. and Mrs. Frucht, Lieut. and Mrs. William Sands Holloway, Lieut. and Mrs. George Tasker, Dr. and Mrs. James R. Whiting, Lieut. and Mrs. Guy Cheatham, Lieut. and Mrs. A. B. Holman, Dr. and Mrs. E. R. Johnson, Lieut. and Mrs. Thomas T. Hassell, Capt. and Mrs. Fellows, Ensign and Mrs. Norman Holt, Miss McIntyre, Lieut. Collins, Ensign Harritt, Ensign McMillin and Lieut. and Mrs. M. C. Roberts of Coronado.

Last week Mrs. A. G. Mumma, wife of Ensign Mumma, U.S.S. Saratoga, entertained with an informal tea at her home in honor of Mrs. H. G. Pohl, wife of Lieut. Pohl, who was her house guest for a time. Lieut. Pohl is attached to the U.S.S. Kanawha. Yellow flowers and candles made an effective setting for the tea table and among those who called were Mmes. O. B. Morrison, Jr., R. E. Howe, H. G. McGinnis, John Jarvis Crane, E. D. Crowley, Gordon Ranier, E. L. Frances, Morgan Redfield, C. O. Larson, J. C. Metsel, Miss Mary Ellen Fritzlen and Miss Virginia Martin. This week Mrs. Mumma is entertaining as her house guest Miss Anne Gaylor, daughter of Capt. and Mrs. Gaylor, U.S.N., of Bremerton, who is passing a month in California. Capt. and Mrs. Edward U. Reed have as their guests for two weeks Capt. Reed's father and mother, Dr. and Mrs. Charles Reed, and an aunt, Mrs. Mary Patterson of Pennsylvania. The eastern visitors arrived Saturday on the S.S. Virginia via the Panama Canal.

A gay color scheme of yellow was carried out in appointments of a bridge-breakfast given by Mrs. Norman Millar, wife of Lieut. Millar, U.S.S. California, who was hostess to eight friends Friday morning. Her guests included Mmes. Henry Seiller, A. M. Van Eaton, Clifford Cooper, Russell Calkins, A. J. Spriggs, Calvin H. Mann, Miss Ethel Bloch and Miss Maude Perrin.

Mrs. P. K. Jeans, wife of Ensign Jeans, U.S.S. Idaho, gave an informal luncheon party for a group of Idaho wives Wednesday afternoon. A bouquet of spring flowers and slender green tapers made an attractive setting. Those who enjoyed the party were Mmes. O. M. Read, R. L. Adams, Jr., J. W. Crandall, J. A. Farrell, Jr., W. C. Asserson, S. J. Brune, E. S. Johanason and H. A. McCormick. Mrs. Jeans is a bride of last summer, having been married on board the U.S.S. Idaho in August when the ship was anchored in Seattle harbor during fleet week. Mrs. Jeans, formerly Miss Maenette Olsen, was given in marriage by Capt. W. C. Asserson, commanding, and Chaplain Roy Lewis read the service. Ensign and Mrs. Jeans returned to Long Beach not long ago after seven weeks' aviation duty in Coronado.

An interesting event of last Sunday was a dinner party with which Lieutenant-Commander and Mrs. E. W. Hanson and Lieutenant-Commander and Mrs. Lowell Cooper entertained on board the U.S.S. West Virginia for a party of friends from Hollywood. Included in the group were Mrs. E. M. Burgiss and Miss Dorothy Burgiss, Johnny Hines, Director Cukor, Rex Bell, Lieut. Adams and Lieut. Zondorack.

Flaming red tulips made an effective centerpiece for a luncheon given by Mrs. Harold Daniels, wife of Lieutenant-Commander Daniels, when she was hostess at the Harvard Tea Room Wednesday afternoon.

Bidden for luncheon and bridge were Mmes. Henry Seiller, D. Daniels, Robert Bolton, V. H. Traxler, J. L. Sullivan, C. O. Comp, D. E. Bennett, R. C. Thaxton, Gordon Ranier, Morgan Redfield and Haxe Bergeron. The Daniels are recent arrivals in naval circles from New York, Lieutenant-Commander Daniels having joined the flagship in Panama.

The betrothal of Miss Betty Ripley to Ensign Emmett J. Sullivan, U.S.N., was recently announced in Seattle. Ensign Sullivan was graduated from Annapolis with the class of 1927 and is attached to the U.S.S. Tennessee.

After five years' duty on board the U.S.S. Colorado, Lieut. Bradford Bartlett will be detached the 18th inst. and with his father and mother, Commodore and Mrs. Frank W. Bartlett, and sister, Miss Marjorie Bartlett, expects to leave soon afterward for a post-graduate course at Annapolis. The Bartletts will motor east, stopping at the Grand Canyon and many other interesting points on the way.

Lieut. and Mrs. C. F. Flower, U.S.S. New Mexico, who motored to Bremerton Tuesday, were complimented with an informal supper party given by Lieutenant-Commander and Mrs. C. C. Kress at their home Monday night. Mrs. Kress plans to leave for the North when Miss Mary Miller Kress completes her college studies, not to return until late in the summer.

Art Students to Get Awards

A limited number of scholarships have been offered by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace for American men and women for study in the Institute of Art and Archeology of the University of Paris during the 1929 summer session. Each scholarship will carry a stipend of $400, which will cover traveling, living and tuition expenses for the seven weeks of the summer session.

The courses at the institute are designed primarily to meet the needs of the following persons: University and college students who expect to specialize in art with a view to becoming teachers of art, curators of museums, architects, art workers and writers; teachers of art and curaters of museums who would like the opportunity of taking advanced instruction, acquiring new points of view and studying directly the art treasures of Paris and France, and students or teachers of French or of history particularly interested in art.

Candidates for the scholarships must submit credentials showing they are qualified to pursue these courses to advantage. College students must have completed at least three years' work in college and present a recommendation from their professor.

The session opens on July 1. A small fund is provided for short trips approved by the faculty of the institute and the director of the American University Union in Paris.

Further information about these opportunities and about the courses offered at the summer session may be obtained from Institute of International Education, 2 West Forty-fifth street, New York.

"INTERESTING AND DIVERSE VIEWS" —DISCUSSION GROUP

I INSIST there is something superior about people who love gardens—enough to work for them. Hence I proclaim the superiority of the Covina Woman's Club, which was the first in the federation to establish a gardening section—devoted to amateur activities—nigh twenty years ago and still attracts visitors galore from all the surrounding communities to its biannual flower shows.

On Wednesday this section of the club held a gala day, meeting in the Covina Park for a picnic luncheon and address on gardening, and then visiting all the lovely gardens in the vicinity. Miss Fannie Prather is chairman of this committee this year.

Among the delightful gardens visited was that of W. J. Worsham, famous for its Spanish hacienda, its glorious old oaks, its luxuriant shrubbery and its tropical specimens. Then there was the Mechelian ranch, where a cactus garden, now so popular, was started more than twenty years ago; and the William Bush place, boasting wild deer, hills and dales, an aviary of California birds, etc.; and the J. C. Kirkland place, famous in that valley for its roses.

Covina is rich in lovely small-home gardens, too, the new vice-president, Mrs. Irven Reynolds, having an exceptionally charming one . . . in the center of which she is about to rebuild her already attractive home. Mrs. Reynolds takes an active part in those flower shows, providing the baskets and receptacles. Only amateurs may exhibit.

Lillian Douglas is the present president of the club—an efficient and well-liked bachelor-girl. At this writing it seems she may be succeeded by Mrs. William Warren, who is a distinguished white-haired modern grande dame, whose husband is president of the Covina Rotarians. Irven Reynolds, husband of the new vice-president, is treasurer of the Rotarians and saw naval service during the war.

Mr. and Mrs. Warren have three married children—Dr. William Warren of Los Angeles, Mrs. Sidney Ashton, known in Los Angeles as a fine musicinan, and Mrs. Boyd King of Covina.

Hostesses have an awful time in Hollywood. A private secretary furnished a report upon acceptance to one hostess who essayed to entertain at the Montmartre for Fannie Hurst. (Fannie, by the way, is looking most attractive these days.)

Beside almost every name were little asterisks, with "Accepts—if she doesn't have to work." Or "Will come if possible — may be late." "Cannot let us know until the morning of the party." "Must stay home to care for baby—maid's day out." "Has interview with director . . . will come if through in time" and so on.

Out of thirty invitations, only half a dozen accepted outright . . . and those were mostly wives, as distinct from Hollywood professionals on their own account.

Judge and Mrs. E. V. Rosenkrans entertained our discussion group at their grand new home on Rossmore avenue . . . when the subject of debate was "Should we live for today or tomorrow?" Discussion waxed fast and furious, for several judges, lawyers, physicians, writers and their spouses held interesting and diverse views.

Mrs. Rosenkranz, with her red-hair, and pleasant hospitable instincts, proved an excellent hostess. She is another chatelaine who loves her garden and works in it herself.

Mrs. Gertrude Gilmore, who periodically visits Los Angeles between journeys to all parts of the earth, is with us again—at the Hershey Arms. One of the first things she does is to hire a car, which she drives herself, and so inspects our progress properly.

Just at present she is highly interested in the Indian paintings of that nice Englishman with the Greek name . . . W. Bagdatopoulos . . . being shown at the Stendahl Gallery. He is English to the same extent that Michael Arlen is. They have been friends for many years, and Mrs. Gilmore is familiar with all the scenes and types depicted in his work.

The tea party given for Mrs. John Quinn at the Hollywood Woman's Club attracted an interesting array of women. Acting as charming hostess was Mrs. H. T. Wright, former president of the club, in a very smart purple velvet coat and American Beauty flowered skull cap . . . insisted upon by her two nice married daughters, also present. Florence Collins Porter, that little wonder woman in politics, garbed in deep purple, introduced the guest of honor's spouse when he rushed in to make one of his fifteen-a-day speeches, just before election.

Mrs. Porter, who was born on August 14, 1853, came to California in 1900, and so helped win the suffrage battles and thus earned her later political prestige. Those 76 years of her life have been crowded with interest, for she has been author and editor, besides her political adventures.

It will take them a year to live it down. You see, they wanted to raise $1000 for district federation purposes, so Mrs. Florence Irish, Mrs. Dan Campbell and Mrs. Vandewater decided it would be a good plan to take over the El Capitan Theater for one night. Every last one of them highly righteous estimable ladies . . .

And Henry Duffy, like the federation itself, stands for "clean" plays. It seemed so safe. They duly filled the theater, together with husbands and nice sons and daughters. Mrs. Slayden, the new president, attended in state. And the show was more alarmingly undressed and with more tough dialogue than any of these dear ladies had ever come in contact with before. They are the kind that only see a show once a year or so. You should have seen their dear faces as the show progressed . . .

But, anyway, the husbands had a good time.

This Alice Kelley, who has just signed a contract with the Fox studio as a voice trainer for the talkies . . . She is a petite, bird-like person, with soft blue eyes and a golden voice of her own . . . with that charm that so often comes from long residence in France.

All the same she was a San Francisco girl when, in the long ago, she attended a Yvette Guilbert performance in that city. Afterward she asked Yvette "What is art?" Yvette smiled and told her to join the troupe and find out. So Alice formed one of the group of five girls who traveled over the world with Yvette . . . all since famous, including Mary Duncan.

Under Yvette's guidance, Alice took voice culture from the finest instructors in several countries, all of which knowledge stands her in good stead these days . . . and captures handsome contracts.

Mayme Ober Peak of the Boston Globe has an interesting guest down from Alameda . . . Marion Mitchell, daughter of Maj. and Mrs. C. L. Tilden of San Francisco.

This Marion has just returned from an adventurous three-year trip around the world, including those mysterious countries in Northern Africa. With three girl companions she organized a caravan trip across the Sahara, with six months in Fez. So, too, this Marion went clear through the war, drove ambulances, acted as interpreter, worked in canteens and so on. Distinctly a person to meet while here.

DIRECTOR ONCE BALL PITCHER

he was just wasting his time and money trying to make a director out of me. He told me to shut up; to go out with the camera and the company and not to return until the picture was completed.

"We managed to get through with it and when Hal saw it in the projection room he said it wasn't so bad. So he gave me another one and I wound up by making six with Snub. Then I became assistant for a time to Roach, until I was assigned to direct 'The Vanity Girls' series.

"I managed to worry through several of the series, until one day, 'Speedy' came on the set. We called Harold Lloyd 'Speedy.' I told him of the mess I was in; that I was going to quit. He asked me how I'd like to direct for him. I was amazed. He told me he would fix it for me. That was on a Friday. I didn't even give it a thought, but he knocked me dead on Monday when I was assigned to his unit.

"That day was certainly my Seventh Heaven day. I was as nervous as an old maid at a stag party. 'Number, Please' was my first picture with Harold. We were next assigned to do 'Grandma's Boy.' It was supposed to be a two-reeler.

HAD LONG RUN HERE

"We made a feature-length picture out of it and when he showed it to Roach he howled his head off. He insisted that it be cut back into two reels; that a feature-length comedy would never go over. We argued and finally won. It ran nineteen weeks in Los Angeles alone."

After that Newmeyer directed Lloyd in "The Freshman" and he was on easy street. Success had come to him from the friendly boost from Lloyd and his next picture, "The Quarterback," with Richard Dix, proved a sensational football picture. He also directed Dix in his baseball opus, "Warming Up," which was Paramount's first picture with sound effects.

Newmeyer recently made his debut as a talker director in "The Rainbow Man," a story of stage life, starring Eddie Dowling with Marion Nixon opposite. The picture made a big hit at its premiere on Broadway and boosted Newmeyer's stock considerably in the motion-picture world. He is now directing a talker at Pathe.

When success became his in films, Newmeyer took to business deals outside the industry; lost several small fortunes and finally won acclaim as "the man who nobody takes seriously." In any event Newmeyer says his new gold-mine project is going to be a success and that he will eventually live down this reputation in the world of business.

FILMS TURN TO THEATER AGAIN

The ascendency of the tune written directly for a film.

The pictorial embellishing of the musical creation on the screen appropriately and adequately.

In so far as these two developments take place the film with music will advance. Because it will be staying true to the character of the screen art.

SAILS FOR EUROPE

Rapid Climb Surprise of Girl's Life

Film-struck flappers flock to Hollywood by the hundreds every year, yearning, hoping, praying for a chance in front of the camera . . . but not one out of a hundred crashes the gate.

Now comes a petite young miss who landed in Southern California without the slightest desire for a screen career and who within a few months has won some of the plum roles pictures have to offer.

She is Dorothy Janis, who tops the measuring stick at four feet, some odd inches, and tips the scales at eighty-five pounds. She is dark-eyed and apparently never succumbed to the fad for bobbed hair. She hails from the Lone Star State that has given the screen so many of its popular players, Texas . . . and she'll tell you all about it with the true enthusiasm of a native daughter of any State.

It was just about a year ago that Dorothy, with her family, came to Hollywood for a vacation. The young lady gained entrance to a studio through a cousin who had been working in bits. By 10 o'clock the morning of her pilgrimage to the studio, studio officials set a test for 2 o'clock.

"And by the time 2 rolled around word had spread that a girl was going to make a fool of herself. Everyone in the studio stopped work at the given time and gathered on that set . . . "but somehow I wasn't a bit scared," she said.

And so it has been with her brief career. There have been leads with Fox, there is a contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and the featured role opposite Ramon Navarro in "The Pagan," current at Loew's State Theater.

"The Pagan" Dorothy considers as the first picture to give her any definite stride in the direction of stardom. The day that she was notified of her selection for the role stands out in her mind with the brilliance of a klieg light on an opening night. And, to make the occasion even more unforgettable, she was to be taken to Tahiti for location scenes.

"But it wasn't half as simple as it sounds," she laughed. "We had to work, really work. The sun would go under a haze so early that we had to be up and ready for work at 5 every morning. From then we shot until the sun disappeared.

"We would never have finished the picture if it hadn't been for the lighting equipment we had with us," she continued. "As it was, a great many of the sets and locations had to be duplicated on the lot."

Dorothy has won some excellent notices on her characterization in this drama. It seems as though the South Sea has picked her up and placed her in a direct line for stardom, just as it did Raquel Torres.

But Dorothy hasn't stopped climbing. Recently she walked off with one of the plum roles of the year tucked neatly under her arm —that of 'Chita in the film version of Fannie Hurst's "Lummox."

This will mark her first talkie and she is properly thrilled, as well as properly keyed up to the occasion.

Action Drama Always Clicks, Asserts Wyler

Trend in public taste toward sophisticated drawing-room drama which has come with the advent of the talking pictures and the subsequent ability to reproduce clever conversation has not spoiled the public's taste for virile action drama, according to William Wyler, Universal director.

Director Wyler, who scored twice decisively with "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelley," and "The Shakedown," is a firm believer in the necessity for action and conflict for success with the motion-picture public.

"Drama of the ironic type which George Bernard Shaw specializes in is excellent picture fare, thanks to the talking device," says Wyler. "However there are not many plays of such witty qualifications. We must still depend on the old formula for a successful film—action, movement, drama.

As a result of his excellent work on "The Shakedown," which clicked definitely at the box office, Wyler has been given the direction of "Evidence," starring Laura La Plante, supported by Neil Hamilton. This is the Edward J. Montagne story which was originally intended as a costarring vehicle for Miss La Plante and Joseph Schildkraut, the latter being withdrawn, however, to assume the starring role in another all-dialogue production, "The Barnstormer."

Marie Prevost Sings Well in 'Flying Fool'

Although Marie Prevost had never been on the stage before the advent of talking pictures she sings two songs in "The Flying Fool," starring William Boyd, that are bound to be popular hits. She was coached in the numbers by one of the most widely known personalities of song in the United States, June Purcell.

The songs Miss Prevost sings in "The Flying Fool" are "If I Had My Way" and "I'm That Way About Baby," both written especially for "The Flying Fool."

This William Boyd starring vehicle is a thrilling original story of a stunt flyer whose other weakness is women. It is a typical Bill Boyd role created by Elliott Clawson and Tay Garnett. The latter also directed the production. Others in the cast besides Miss Prevost are Tom O'Brien, Russell Gleason, Dan Wolheim, Kate Bruce and Dorothy Ward.

TEA GOWNS GO MODERN

A modernistic tea gown is worn by Ruth Chatterton in Paramount's dialogue production, "The Marriage Holiday." It is the first one to make its appearance on the screen and was designed by Travis Banton, creator of Paramount wardrobe. Triangles of black form interesting lines on a background of white at the shoulders, shading into opalescent gray as the triangles cascade into a chic train at the back.

FIRST FEATURE LENGTH PHOTOPLAY RECALLED

B. P. Schulberg and Robert Milton are believed to be the only two men in Hollywood today who attended the premiere of the first full-length feature ever shown in America.

This was the exhibition of Sarah Bernhardt's historic four-reel "Queen Elizabeth," presented at a special invitation matinee at the New York Lyceum Theater on July 12, 1912.

"Sponsored by Daniel Frohman, Broadway producer, the showing of this imported Bernhardt picture was one of the greatest adventures in cinema history," recalls Schulberg.

"It was a definite answer to many who said that no audience would sit through so long a picture program, for dozens of literary, artistic and dramatic figures sat entranced, and at the end applauded as though Bernhardt had been there in the flesh. This photoplay established the future of feature-length film stories."

"I obtained my ticket to the 'Queen Elizabeth' showing," Milton relates, "through Richard Manskeld, who had been invited but who had to appear in a conflicting matinee.

"In filming 'Queen Elizabeth' Saram Bernhardt simply had a camera record of the play as she presented it on speaking stages of Paris. Subtitles replaced most of the dialogue, but the great Bernhardt covered many dialogue situations by the invention of substitute pantomimic action."

COLORFUL STORIES

[illegible] will do next "The Barn Storm[illegible]" with Barry Pollard, a story of [illegible] early American actor, of the [illegible] tent acting era. "That's a very strange confession [illegible]," he smiled. "Perhaps I feel [illegible] I do because I can see fine [illegible] in these lusty, colorful stories. Perhaps also because I have [illegible] in them an opportunity to [illegible] the thing I can do—act in a [illegible] which has character and shades [illegible] feeling."

"I count the time spent at De [illegible] lot, with the exception of [illegible] as Judas in "The King of [illegible]," I was miscast." He paused, [illegible] then began: "You know, if you want a thing badly enough I feel you will get it if only through some strange, inexplicable kind of witchcraft. When I was on the train coming to Hollywood three years ago, I read Edna Ferber's novel, 'Show Boat,' and I said, 'I want to play Ravenal. That's my part.'

IRONICAL CONTRAST

Ironically, Schildkraut's tremendous dramatic scene in "Show Boat" is when he comes home delightfully, rollickingly drunk on champagne, to the sordid little apartment which he and Magnolia share in Chicago after he has dissipated their inheritance. Schildkraut himself never drinks nor gambles.

Yet a famous nerve specialist commenting on the scene remarked that it was pathologically, physiologically and psychologically correct. Schildkraut smiles at this. "I spent months studying my drunks," he explained. "If I am a correct drunk, it is because I am an actor."

Audience Boos and Cheers at Horton Drama

"The Streets of New York," Edward Everett Horton's current Majestic Theater offering, is held evidence that the theater has kept pace with the advancement of science.

This melodrama is declared to be one of the most humorous epics ever to play in this city. It is embellished with old sets, costumes and atmosphere.

Majestic audiences have been entering into the spirit of the opus and have been hissing, booing and cheering loudly at various episodes. One patron remarked the other night that this is the first time in many years that an audience has given vociferous vent to emotions.

"The Streets of New York" enters its second week tonight. Included in the cast are Edward Everett Horton, Enid Bennett, Tully Marshall, Mitchell Harris, Florence Roberts, John Litel, Florence Mason, Fred Cummings and others.

RITZ SHOWS MADGE BELLAMY

"Noisy Neighbors," featuring the Quillen family, will be the attraction for today only at the Fox Ritz Theater. Monday "Sally of My Dreams," Fox talking and singing romance-drama with Madge Bellamy, Barry Norton and Louise Dresser, will be the feature attraction.

Denny Interest in Sport Shows in Screen Work

A glorified mountain lodge, three airplanes of latest design, a seagoing yacht trimly rigged, a string of ponies, both riding and polo, a small fleet of high-powered motor cars—no wonder Reginald Denny is acknowledged one of Hollywood's premier sportsman.

There may be greater athletes than Denny in the film capital, but none engaging in a wider variety of sports. Every second, while not at the studio, is occupied in some form of outdoor activity. It extends to every sporting event, not to mention track work, boxing, golf, squash, and a dozen other forms of athletic endeavor.

Even while on the stage, years ago, Denny was interested in developing himself athletically. While in India, he contented himself with polo and cricket, later taking up the art of self-defense when he returned to England. His mastery of this served to really introduce him to the American movie public when he came to this country, for his fame rapidly spread when he started on the "Leatherpusher" series of short comedy-dramas a number of years ago for Universal. Since making that series he has become one of the best-known dramatic comedians on the screen.

All of Denny's pictures, which are strictly comedy in tone, are based upon an athletic hero. Regardless of the plot, there is always a plentitude of action, and one may be quite certain of seeing Mr. Hero Denny racing about for some reason or another.

Fans Write to May McAvoy to Ask Film Plans

Out of sight, out of mind.

In no field of endeavor is this adage so true as when applied to the motion-picture industry. A few month's disappearance from public attention, and many stars and players are but vaguely remembered, in many cases after a five or six month's absence from the screen completely forgotten.

Preparing for her marriage to Maurice Cleary, May McAvoy has devoted all her time since terminating her contract with Warner Brothers to her trousseau. She has not been seen on the local screen for a number of months, but already inquiries by the hundred are pouring in, asking if she has permanently abandoned a screen career, and urging her to make more pictures.

"The number of letters is so gratifying that I am seriously considering making one more picture before my marriage to Mr. Cleary," Miss McAvoy states. "I had intended waiting until early summer to resume my studio work, but I am so delighted with the interest shown that I may accept one of the parts offered recently.

"Screen players have often been accused of ignoring letters sent them. One of my greatest pleasures is reading letters from the fans, and noting what they like and dislike. I do my best, then, to please as many as I can, both in the choice of role and type of acting."

Molly O'Day Learns Much From Tour

Molly O'Day, who has just returned from a tour over the Fanchon and Marco circuit, where she completed an engagement begun by her sister, Sally O'Neil, thinks an excursion into stage work highly desirable for actors wishing to essay roles in talking pictures.

"The motion picture has taken on many of the features of the spoken stage," Miss O'Day explains. "Film players can pick up various bits of 'business,' tricks and moods familiar in stage work, which helps them in the new talking films.

"Audience 'appeal,' the reaction of the onlookers to the player and her work, is most important. The film star, working on a set has had little chance to understand how to contact an audience and win them to sympathy with her personality and her performance."

The former First National star is now free-lancing in the motion-picture field. Remembered for performances in "The Patent Leather Kid," "Hard-Boiled Haggerty" and "The Shepherd of the Hills" she is now much in demand at the various studios.

"PRISONER" IS TUNEFUL

Lewis Silvers, who holds the unique position of general musical director for all Vitaphone productions at Warner Brothers studio, is responsible for the orchestration of "Prisoners," Corinne Griffith's latest First National-Vitaphone picture, adapted from the famous novel of the same name by Ferenc Molnar and directed by William A. Seiter. As the chief localities of this colorful story of Bohemian life are Vienna and picturesque provincial towns near Budapest, the music accompaniment is said to be particularly charming, owing to gay themes from Viennese and Hungarian operettas as well as several original compositions by Mr. Silvers.

GARFIELD ADMIRES MUTTS

When Leon Garfield, the former Stanford athlete, who has recently completed a talking role in "Hearts in Exile," the Warner Brothers production starring Dolores Costello and Grant Withers, was a little boy he was always bringing home stray dogs with the hope that they could be kept, and even today he will come in with a half-starved Fido, but his idea is to feed up the animal, assuring his mother that some one will then want the canine. This has become such a habit that when any of his friends want a "thoroughbred mongrel" they call Garfield to see if the current stray answers their wants.

MACK PURCHASES HOME

FAMED GRIDIRON STAR IMMORTALIZED IN FILM

Millions have heard the sons of Princeton sing "Old Nassau" and have thrilled to it as the words were wafted over the gridiron, a symbol of that Princeton spirit which is best likened to the memorable "heads are bloody, but unbowed," for "Old Nassau" traditionally is never sung except when Princeton loses.

No personality ever reflected the Princeton spirit as did the late Johnny Poe, gridiron hero, whose deeds on the football field re-echo gloriously.

Johnny Poe has been immortalized in song and story, his deeds have been recounted in print wherever a newspaper or magazine is published, and in "The Black Watch," all-talking Fox Movietone production, now playing Fox Carthay Circle, there is an incident most impressive in the picture, and authentic, which will revive memories of Johnny Poe, the indomitable, fearless, courageous boy who entered the World War at its outbreak, fought as he did on the gridiron and went down to death—fighting.

"The Black Watch," based on "King of the Khyber Rifles," Talbot Mundy's story, and directed by John Ford, has for its central figure Capt. Donald Gordon King of the Forty-second Highlanders, nicknamed the Black Watch, a role played by Victor McLaglen.

A detachment of the Black Watch is seen in action during the progress of the picture and one of them, Johnny Poe, the only American in the company, is mortally wounded and dies on the field of battle.

Having in mind the fact that Johnny Poe had actually enlisted in the Black Watch at the outbreak of the World War, and that his death in the picture was based on an actual incident, Ford planned to revere the memory of the brave boy.

On the basis that it would be real drama to show, by double printing, just what a brave soldier might be thinking of as he is dying, Ford, with Johnny Poe in mind, could think of but one thing—"Old Nassau."

Thus in the picture, from the screen, will be heard the last two lines of the immortal song.

Screen Girls Made to Fit Old Costumes

Where are the hips of yesteryear?

They're as extinct as long skirts, bustles and hair rats, a famous Hollywood film director discovered yesterday when his costume department started fitting girls for 1908 sequences in a talking picture.

The early part of Herbert Brenon's all-star production of Fannie Hurst's story, "Lummox," for United Artists, has its action in New York twenty-one years ago, and of course the gowns worn by some of the feminine characters must be true to the period. The gowns were made —but when they were fitted on the actresses and they paraded before the director for inspection he summoned the costumers and demanded:

"Where are their hips? Women had hips in 1908."

"Sorry, but girls don't have them any more," an assistant explained.

"Then give them hips," he ordered, and so, as nothing is impossible in a modern film plant, the actresses returned to their dressing rooms and soon reappeared displaying forms that met with the director's approval.

Tightly laced corsets and padding wrought the synthetic curves.

EGGS TO BE DISCUSSED

"Eggs—Fresh, Pickled and Powdered" will be the subject of Bert R. Holloway, appearing Tuesday as luncheon speaker before the Cosmos Club, 3103 South Hobart Boulevard. Edna Gunnar Peterson, concert pianist, will give a musical program, and the speaker of the afternoon meeting will be Mrs. Hudson.

ATTRACTIVE BRIDE OF MONTH

Home Scene of Wedding Ceremony

[C. Elmore Grove studios]

Mrs. Robert Alfred Kenyon

AN ATTRACTIVE bride of the month is Mrs. Robert Alfred Kenyon, formerly Miss Maryon Isabel Berry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Otis Bowyer Berry, the ceremony taking place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Ernest Faucett, with Rev. Charles F. Aked officiating.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was assisted by Mrs. Frederick Berry as matron of honor, while Miss Mary Louise Watson was maid of honor, other attendants including Mrs. Thomas Quinne, Miss Frances Early and the adorable little flower girl, Dwan Virginia Hawkins. Edward Seymore served his brother-in-law as best man.

Mr. Kenyon, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Kenyon of Elkhart, Ind., is an alumnus of Ann Arbor University and Blair's in New York while the bride attended Miss Page's School in Chicago and was graduated from Cumnock.

After a honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. Kenyon will be at home to their many friends at the Barcelona.

CURTAIN LINES NEEDED FOR TALKIE FADE-OUTS

A curtain line for every fade-out, is one of the rules being laid down to the dialogue writers of Radio Pictures by William Le Baron, vice-president in charge of production, who gives some interesting sidelights on the new technique of writing for the talking pictures.

"Everyone knows what a tremendously important thing a strong curtain line at the end of every act is in the stage play," Le Baron said. "The very structure of the talking picture, as we are working it out here in Radio Pictures, will make necessary what will be tantamount to a curtain line for every fade from one scene to another.

"Naturally, this will make for a more dramatic continuity in the talkies than was enjoyed by many silent pictures. Every scene will be pointed greatly by these 'curtain lines.'

"In the theater, the average stage play was of three acts. After each curtain line had pointed the act, an intermission gave the audience an opportunity to turn to their programs and read that the next act took place at such and such a place, so much later. Their minds, therefore, were prepared for the illusion of the succeeding act.

"This gap between scenes in the talking pictures is now being filled by some producers with written narrative titles.

"It is my belief that the whole structure of the talkies is going to have more staccato and heightened interest than the stage plays, because each scene will have to be built up so strongly. There will be the equivalent of dozens of acts, thus, dozens of curtain lines, in every film."

Mr. Le Baron pointed out that whereas in the old silent film there were an average of 125 written titles in every six reels, there will be an average of 600 speeches in every six reels of the talkie. "It means that there will be dialogue going on about 80 per cent of the time in the talkie," he said.

Fewer sets with fewer cuts from one locale to another, are going to be among the most marked results of the new talkie technique, he concluded.

KALIZ RECEIVES OFFER

Armand Kaliz has received an offer from New York's greatest producer of musical extravaganzas to produce Kaliz's latest operetta, "The Parisian Jam Hound," at a Broadway theater, with its composer in one of the principal roles. Kaliz recently held a preview of this latest stage offering at the Hollywood Masquers' Club. Owing to present picture engagements, Kaliz was obliged to defer accepting the offer until next fall.

WRITER TAKES HIKE

Bob Carr, the 19-year-old writer on the Fox staff, spent last weekend exploring some of California's back country and he reports that in the territory covered by a few hours' hiking from Mt. Lowe he felt as if traveling in another part of the globe. Bob's companion was Odo B. Stade, naturalist and scholar.

LENA DROPS ACCENT

Lena Malena, the little German actress who is playing an important role in "Redemption," John Gilbert's current vehicle for M.-G.-M., has proved her contention that a foreign accent can be overcome. When Miss Malena learns her lines verbatim for a talking role she loses all trace of an accent.

OPERA SOPRANO SOLOIST

Louise Caselotti, mezzo soprano, and daughter of Guido Caselotti, Los Angeles vocal instructor, is to be the soloist next Wednesday evening, the 15th inst., with the Santa Ana Symphony Orchestra at a concert to be given in the high school auditorium in Santa Ana.

THREE ARTS CLUB

Howard Coombs, concert pianist who recently appeared as soloist with the Philharmonic Orchestra, will give a concert this afternoon at the Three Arts Club, 987 Magnolia avenue, in conjunction with Samuel Pedrazza, lyric tenor of the Denishawn Dancers. Miss Katherine Ebbert will serve as hostess.

BEST-DRESSED WOMAN

Kay Francis, often called New York's best-dressed woman, has arrived in Hollywood, where she will soon start work in a new Paramount talking picture. Miss Francis has appeared in several of the Long Island productions, and was recently employed by Jesse L. Lasky.

REVUE FILMS SIMPLE

"The filming of a revue is a comparatively simple task, although on the surface it seems involved," says Christy Cabanne, director of the "M.-G.-M. Revue of Revues," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's latest musical attraction. The film problem consists merely in the application of intelligent sound to the same formulas we have for the making of silent pictures. But we must never overlook the fact that we are making a motion picture, and beyond that—a talkie."

KALIZ KEPT BUSY

Armand Kaliz has apparently found a permanent calling in sound pictures and since his vocal success in "Twin Beds," First National's Vitaphone production, he has not had a day's vacation between pictures. During his long stage and screen career Kaliz has sung in grand and light operas, has been a playright and scenarist and has produced many elaborate stage productions.

WOODS GOES ABROAD

A. H. Woods recently made a trip to London to confer with Denison Clift, American playwright and director, now making pictures in England, regarding the latter's new play, "Scotland Yard," which Woods will present in New York in September. While in London, he signed Paul Cavanagh to play the leading role in the drama, which deals with a unique post-war mystery.

DOROTHY WARD CAST

Dorothy Ward has returned to the Culver City studio and has been cast for a role in William Boyd's current talking production, "The Flying Fool," directed by Tay Garnett. Others in the cast are Marie Prevost, Russell Gleason, Tom O'Brien, Dan Wolheim and Kate Bruce.

TWO SONGS INTRODUCED

"Do I Know What I'm Doing?" and "Shoo, Shoo, Boogie Boo," two original songs written by Leo Robin, Sam Coslow and Richard Whiting, will be introduced during stage sequences of "Backstage Blues," Moran and Mack's first starring all-dialogue picture for Paramount.

MARX BOYS WORK

The four Marx brothers have almost finished their work in "The Cocoanuts," which Paramount is making as a 100 per cent dialogue and singing picture at the studios in Long Island.

Pirate Role Must Be Found for Lila Lee

Lila Lee wants to be a pirate.

"It isn't the jewels and gold pieces I'm after," says the petite Lila, "but the freedom of the open seas and the swanky dashing clothes which go with the character."

Lila, who has always played sweet, young things, is stepping out of her former cinema path.

In Dick Barthlemess's latest picture, she played opposite him as a siren—not a demoralizing vampire type of woman but still a Lorelei. This gave her courage.

Then she went to see Doris Keane in her new play "The Pirate." And that finished Lila. She just has to buccaneer!

Lila's next role is a co-starring one with Jack Mulhall in "Dark Streets," a First National Production. Judging from the title, her chances to buccaneer are slim—there are no streets at all on a pirate ship.

BALLET GIRLS HAVE PART

An aerial ballet of forty-six girls appears in circus scenes of "Dangerous Curves," Clara Bow's second Paramount talking picture.

PARROT MAY EVEN UTTER "YES, SIR"

Bird at Studio Rapidly Learns Talk of Directors and Others of Filmland

Nothing like a picture studio as a place to learn things!

A parrot was laboriously taught to say two specific lines for scenes in Cecil B. De Mille's "Dynamite," his first M.-G.-M. "talkie."

Before the week of production was over, the parrot was spouting other phrases including "camera," "cut" and "that's rotten!—Retake."

CHIEF ROLE ASSIGNED

Ralph Graves has been assigned the featured role in "Flight" for Columbia, a story of the life of the aerial branch of the marines. Graves played an important role in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Flying Fleet."

FEW HOLLYWOOD DOGS EAT WITH REGULARITY

Every dog may have its day—but not in Hollywood.

This departure from tradition is vouched for by Russell Pierce, animal casting director of the Paramount studios, who has 612 trained dogs on file, besides 900 other animals and insects, ranging from boxing kangaroos to nonstinging bees.

Unemployment in Hollywood dogdom, he reveals, is the fault of the canines themselves.

"Many dogs," Pierce says, "give amazing exhibitions of cleverness at private trials, but they forget everything they were ever taught when brought on a noisy, crowded motion-picture stage. Fewer than thirty of them are dependable.

"One of the best is King Tut, owned by T. A. J. Henry. He's a plain mongrel, admixture of pit bull, police and Airdale, but he is absolutely devoid of nerves and has been commended by dozens of directors. Josef Von Sternberg is using him now for an important part in "Thunderbolt," an all-talking picture. Tut appears in a dozen scenes with George Bancroft. There is a piece of business in the death house of a prison that prohibits the dog from seeing his master while going through his paces, but he acquitted himself with glowing honors. This dog works more than 300 days a year."

Pierce would have a simple job, however, if he had only dogs to deal with. His department gets many queer requests.

For Clara Bow's "Hula," he reports, he was called upon to supply a bee which would alight on Miss Bow's leg and still not sting her. It took only two days to uncover this marvel. It was owned by a Pasadena woman.

SQUASH OF PIE REGISTERED

A nice, juicy, slippery custard pie was recorded for the first time in talking pictures when Paul Page crushed it over the head of a soda-fountain boy for a scene in "Protection," a Fox production, which is being directed by Benjamin Stoloff. Stoloff is the director who is responsible for the success of "Speakeasy," which is now playing at the Criterion Theater. Page plays the leading male role in the latter production.

Dialogue for Scenario to Be Poland's

Joseph Franklin Poland, one of the most successful producing factors in pictures and now associated with William Sistrom in the preparation of his own story, "Sailor's Holiday," will dialogue the entire scenario.

Poland, who created "Sailor's Holiday" with William M. Conselman for the talents of Alan Hale, worked on treatment of the play with Director Fred Newmeyer as soon as the latter was assigned the vehicle and he will have the aid of Ray Harris in creating the play which will be photographed by the Pathe process.

Harris worked with Newmeyer in the filming of Richard Dix's "The Quarterback" and "Warming Up" and is credited with the scenario of "Sailor's Holiday." He will have his first experience with dialogue in working with Poland on the Hale play.

Blind as a Brick Bat

The expression "blind as a bat" does not mean anything, for bats are not blind. It is thought that it is a corruption of "blind as a brick bat." All bats have eyes, but they are apparently embarrassed in a glare of light. It is a question whether they are not endowed with another sense of which we know nothing, for they seem to be able to wind their way among objects in the dark without seeing or actually touching them.

TEA WILL BE FEATURE OF CLUB'S FETE

Women to Celebrate New Representation in State Federation Affairs

Club women of the Los Angeles district will celebrate the obtaining of adequate representation for Southern California in the California Federation of Women's Clubs with a tea to be given at 3 p.m. Friday at 2103 South Hobart Boulevard, headquarters for the Los Angeles District of the California Federated Women's Clubs.

Years of effort on the part of the southern club women to procure adequate representation in the councils of the State federation were crowned with success last week at the State convention at Santa Cruz, when a resolution granting the representation requested was adopted by the convention. In obtaining adoption of the resolution Mrs. W. W. Slayden, president of the Los Angeles district and now president-elect of the State federation, was credited with a remarkable piece of work. The tea Friday is to be a tribute to her for her accomplishment.

With the other club leaders in the north, Carrie Parsons Bryant and Florence Irish are handling the arrangements for the tea. Because the new representation in the State federation affairs means so much to the club women of the Southland, whether members of the federation or not, all club women are invited to attend the tea, Mrs. Bryant said.

NATAL FETE PLANS MADE IN FILMLAND

Hollywood Fall Festival Will Celebrate Start of Cinema Industry Here

A Hollywood fall film festival in September or October to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of the coming of the motion-picture industry to the present screen capital is being considered by civic leaders of that community.

The committee to supervise the festivities includes Sid Grauman, Carl Laemmle, Joseph M. Schenck, Sol Lesser, Harold B. Franklin, C. E. Toberman, Henry I. Beller, Gilbert Beesemyer and Joseph Reger. The affair is to be given under the auspices of the Hollywood Boulevard Association, of which Col. Harry M. Baine is president. Baine appointed the committee from the board of directors of the Hollywood Boulevard Association.

All of the leading motion-picture companies will be asked to co-operate in the building up of the Hollywood fall film festival, and a street parade with floats depicting the growth of the film industry will be a feature of the week's celebration. The successful introduction of talking pictures in this twentieth year of picture making in Hollywood also will form a basis for the festivities.

Screen Testing Job Given Ryan

JAMES RYAN

James Ryan, who has interviewed thousands of film-struck boys and girls during his eight years as casting director at the Fox studios, today will take charge of the newly created screen-testing department, while Jack Gardner, former actor and actors' agent, will assume the duties of casting director, Sol M. Wurtzel, general superintendent of Fox Films, has announced.

The screen-testing department has assumed new importance with the growth of talking pictures. In addition to the testing of new prospective contract players, all players already under contract will be given tests before being cast for new roles.

SOCIALISTS DESIRE TO EXPOUND VIEWS

Socialistic doctrines will be hurled nightly into the atmosphere at Sixth street, Towne avenue, Winslow and Main streets if the Board of Police Commissioners complies with the request of William M. Busick, organizer of the Socialist party of Los Angeles county. Busick has filed a communication with the board asking for a permit for Socialist speakers to expound the doctrines of the Socialist party of America on the streets from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. nightly from the 15th inst. to June 15, after which, he states, another permit may be requested to continue the expounding. Busick says the street meeting will be conducted in an orderly manner.

PARK COURSE TO BE GIVEN

LeRoy Bowman, secretary of the National Community Center Association, and a member of the faculty of Columbia University, New York, is to come to Los Angeles next month to head a section on recreation and parks in a short summer course in public administration to be given at the University of Southern California in June.

NO ILLINOIS MEET

OLD ROMAN CIRCUS WILL BE ECLIPSED

Shriners Plan to Put on Spectacular Performance at Coliseum in June

Festivities rivaling in splendor those of the emperors of ancient Rome will be presented in the Los Angeles Coliseum when the Shriners give the Circus Maximus during the Shrine convention June 4, 5 and 6. Each performance will be marked with lavish pomp and ceremony.

The Shrine Circus Maximus will be composed of sixty-five acts, a majority of which will take place on trapezes swinging 100 feet in the air. Famous aerial troupes will eclipse in daring feats those performed in the ordinary "big top" circus. These troupes are now being assembled in Chicago and will be brought to Los Angeles on a special train.

They will include 109 trained animals and an army of 100 clowns.

The Circus Maximus performances will form part of seven Shrine Coliseum events, including also a $1,000,000 motion-picture electrical pageant and two oriental parades which will be open to the general public. Tickets are on sale at B. H. Dyas stores.

Downey Man's Murder Laid to Band of Robbers

Robbery is believed to have been the motive in the murder of Louis Frahm, Downey fruit merchant, on a lonely road east of Maywood Tuesday night, according to deputies of the Sheriff's homicide squad. Frahm was shot three times in the head while driving his truck to the Central Terminal Market in Los Angeles.

Different calibered guns were used, and Deputy Sheriffs Brewer and Hunter believe two men, and possibly three, took part.

No trace of his police dog has been found. The dog is believed to have been wounded. The trail of blood that led a half-mile along the road from the automobile in which Frahm was killed indicates the wounded dog had started for home.

CIVIC CENTER BUILDING PROGRAM DISCLOSED

TATE AND COUNTY UNITS WILL COST $25,000,000

ent Property Purchase Denotes Inaugural of Movement to Erect Three Structures

BY CHARLES C. COHAN

The proposed erection of the State office building at the northeast corner of First and Hill streets is the first development of an extensive county structural program in the area between Hill street and Broadway and from First to the contemplated new extension of Temple street at about what now is California street, according to Supervisor Graves, in charge of the Los Angeles county building operations.

In conformity with this program, adopted by the Board of Supervisors, it is stated the new county courthouse will be located on Broadway opposite the present Courthouse and the Hall of Records. Farther to the north in the stated area will be a Technical Building housing the road department, county surveyor, regional planning quarters and all county institutions of a technical character.

To provide a site for the courthouse, the height-limit Law Building will be acquired and razed and Court street from Broadway to Hill will be eliminated. Court street at present only extends from Broadway to the rise of Bunker Hill west of the Law Building. Incidentally, it is proposed to do away with Court street from Broadway to Spring street.

DEVELOPMENT PLAN

The new State building, to occupy the southwest corner of the Center area, will be set back from the Hill and First street lines for the purpose of landscaping, it is stated. With the condemnation of the forty-two feet of the north side of First street between Broadway and Hill for widening purposes, only less than twenty feet of the present building frontage on Broadway will be left and the razing of the remaining part is included in the program, Mr. Graves said.

Additional space adjoining the State building site is to be acquired to provide for adequate construction and parking space.

The eventual removal of the structures between the east frontage of the Law building and the site of the new courthouse will follow.

COURTHOUSE DETAILS

While the exact architectural design of the new courthouse has not been determined, it will be in harmony with the City Hall, though following its lines. The removal of the present Courthouse to make room for a park will afford a clear view from the new courthouse to the City Hall. In this connection the removal of the present Hall of Records, which is regarded as becoming antiquated in various respects, is mentioned.

The wing of the new Courthouse will be occupied by the Municipal court, county clerk and record offices. The structure also will house the law library, grand jury rooms and about sixty Superior court rooms. This grouping, it is stated, will be of special convenience to the various correlated branches of the law-administering division of the county.

The building will be flanked with ample parking space in addition to landscaped area.

The proposed Technical Building is the latest contemplated feature of the program and architecturally will conform to the other county structures.

With the closing of Court street between Hill and Broadway, there will be no intervening street be-

SUBDIVISION BOUGHT BY COLORADANS

Lynwood Manor Sold to Denver Interests for High Price

Announcement was made yesterday of the purchase of Lynwood Manor, a subdivision one mile south of the Los Angeles industrial district, by the Union Deposit Company of Denver. The consideration is said to be approximately $200,000.

The property, situated in East Lynwood, consists of 350 residence and business lots and had been owned by Charles Mendelhall, who was represented in the deal by F. C. Blackman of the Deeble Chapman Corporation of Long Beach. F. F. Frasier, also of Long Beach, represented the Denver company in the transaction.

Bounded by Morton avenue, Atlantic, Long Beach and Century Boulevards, it was pointed out that all public improvements have been installed at the tract and that twenty-nine homes already have been built.

FACT AND COMMENT

NEXT Sunday's real-estate section will inaugurate a study course of thirty articles designed primarily for persons who intend to take the State examination for a broker's license. After January 1, next, every person engaged in the sales end of real estate must possess such a license.

The articles, written by I. A. Thorson of the University of California's extension division, cover briefly every point that will come up in the State tests. A reasonable amount of study of these thirty articles is practically a guarantee of passing the examination.

Each article will be concise and to the point, with all excess verbiage stripped and the facts boiled down to the minimum.

While this course is primarily for real-estate men, the general public should find it highly illuminating. It presents the fundamental facts of real-estate operations, an acquaintance with which will be of benefit to everyone who at any time in the future may be involved in either the purchase or sale of property.

BEAUTY SOUGHT IN CIVIC CONSTRUCTION

Planning Authorities and Engineering Departments Are Giving Consideration to the Artistic Side of Public Works in Expansion Programs

Los Angeles is adding another record to its string of notable achievements, namely, the effectual combination of the artistic with its public service construction progress.

There is no disposition to tie silk-ribbon bowknots on lamp posts, or engage in any bizarre orgy of putting mural decorations on factory chimneys, but there is an opportune and well-directed trend toward giving beautification of public works the importance it merits.

County and city planning authorities, bridge engineering departments and others closely connected with municipal and county expansion involving public works of various character, take it as a matter of course these days to give considerable heed to the artistic side of the work in hand.

BEAUTY AND UTILITY

From the bridge design branch of the City Engineering Department of Bridges and Structures, of which M. Butler is chief engineer and H. H. Winter, principal assistant, have come designs that have graced city bridges with beautiful balustrades, artistic pylons, stately arches and other ornamentation expressive of the spirit of beauty prevalent in Southern California.

It has been stressed that some of Europe's cities importantly rest their architectural fame on their bridges and Los Angeles more than ever is taking advantage of extensive bridge construction to derive a similar cultural benefit.

This same idea of structural beautification as applied to public works throughout the county is pertinently emphasized by projected plans for grade separations, canyon bridge work and details of regional planning.

CREATIONS OF ART

W. H. Baker, bridge designer in the county road department's bridge division, of which W. D. Armstrong is chief, speaks of his bridge designs as would a sculptor of his creations.

In the preparation of a perspective of such design, Mr. Baker finds encouraging co-operation from the county architect's department, headed by Karl W. Muck. Mr. Baker has prepared a strikingly attractive grade-separation design which has received official approval. The perspective for it was prepared by Bertram Teitelbaum of the county architect's department. The design without ostentation makes the approaches and cross-over of such separation an uncluttered structure embodying pleasing lines suggestive of sculptural quality. Mr. Baker also has made an effective design of a proposed Topanga Canyon bridge.

A delightfully ornamental design is that prepared under county regional planning commission direction, with perspective by Ferd E. Gramm, the commission's staff artist, of a proposed bridge for continuing Mulholland Drive across Cahuenga Pass

Aerial Surveys Being Made for Boeing Factory

Aerial surveys for the $1,000,000 Boeing airplane plant which will be built on a 200-acre site adjoining the North Hollywood-Studio City district, are being made by William Arthur, aeronautical chief of the Austin Company of America, in conjunction with C. E. Johnson, manager of the Oakland division of the Boeing concern.

The Boeing plant will represent an investment of $1,000,000 with a ground value of $500,000 and $500,000 in construction. Included in the latter are a factory, school, loading field with hangars and a clubhouse. The estimated payroll is $500,000 annually.

Bach Aircraft Corporation is rushing construction of buildings calling for 20,000 square feet of additional factory space which will give it a monthly capacity of five ten-place, three-motored transports. With capacity production the Bach Aircraft annual pay roll will exceed $400,000. Eight ten-place ships already have been delivered by the Bach factory.

CLOTHIERS TAKE WILSHIRE LEASE

Silverwood's Will Locate in Tower Building

Expenditure of $500,000 for Fixtures Seen

Ample Parking Space Near Store Provided

Silverwood's, pioneer Los Angeles clothiers, last week signed a twenty-year lease on the west wing of Wilshire Tower, the building recently completed by A. W. Ross and the center of "The Miracle Mile of Wilshire Boulevard."

The lease involves in excess of $500,000, according to Howard B. Lawson, who represented Wilshire Boulevard Center, Inc., owners of the building. About $100,000 will be expended by Silverwood's in fixtures.

LARGE STORE ROOMS

The space which the company will occupy has a frontage of 60 feet and a depth of 125 feet, taking in both the first and second floors, including a mezzanine.

In commenting on the deal, Mr. Ross declared. "This move of Silverwood's justifies our belief that this section of Wilshire Boulevard has definitely arrived as a shopping center. We feel sure that the excellent business enjoyed by Desmond's in the same building, since they opened last March, was a major factor in the determination of Silverwood's to lease in Wilshire Tower.

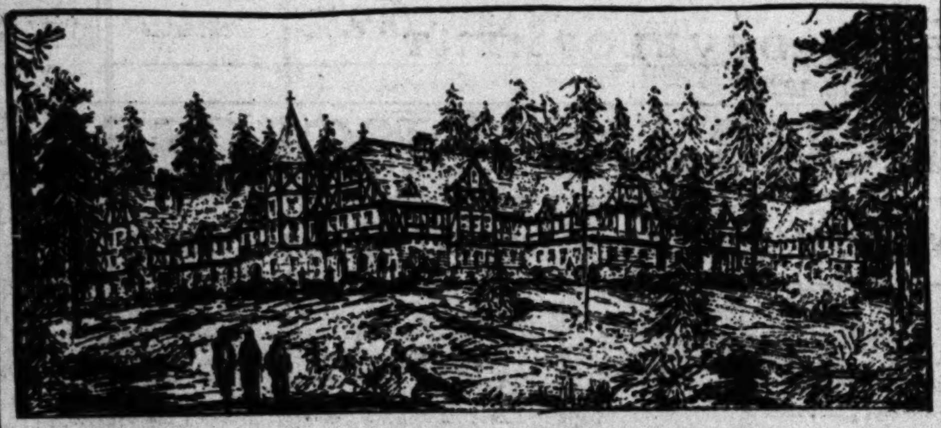
FREE PARKING SPACE

"A feature of Wilshire Tower is that customers are offered free parking immediately adjacent with a direct entrance to the building from the parking court.

Fell and Paradise, store designers, have been commissioned to execute the interior of the store. Occupancy of the quarters has already been taken but officials of Silverwood's believe it will take until September to complete alterations and open the store to the public.

HOTEL WILL BE BUILT AT CAMBRIA PINES

Structure Planned as Stopover Point on Highway



Building Will Cost $125,000

THE erection of a $125,000 hotel at Cambria Pines, a halfway city between Los Angeles and San Francisco, is being planned by C. T. Tryon & Co., according to an announcement made Friday.

Architect Arthur H. Stibolt is preparing plans for the structure, which will be of English type of architecture, of brick and concrete construction, and will contain 100 rooms with bath.

The property is located on the Roosevelt Highway and is naturally landscaped with large pine trees growing within 300 feet of the ocean. At this point there is an excellent beach. The district abounds in quail, grouse, squirrels and is a noted hunting ground for deer. There are three trout streams near the hotel, and deep-sea fishing.

William Simpson Construction Company has contracted to add three stories to the present five-story Class A Hollywood Professional Building at the southeast corner of Hollywood and Sycamore. The addition will cost $115,000.

Wide Highway Will Be Built Across Vernon

VERNON, May 11. (Exclusive)—An eighty-foot right of way along Soto street through this city is one of the improvements contemplated in the near future. It will connect with Miles avenues in Huntington Park. Decision to establish a highway of this width will mean the installation of a roadway fifty-six feet in width, according to City Engineer Howard McCurdy.

The information has been given out by McCurdy that only a few necessary deeds to an eighty-foot right of way are yet to be obtained, and it is expected that these will be arranged within the next few weeks.

OWNERS OF HOSPITAL AT MAYWOOD NAMED

Announcement was made last week that the new Providence Hospital now under construction at Slauson and Pine avenues, Maywood, will be owned and operated by Mr. and Mrs. William Hopkins and Mr. and Mrs. Rollin Saunders. Construction of the building will be completed in ninety days.

CLOVER FIELD CABLE LINES BEING PLACED

SANTA MONICA, May 11. (Exclusive)—More than a mile of cable is being laid underground at Clover Field, this city's municipal airport, in a conduit on the south and west sides of the field. It will convey power for landing lights, to be eighteen inches above the ground, at intervals of 200 and 300 feet.

ONE-THIRD MAY LIENS PAID OFF

Flood of Money Continues to Pay Maturities

Number of Default Notices Show Decline

New Method Will Segregate Debts by Location

Instead of showing a depression in pay-off of lien obligations in conformity with the depression of February because of the preceding interest period in May, apparently unaffected by the heavy pay-off of April, the preceding interest period, likely will show an excess of maturity payments of approximately $2,000,000, judging by the experience of the first nine days of the month, according to the weekly analysis by the Pacific States Saving and Loan Company, upon data supplied exclusively to The Times by the Mortgage Maturity company.

Incidentally, a complete change in methods of compilation affected by the Mortgage Maturity Company in its survey of liens due in August will afford a precise analysis of the actual lien conditions of property in each of the incorporated areas of the county on the monthly review in The Times. Hitherto its confidential monthly reports to lien interests for refinancing purposes have been based upon the residence of the owners. It has been found that ownership of property is spreading through the county.

INVESTMENTS SCATTERED

Holders of property no longer restrict their investments to the district in which they reside. Revelation of this wider interest in property holding is indicated distinctly in the August report of liens due. The change in segregation will be of distinct economic value in that it will be possible to know the lien burden of the property in each district as distinct from the lien burdens of the residents of districts. The first review of these conditions will appear in The Times the last Sunday of July.

"The first nine days of May," comments the Pacific States Saving and Loan Company, "showed a total of $3,749,470 paid off, out of a total of $10,764,191 due for the entire month. This is approximately one-third of the total due. The discharge effected 664 liens, which is also approximately one-third of the month's maturities, which was 2020 instruments for the month.

"The daily rate of pay-off was approximately $405,000, which is maintained for the entire thirty-one days of the month would give us a total discharge of $12,555,000, or $1,791,000 over the requirements of $10,764,000 for the month. These are round figures allowing of latitude above and below the amounts.

FEWER DEFAULTS LISTED

"An encouraging note is shown in the further decline in the number of liens noticed for default, which for the first eight days registered only twenty-five instruments representing a total of $106,000 as against thirty-two instruments during the same period of April for a total of $182,000. April itself had shown a notable decline from the March total, for the same period which showed forty-one instruments noticed for a total of $236,890.

"The decline in such notices would indicate that more intelligent handling of maturing lien obligations is operating due to the wider education in lien financing the result perhaps of the competition for opportunities to loan money in Los Angeles city and county. That the loss of property through ignorance of the proper pethod of refinancing obligations is declining is an encouraging sign and makes for good will in real estate operations."

CIVIC BUILDING PLAN REVEALED

tween the latter thoroughfares from First street to the new location of Temple street, a distance at present of three blocks.

To accommodate the increased flow of traffic, as well as to conform to requirements of the Civic Center plan, the north ends of Hill and Broadway will be straightened and cut through where necessary there.

While the program in its entirety can be consummated by a bond issue of about $25,000,000, it is stated, there has been no official disposition evidenced to favor any single issue of that amount at this time and it is understood the materializing of the program will be contingent on a series of issues.

STORES TO BE BUILT IN STUDIO CITY

Two-Story Business Block Under Construction on Site Recently Acquired

Construction of a two-story business block was started yesterday at the northeast corner of Ventura Boulevard and Pacoima avenue in Studio City by George A. Holt, who recently bought the site for $50,000 cash.

Plans call for an artistic concrete and stucco building of Spanish design, 75 feet by 100 feet. Five rooms will occupy the first floor with modern apartments upstairs. Three stores will face on Ventura Boulevard and two on Pacoima avenue.

Holt, who lives in Salt Lake City, recently bought the Ventura-Pacoima lot, paying $666 per front foot for it. Ventura Boulevard at Pacoima is the only valley intersection having two direct routes into Hollywood.

Aloha Hotel Purchased for High Figure

Purchase of the Aloha apartment hotel at the northwest corner of McCadden Place and Leland Way by W. J. Wallace from the Angelus Holding Company for a consideration of approximately $325,000, was announced yesterday.

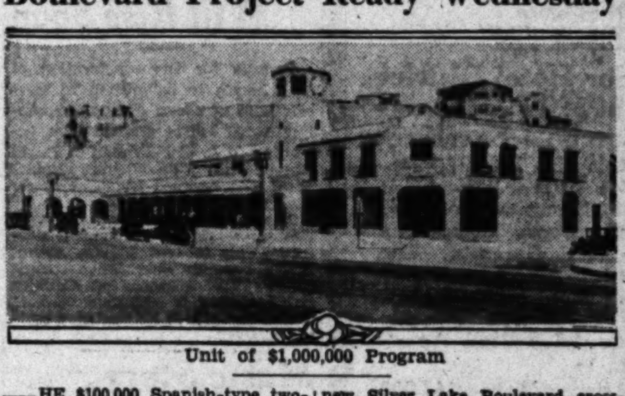
Boulevard Project Ready Wednesday



Unit of $1,000,000 Program

THE $100,000 Spanish-type two-story open-air food center block just completed at the corner of Sunset and Silver Lake boulevards, adjacent to Moreno Highlands, will be opened Wednesday, according to C. Eustace Harrell, president of the Silver Lake Terrace Company, owners.

This business block has been entirely constructed of Los Angeles-made products as was specified in the contract given the National Thrift Company, builders.

Traffic in the East Hollywood area, by the recent completion of the Glendale-Hyperion viaduct and soon to be further facilitated by the new Silver Lake Boulevard cross-town artery, has been multiplied here by tens of thousands of cars daily. As a result this district is enjoying splendid real-estate sales and building activity.

A building program amounting to nearly $1,000,000 is now under way. Among the larger projects are $100,000 Hills Brothers' storage and furniture building; $50,000 East Hollywood branch of the California Bank; $25,000 Clune Organ Company Building; $100,000 two new Warner Brothers' motion-picture studios; $110,000 McKinley Building; $35,000 Silver Lake Valley Children's Playground; a score of apartment-houses valued from $30,000 to $125,000.

Financial Expert Makes Investigation of Las Vegas Realty Values

DESERT TOWN SURVEY MADE

Analysis Conducted Shows Community Growth

Increase in Population of City Estimated

Some Subdivisions Declared Priced Too High

Las Vegas, focal point for Boulder dam activities, has like any other town, its good and bad real estate. Such is the opinion of Edward R. Dewey, financial and real estate expert, who has just returned from Nevada where he spent a week investigating realty conditions in the interests of local capital.

"Las Vegas," says Mr. Dewey, "has a population of about 6000, but the actual figures do not paint an accurate picture of the make-up of that population. In that 6000, there are nearly 1000 so-called floaters who have drifted to Las Vegas following Congressional action in authorizing the building of the dam. [illegible] the rest of the population, 5000 persons, is a firmly intrenched unit, that was there before the dam was started and will remain there even if the dam is never built. Las Vegas is primarily a railroad town with a [illegible] monthly pay roll for its railroad employees, and was a steadily prosperous community before it became the center of a possible boom.

GROWTH PREDICTED

"Two years from today, by which time actual construction work on the dam itself will surely be under way, Las Vegas should have a population of from 10,000 to 12,000. This much can be predicted with assurance. Further growth is probable, but its extent can not be yet determined.

"This increase in population is bound to bring a building campaign of considerable size. From studying the various factors affecting the [illegible] I believe that within the next two years there should be built at least 100 housing units and that the value of this residential construction will be approximately [illegible]. Houses will run about [illegible] per unit, but apartments with [illegible] unit cost will bring the [illegible] down to about $2500.

"In this period there will be [illegible] at least 100 business outlets, the construction of which will cost in the neighborhood of [illegible]. This housing and business development should amply care for an increase in population of 5000.

"Las Vegas, previous to any dam boom influence, supported a built-up district of about forty square blocks. It is logical to suppose that a second 5000 in population would build up another forty square blocks and that if the population goes to 15,000 that a third forty square blocks will be built up.

EXPANSION TRACED

"A careful check on real estate conditions there will convince anyone that little or no expansion can be expected to the west, which is bounded by the railroad tracks. Development to the north of the present business district seems unlikely for racial reasons. What expansion does come will be to the east, the northeast, southeast and the south, of the forty blocks now pretty solidly built up.

"Therefore it seems probable that building construction during the next two years will have to extend east as far as Tenth or Eleventh streets and south to three or four blocks south of Garces street, to take care of the requirements of the 5000 or 6000 additional population that can be confidently predicted.

"Land is being offered for sale on the extreme outskirts of the town and even out in the desert. Much of this land will never be worth what is now being paid for it and for that reason its sale is to be deplored.

"Land in the present built-up part of the city and in the expansion area as charted here has a very solid and predictable basis of value, but investment in land outside of this area must at the present time be considered as highly speculative and with as little chance of success for the investor as the average highly speculative venture provides."

CITIZENS BALLOT ON TOWN NAME

Community Decides to Substitute Three Appelations for One

MONTE VISTA, May 11. (Exclusive)—Wanted—a name.

This community known for years as Monte Vista, Narod, and West Ontario, is about to be rechristened, but the only thing that is lacking is the name.

The recently organized community Boosters' Club has set as one of its missions the christening of the district with one name, thus doing away with the three by which it is now known.

As the club members cannot agree on which name shall be chosen, the residents of the community have been asked to vote on it. Consequently a ballot box has been placed in the office of the Monte Vista Water Company for receipt of ballots, the box to be opened about the 20th inst., and results of the election made known.

Contracts will be awarded this week for the $130,000 intermediate school at Compton. The building will be of brick construction, of Tudor architecture with an auditorium seating 750 persons. The administration building will include sixteen class rooms, a cafeteria and shops. W. Horace Austin, Long Beach, architect, drew the plans. It is expected the building will be completed by September 1.

BUILDING OF UNIVERSITY UNIT BEGINS

Construction of Education Structure on Westwood Site Starts

Construction of the Education Building for the University of California at Los Angeles at Westwood has been started, it was announced at the university this week. It is to be completed before the next school year begins next September, and will cost more than $500,000.

Announcement has been made of a gift of $500,000 to the university for an additional building at Westwood. This structure will be known as the Students Union Building and will be located south of the present buildings toward Westwood Village. This is to be the sixth structure to be erected and will bring the building investment in the new campus to an estimated $5,000,000.

Present further plans for the improvement of the campus include an ornamental entrance at Westwood Boulevard and a beautified approach to the buildings from the extension of Westwood Boulevard, which is designed to become the principal campus artery. Funds for this work were the gift of the Janss Investment Corporation.

ART SOUGHT IN CONSTRUCTION

over Cahuenga and Highland avenues.

Director Diggs and Chief Engineer Fox of the County Regional Planning Commission and Managing Director Whitnall of the Los Angeles City Planning Commission regard as of basic importance the utilization of the beautiful and artistic in materializing the extensive planning projects being developed.

An interesting cross-section of that is afforded by the way hillside roadways are planned. Instead of a cut and fill method of slicing out a roadway along a hill slope, Mr. Whitnall has obtained effectual results from the split-grade method whereby a series of roadways not only provides for traffic at present and in future, but also lends itself to the parking of the areas between the roads.

This manner of treatment as applicable to county hillside or sloping area roads is shown in a drawing prepared for the County Regional Planning Commission by Mr. Gramm.

The planning commission authorities also take into consideration the effectual placement of trees and parking. In that regard it is interesting to note that the regional planning designers have suggested to various county localities admirable methods of adorning island triangles and other area bits formed by three or more intersecting roadways.

In fact, it is declared that the benefits accruing by far offset any additional expense that may be incurred, and that in some instances there is an actual saving effected because of preventing subsequent changes.

A pleasing phase of all this development is its aid in the closer correlation of the efforts and purposes of public departments that have a large part in the construction of public projects.

Golf Course Idea to Get Trial Saturday

Completion of the eighteen-hole "pony" golf course in Holmby Park, Westwood Hills, is to be celebrated from the 18th to the 26th inst. with a novel public tournament, J. J. Hassett, secretary of the park board, announced yesterday.

The "pony" golf course idea for city parks is an experiment which officials believe will prove one of the most popular devised in recent years. Upon the success of the Holmby Park project will depend the extension of the idea to include other parks throughout the city.

Prizes for the opening tournament, Mr. Hassett said, were put up by the Janss Investment Corporation, original donors of the site for Holmby Park.

FACT AND COMMENT

ment problem, it seems pertinent to again consider the advisability of creating an assessment commission.

So long as paving companies, electrolier manufacturers and other similar concerns are interested in fostering paved streets, sidewalks, curbs, gutters and lights, just that long the need of some supervisory organization will be needed.

Pathetically true stories come to light from month to month attesting the oppressions suffered by property owners at the hands of grafting improvement organizations. One such story, recently revealed, is of a widow supporting two sons in school, who bought a lot in an obscure neighborhood. The price of the lot was $750, most of which was to be paid in installments.

Regardless of the inability of the neighborhood to afford such improvements, pavement, sidewalk and electrolier legislation was railroaded through and the improvements completed.

The special assessments on this woman's property reached $1900 and she was saved from losing everything only by the fact that the man from whom she bought the property made her a present of it.

Similar instances can be found in other parts of the metropolitan area and an assessment commission seems the only practicable solution to the problem. Such a body must be made up of men financially independent and whose moral integrity is impervious to graft.

When property owners are protected against improvement lobbyists, they will be more likely to support the campaign to "Own Your Own Home." The task of putting through an assessment commission of this nature is a work well worthy of the Los Angeles Realty Board, whose members would benefit in the same measure as the property owners.

Light Industrials

Protests of merchants against light industrials locating in retail districts seem about to bring action. The planning commission has asked the City Council for an appropriation to defray expenses for a survey of the downtown section, which survey will attempt to determine both the nature and extent of light industries in that sector of the city.

In a recent address, Donald M. Baker, consulting engineer and member of the board of city planning commissioners, declared that one of the greatest detriments light industrials brought to a retail district was the crowding of sidewalks, particularly during noon hours and from 5 to 6 in the afternoon, by industrial workers."

This crowding, to the inconvenience of persons on shopping expeditions, declared Mr. Baker, proved so serious in New York in recent years, that it drove almost all the retail establishments off lower Fifth avenue and contiguous streets. Similar disturbance in Los Angeles retail districts is visioned by those who study local conditions with a pessimistic eye.

While it is doubtful if the situation is yet serious here, a survey with accompanying resolutions and action on the proper restrictions, should be of benefit for the future. It would curb further industrial inroads, with the segregation operating eventually for the benefit of both the retail and industrial establishments.

Hotel Lease and Fixtures Transferred

Sale of the lease and furnishings of the San Carlos Hotel, Fifth and Olive streets, for $40,000, to O. M. Anderson and Mrs. Z. M. Scouse, was reported last week by Carson-Hardebeck & Co., Los Angeles hotel brokers. The lease formerly was held by G. G. Joyce, who is locating in Oregon.

The purchasers have been in the hotel business in Los Angeles for the past eight years. H. T. Darbour, Jr., has been appointed as manager.

Several months ago the hotel property, land and buildings, was sold for $600,000, E. De Hall being the purchaser.

Dairymen Plan Office Building

TULARE, May 11. (Exclusive)—Work is under way on the basement and foundation level of the office building of the Dairymen's Co-operative creamery to be erected on South M street. When completed this building will incorporate the latest in modern office planning. Harry Smith, local contractor, is in charge of construction.

REAL ESTATE PRIMER TO BEGIN NEXT SUNDAY

Beginning next Sunday and continuing for twenty-nine weeks, The Times will publish a series of articles on real estate, careful study of which will prepare readers for the examination to be given applicants for license as real-estate salesmen.

The recent passage by the State Legislature of an amendment to the Real Estate Act requires all salesmen in a broker's office to pass examination before being granted a license.

The articles have been prepared by J. A. Thorson, lecturer on real estate at the University of California, extension division. Mr. Thorson's next class, which will begin sessions the 17th inst., will study the same material as will be given in The Times.

The first article will contain an analysis of the State Real Estate Department Act, pointing out just what the respective requirements of a broker and salesman are. Then will follow a brief review of the history of real-estate ownership, which will help to clear up the origin of many of the terms now used in transactions.

Next will come the operations and instruments used in real-estate transactions, approximately in the following order:

Contracts, negotiable instruments, mortgages, trust deeds and land contracts, deeds, wills, auction sales, leases, title papers, escrow practice, brokerage, options, power of attorney, acknowledgments mechanic's liens, taxes and assessments, judgments, attachments and garnishments, appraisals, appraising lease-held estates, making loans, subdivisions, property, management, exchanges, system of Torrens and land registration, various assessment acts. The articles will go into detail on the foregoing subects:

The readers will be asked to procure forms such as mortgages, trust deeds, land contracts, deeds, as the course progresses. Attention will be called to what forms should be obtained in the issue preceding the one in which the article covering the particular subject appears.

A few pointed questions covering each subject represented will appear at the conclusion of each article.

INDUSTRY TAKES UPWARD COURSE

Gain in Employment Shown for State Plants

Factories in Los Angeles Working at Capacity

Auto, Plane Manufacturers Reported Active

Industrial activity in California indicates a favorable trend. There is a general increase in employment reported. In the Los Angeles district virtually all plants have been operating at capacity and several garment plants have been working overtime. Automobile factories and rubber tire plants maintain high levels of operations. Airplane manufacturing is expanding rapidly.

The above are some of the outstanding points in a report on general business conditions in Los Angeles and the Southwest just released by the Eberle Economic Service.

"According to the State Department of Industrial Relations, the number of employees during March increased 1.8 per cent in 755 establishments reporting," the report states. "The total amount of weekly pay roll increased 7.6 per cent, and the average weekly earnings increased 5.7 per cent. A part of the large surplus of farm labor has been absorbed by spinach canning operations and the demand for farm help for plowing, spraying and general ranch work is steadily increasing, Department of Labor reports disclose.

"On the other hand, forces employed in oil fields and refineries, oil tool shops, and lamp factories connected with the motion-picture industry were somewhat reduced. Harvesting of oranges and vegetables, together with work in the deciduous fruit orchards, absorbed quite a number of agricultural workers. The increase in the value of building permits should further relieve the unemployment situation. Industrial power consumed in the Los Angeles district increased 10.5 per cent for the latest month available, and cumulatively, is 11.3 per cent ahead of last year. Industrial gas consumption increased approximately 29 per cent as compared with last year."

In Bakersfield the labor supply and demand were fairly well balanced with only a slight surplus of help, the report discloses, while in San Bernardino a small surplus of labor exists, including building trades. All plants reported normal operations except railroad repair shops which curtailed schedules slightly. In San Diego the local industrial plants reported normal operations for this time of the year. The harvesting of oranges and lemons afforded employment to a number of workers and the demand for farm help increased. Building operations, road construction, dredging and filling for an aviation field, and improvements to the naval air field furnished employment for numerous men.

Accessibility Held Feature of Subdivision

A recent survey of the progressive conditions contributing to the success of Hollywoodland, according to Mel Anderson, general sales manager of this residential district, discloses the fact that within five minutes of Hollywoodland, is Hollywood, designated as the style center of the world and the theatrical center of the West. Hollywoodland is within ten minutes of thirty-eight schools, forty-three churches, forty-one banks, twenty theaters, many department stores, shops, restaurants, clubs, motion-picture studios, the Hollywood Bowl, the public library and the artistic and cultural activities which have made Hollywood such a well known community.

"These many advantages" declared Anderson, "contribute to the popularity of Hollywoodland and in introducing our new Lakewood Addition No. 2, the response which we have had indicates that the people of Los Angeles have fully awakened to the desirability of owning a hillside home where accessibility and transportation facilities are a governing factor.

"Hollywoodland maintains, without cost to its residents and their guests, de luxe motor coach transportation throughout the property, connecting with the regular Pacific Electric motor busses which operate on a fifteen-minute schedule to Hollywood Boulevard, transfering to all points in the city.

"Hollywoodland offers the environment and recreational advantages of a country estate with the healthful climatic superiority of the Hollywood hills and yet is scarcely twenty-five minutes from Seventh and Broadway and only five minutes from the heart of Hollywood," Anderson says.

Speaker Tells of Stability in Realty Values

J. W. Bronson of the Pacific States Savings and Loan Association, speaking last Friday evening before the class in real estate principles at university college of the University of Southern California, stated that real estate values are becoming more stabilized. "This fact," he said, "is borne out by the percentage of the value of loans made in comparison with the value of the property. The policy of increasing the rate of the loan to the property value means that values are reaching a nonfluctuating level, as is the case in older and long established cities."

The next speaker who will appear before the class will be Attorney D. E. Farr, who will speak on "The Real Estate Act," according to E. W. Weeks, Jr., in charge of the class.

BUILDERS!

Are you concentrating your efforts? Or, are you carrying on a hit or miss program of locations?

One of the biggest Contractors in Los Angeles said, "I am going to confine ALL MY OPERATIONS to PELLISSIER SQUARE until it is completely built up. In the future I am going to get the BENEFITS of the VALUES I have been HELPING TO CREATE for others all over town."

And he will! Because the REFLECTED VALUE of each building in turn makes EASIER FINANCING, BETTER RENTALS, LARGER PROFITS.

We have made this PROGRAM OF PROGRESS possible by giving options on adjacent lots to the ones purchased so that the Builders are secure in CREATING VALUES FOR THEMSELVES.

Without a great outlay of money in buying up a number of lots in advance in any neighborhood, where can you start a Building Campaign that you do not raise values to your own loss? That is why you jump all over town and lose the REFLECTED VALUE OF YOUR OWN EFFORTS!

Pellissier Square is logical. It was planned in every detail for your benefit. Take advantage of our cooperation.

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

ORGANIZATION TO CELEBRATE

Community's Founding to be Observed Tomorrow

Loyola's Building Program Well Under Way

Improvements Installed Valued at $350,000

Tomorrow night, birthday of University City, members of the Culver company from all over Southern California will gather in the auditorium there to celebrate the community's first birthday party. Vaudeville entertainment, dancing and refreshments will be enjoyed by more than 1000 branch and unit managers, salesmen, saleswomen, and their friends.

"In actual accomplishments since May 13, 1928," declares Charles E. Lindblade, vice-president, when University City was announced to the world through Southern California newspapers, the Culver company has broken several of its own records.

"More than $350,000 worth of improvements are already installed in University City. Two major units of Loyola University's huge building program have been built. The first model home has been built and furnished, while three more model homes are now nearly completed. Individual buyers of property in University City have announced their intention to build many other homes and a number of business buildings this spring.

"Grading, the building of streets, sidewalks, the installation of utilities, landscaping—all these have gone forward with a rapidity unusual even in Southern California.

"With this foundation laid during the first year of our five-year development program, we expect at least to double our achievements during the year beginning tomorrow. When University City becomes a 2-year-old, it will have attained a prominence which many thriving communities take years to attain."

Construction in Redlands Shows Gains

With the formal opening today of Toluca Lake Center at the intersection of Riverside Drive and Cahuenga Boulevard in the North Hollywood area of Los Angeles, Becker-Arbuckle-Wright formally launched their newest property development in the North Hollywood district.

Ernest A. Becker, Jr., is president of the Becker-Arbuckle-Wright Corporation and is also president of the Wilshire District Chamber of Commerce. His associates are Preston S. Wright, vice-president of the company, and Senator Frank A. Arbuckle, general manager and secretary.

In commenting on the character of the Toluca Lake Center business lots, residential income lots and residence sites, Arbuckle said yesterday: "The major traffic intersection of Riverside Drive and Cahuenga Boulevard has been watched with a great deal of interest for some time by many of the foremost business men and property developers in the Hollywood and North Hollywood sections of the city, owing to the heavy trend of population into this district during the past two or three years and the establishment in the vicinity of Toluca Lake of an exclusive residential section."

HOME HELD IMPETUS TO SUBDIVISION

Los Feliz Hills Developer Reports Ma nyDwellings to Be Built Soon

Opening of the model home in Los Feliz Hills has aroused renewed public interest in that subdivision and has given an impetus to building development there, according to Ralph O. Williams of Laack & Williams, associated with Edwards & Wildey Company in the ownership of the tract.

Within the last two weeks, Mr. Williams explained, plans for twelve homes were submitted to the subdividers for their approval. Also there is a growing interest in lot prices in the tract, and it was explained that there is an encouraging increase in the number of sales of homesites.

"The new model home that was recently completed in our Los Feliz Hills subdivision and which is now open to the public, is of California-Spanish type of architecture," said Mr. Williams. "It is located but a short distance from Los Feliz Boulevard, at the intersection of Griffith Park Boulevard and Ashbury Road. It was built by the Durex Quality Homes Company, but is not for sale, so I am informed. The builders have provided a hostess, who shows visitors through the various rooms, between 10 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

"The home contains nine rooms and three baths. There are four bedrooms. Every room has been expensively and artistically furnished by one of the leading department stores of Los Angeles. The fact that it is so attractively furnished has evidently aided in interesting the general public."

DEVELOPER SEES IDEAL FULFILLED

Many New Improvements at Dana Point Declared Worth Large Sums

The improvement program at Dana Point is rapidly crystallizing the ideals of its developer, S. H. Woodruff, as work in the first units nears completion. According to figures prepared by Thomas A. Jordan, president of the Engineering Service Corporation, there soon will be completed at Dana Point, 1,246,000 square feet of paving, 196,000 square feet of sidewalks, 66,000 lineal feet of curbing, 36,000 lineal feet of sewers, 37,000 lineal feet of water mains, storm drains, ornamental street lighting and other public conveniences.

This improvement program in the first units, according to George R. Hannan, manager of Dana Point, has entailed an expenditure of more than $1,000,000. "The importance of this method of community development cannot be stressed too greatly," declared Hannan. "The time has come when Southern California should have a representative watering-place supplying the needs of the Pacific Southwest for an outdoor recreational community offering all of the sports of land and sea.

"In addition to our improvement program which we plan to carry on throughout the entire area of Dana Point, many new homes are now under construction. Sales to the extent of approximately $250,000 were consummated during the past thirty days."

SUBWAY CROSSING TO BE BUILT AT TULARE

APRIL FINANCING RECORDS SHOWN

Second Most Active Month of Year Reported

Trust Deeds Far in Excess of Mortgages

Many Firms Engaged in Loans on Real Estate

[illegible] as the second most active month of the year in volume of real estate financing, April closed with a total in mortgages and trust deeds for Los Angeles county of [illegible], according to an analysis made by the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Company, based on the monthly compilation of [illegible] & White, civil engineers and [illegible].

The high point for the current year was reached in March when [illegible] of this character to the value of slightly more than $54,-[illegible] were recorded in the county.

MANY FIRMS ENGAGED

During the last month there were [illegible] mortgages and trust deeds valued at $37,113,622, recorded by [illegible]-one financial institutions operating within the county. The balance, numbering 6871 filings with a valuation of $21,973,770, were filed by individuals and miscellaneous companies whose operations are too small to classify separately.

Los Angeles county banks and trust companies were again first in amount of money furnished for real estate financing. These institutions supplied $6,430,165 on trust deed loans and $2,435,000 on mortgage loans, a total of $8,865,165. Building and loan associations ranked a close second for the month. These institutions loaned [illegible] on trust deeds and $1,026,-[illegible] on mortgages, a total of $8,049,-[illegible]. Mortgage companies ranked third for the month, making loans in the amount of $5,326,141 on trust deeds and $114,150 on mortgages, a total of $5,440,291. Fourth place was taken by insurance companies with a total in mortgages and trust deeds of $2,866,225; and individual operators were fifth with $1,849,500.

TRUST DEEDS LEAD

The total of trust deed loans by these five groups amounted to $21,-[illegible], and mortgage loans by these groups amounted to $5,436,-[illegible]. These five groups furnished nearly 55 per cent of the funds for realty financing last month.

First rank was taken by a local building institution which loaned [illegible] on trust deeds and $1,565,-[illegible] on mortgages, a total of $3,293,-[illegible]. The nearest competitor was a mortgage company which supplied [illegible] solely on trust deed loans. Third and fourth places were held by building and loan associations, each of which had better than [illegible]; and a bank was fifth with [illegible]. Thirteen institutions made loans of more than $500,000 each during the month.

Apartments in Brisk Demand

A brisk demand for Los Angeles apartments is indicated by the report of Alfred T. Pelton, president of the Los Angeles Pacific Properties Corporation, that 40 per cent of the apartments in the Witmer [illegible] group have been reserved, although the houses will not be completed until some time in June.

The corporation is completing eight apartment-houses between [illegible] and Third streets on Witmer street, near the Belmont High School. The houses are within walking distance of downtown Los An-

DANGERS SEEN IN DOCUMENTS

Realty Buyers Often Victims of Dishonesty

Reasons Why Papers May be Worthless

County Recorder Unable to Detect Forgeries

[Following thhe recent United States Senate inquiry into the validity of land titles in Southern California, a series of articles, written for The Times by W. W. Robinson, of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, containing information vital to realty owners and prospective owners, will be of timely interest to every land-holder who wishes to permanently safeguard his realty. This is the third of Mr. Robinson's series of articles.]

BY W. W. ROBINSON

The guarantee of title, by reason of its limitations, offers less protection to the owner, mortgagee, beneficiary or lessee than does the policy of title insurance. This in spite of the fact that, strictly speaking, both are instruments of insurance.

Circumstances of which the public records give no warning sometimes endanger or defeat titles to land. Since the "guarantee" limits itself to facts disclosed by such records, it will be seen readily that it contains elements of weakness.

To list the possible dangers against which the guarantee affords no protection is in itself to give them overemphasis. It is like enumerating the varieties of personal disaster that may overtake a man on his way home from the office. In any candid discussion of title insurance, however, potential sources of loss must be mentioned, no matter how remote.

FORGERIES DISCUSSED

First of all, there are forgeries that might cause a failure of title. A forged deed is absolutely void. The County Recorder cannot pass upon the question of its genuineness. The document when presented to him will be copied, and the records will give no notice of its falsity. A title company may issue a guarantee vesting in the grantee under this deed. The property then passes into the hands of an innocent purchaser who, sooner or later, will have the unhappy experience of learning from the rightful owner that his investment is a total loss.

A certain Los Angeles attorney thought he was buying a mortgage for a client on a piece of valuable South Pasadena land. Instead, he was paying out money for an assignment that had been forged by a man impersonating the actual mortgagee. Had the attorney protected his investment with a mortgagee's policy of title insurance, in place of a guarantee, the title company would have had to do all the worrying.

Disaster may also await the buyer of land under a deed made by a minor, or by a person legally insane or incompetent, or by an Asiatic alien. It is quite possible that the disability of the grantor in each of these instances is undisclosed by the public records. Hence a guarantee of title will not offer complete protection to the buyer or to successors in interest.

CLAIMS OF HEIRS

Wills are sometimes void through failure of the testator to name one of his children—even though afterborn—or to include the offspring of a deceased child. Sales made under such a will may be illegal. Where the records are silent as to the rights of these heirs the guarantee can give no consolation to the purchasers of the dead man's property.

A power of attorney is a most convenient instrument to enable business to be transacted by one person for another. But the death of the principal immediately terminates the power of the attorney-in-fact.

ESCROWS SHOULD BE CLEAR

Instructions to Banks, Title Insurance Companies Must be Plain to Avoid Complications

BY S. G. STEWART
Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles

(This is the fifth of a series of articles describing in detail the functions and workings of escrows.)

[illegible] banks and title insurance companies have printed forms covering the ordinary sale of real estate, mortgage or deed of trust loans upon realty and exchanges, which forms are helpful in the preparation of the instructions. The escrow clerk must be very careful to set forth in the instructions the terms of the sale, giving the exact amount of money to be paid and the name of the person to whose order it is to be paid. The description of the property should be set forth in full. Street addresses are not proper descriptions. The property should always be described by its legal description, that is, by lot and tract number. The terms of any notes and mortgages should be given in detail. The payment of commission should be provided for. There should be a statement covering the prorata adjustment of rents, taxes, fire insurance, interest on mortgages or trust deeds of record. The adjustment of interest on the purchase money mortgage or deeds of trust may be made by an authorization to credit interest on the face of the notes to the date of closing the escrow, which is usually the date the deed is filed for record. All escrow instructions should be dated, and should show how the title to the property is to be vested in the name of the buyer.

CERTAIN STATEMENTS

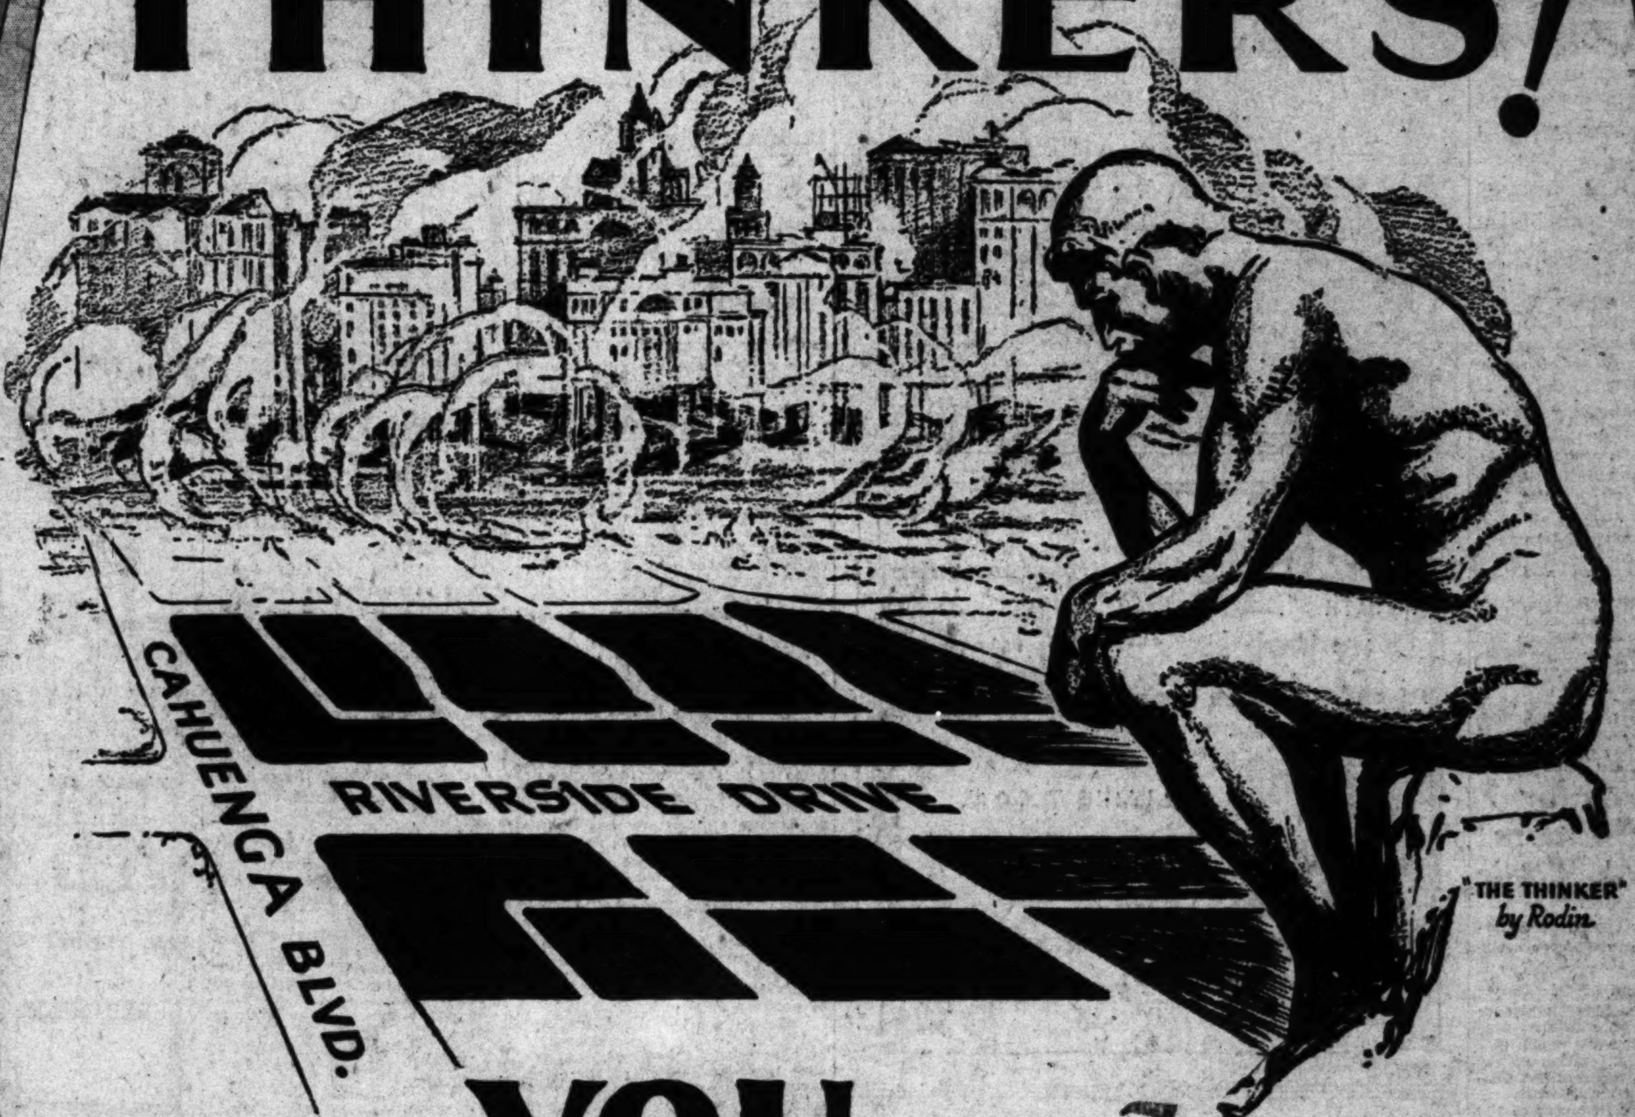
In case the property being sold is encumbered by a lease, it is good practice to have the lessor's interest in the lease assigned and transferred to the buyer through the escrow. It is proper, in some cases, to obtain from the lessee a statement to the effect that he occupies the premises as a tenant under a certain lease, describing it; that he has no offsets nor claims against the payment of the rent provided for in the lease; that the terms of the lease have not been modified [illegible] its execution; and that the lease is valid.

Property encumbered by a mortgage or trust deed is usually sold through escrow. In such escrows it is important to ascertain and specify in the escrow instructions, whether the buyer takes the property subject to the mortgage or deed of trust, or assumes and agrees to pay the debt. All the parties to an escrow should understand the importance of the difference between those two situations, on account of the personal liability on the note, in case it becomes necessary to sue for deficiency judgment. A buyer who assumes and agrees to pay the mortgage or deed of trust indebtedness may be made a party to a suit for deficiency judgment and he may have to pay any unsatisfied portion of the debt, in case the property does not bring a sufficient sum at foreclosure or trustee's sale, to pay the debt in full, plus the expenses of the sale.

BANK GETS LIEN

Escrow instructions should also provide, in case of a disagreement between the parties, that the escrow holder may withhold any further performance, until such time as the difficulties are adjusted and the escrow holder is so notified in writing. This, of course, applies to the escrow before it has proceeded to the state of a pure escrow, in which everything is done, which the parties are called upon to do and the only thing remaining is the recording of the instruments affecting the title, and the payment of the money. The escrow instructions used by some banks and title insurance companies provide that the parties to the escrow indemnify and hold the bank or title insurance company harmless against all costs, damages, attorneys' fees, expenses and liabilities which in good faith and without fault on its part as escrow holder, it may incur or sustain in connection with the escrow. The bank is given a lien on all the rights, titles and interest of each of the parties to the instructions in all his escrow papers and any monies arising therefrom to protect the bank as escrow holder under the instructions. The bank may otherwise find itself out of pocket for money to pay any expenses or losses caused by party to the escrow, in case of a dispute.

THINKERS!



...it is YOU we Invite

Today to the OPENING of Toluca Lake CENTER

GROWTH—of a nature unheard of in other American cities—sweeps like a flood over the communities of Southern California.

Cities elsewhere double in size in 50 years and marvel at their record. But in this magic Southland we see Glendale sweep from 17,000 to 75,000 in 5½ years—Burbank go from 2500 to 25,000—North Hollywood from 3,000 to 20,000 and Los Angeles from 557,000 to 1,400,000 in ten years—a growth that leaves in its wake the "bewildered"—the "unbelievers"—the "I could haves" and the THINKERS.

The Thinkers!—you who have seen Western Avenue make realty fortunes by the hundreds and who have analyzed and thought out what it meant or might have meant to you. You who have watched Wilshire values go from hundreds to thousands of dollars per front foot and have THOUGHT out the reasons why.

YOU who have witnessed the transformation in less than six years of the Highland, La Brea and Fairfax oil fields into an immense and beautiful residential and business area, and—more significant than all this—you whose minds have really compassed the full meaning of Hollywood's rise to a metropolis of itself within the mother city—it is YOU we especially invite today to the formal opening of Toluca Lake Center.

We know that your ability to understand the swift development of other principle key localities in Los Angeles will enable you to appreciate the opportunity presented today in the formal opening of this major boulevard intersection property at Riverside Drive and Cahuenga Boulevard.

Riverside Drive—100 feet wide—is destined to be the Hollywood Boulevard of this great new area of Los Angeles, and Cahuenga—90 feet wide—is exactly the same Cahuenga that intersects Hollywood Boulevard in Hollywood.

And exactly the same profit and money making opportunities exist at Riverside and Cahuenga now that made hundreds of men and women rich who bought at Hollywood and Vine and Hollywood and Cahuenga Boulevards three to five years ago.

Visit Toluca Lake Center today—drive out over Cahuenga Pass to Lankershim Boulevard, turn right past Universal City and keep right on ahead to the right on Cahuenga Blvd. to Riverside Drive. Stop at our offices—you will be guided to beautiful Toluca Lake, shown where the stars live, and taken as our guests through the aircraft factories. We will gladly furnish you a private car to the property, as our guest, if you will call FItzroy 5151 today or any day.

VACATION HOME PLAN PREPARED

Design Held Suitable for Mountain or Shore

Value of Wide Porch Noted for Recreation

Room Arrangement Makes for Convenience

The Small Home Plans Bureau, under the supervision of the Los Angeles Architectural Club, has succumbed to the malady of spring fever and presents to lovers of mountains and beaches a fitting plan.

The design pictured here is suitable for both beach and mountain. White clapboards, green shingles and green shutters make this cottage inviting on a summer day. The porch across the front is an ideal place to spend summer evenings, while the porch in the rear can be screened and used as a dining porch.

The arrangement of the rooms is held to be simple and convenient. Since there is no waste space this cottage is desirable for those wishing to have a roomy one, with the cost as low as possible.

The cottage can be placed on a forty-foot lot. It contains 900 square feet and can be constructed for approximately $1300.

DIVERSIFIED USE SEEN IN GARAGE

Point Illustrated in Small House Plan Shown

Building Gives Privacy to Entrance Garden

Home Pictured May Be Built at Reasonable Cost

BY THEODORE A. KOETZLI

Present-day living assigns to the garage increasingly important functions, so that as a matter of course much thought has been given within the past few years to its placing and to the details of the design.

In discussing this recently in the Architect and Engineer, Marc Goodnow said: "Not only are certain economies effected in locating the garage as an integral part of the dwelling, but its importance in the daily scheme of life, coupled with the desire to give more space to the garden, is bringing it forward as a feature of the front elevation.

OTHER USES SEEN

"Much of the former prejudice against this latter treatment has subsided with the realization that the garage can be tied in architecturally with the design, and that it may be handled in such a way as to further the need for shielding the patio or garden from the noises of the street. On the narrow city lot the garage in skilled hands is becoming an appropriate part of the front facade. It may be so placed as to give greater depth to the house, or to form a side wall of a front garden or to screen a more private patio opening directly upon a covered porch. Elimination of the driveway along the entire side of the house may mean opportunity for greater width of rooms or for other features now either cramped or entirely done away with."

Today's sketch illustrates the point made. For convenience and easy access to the street, the garage has been located at the front and a low wall with an entrance gate connects it with the front wing of the house. This wall gives privacy to the patio and the entrance garden.

DRIVE ELIMINATED

The elimination of the driveway permits the house itself to be of sufficient width so that an entry hall may be included in the plan, providing the very desirable access to its various parts. Exposure upon both the front and rear gardens makes the living room a pleasant one, and all the other rooms are provided with more than the usual allowance of light and air.

There are about 1350 square feet of floor area and the building cost can probably be kept within $4000.

The design is by the Allied Architects' Association.

Tulare Will Get Store to Cost $30,000

TULARE, May 11. (Exclusive)—Plans received from the San Francisco offices of the Montgomery Ward Company, indicate that the $30,000 store building to be erected adjacent to the building now occupied by the local branch store, will be a pleasing addition to the business district.

Pseudo-mission architecture will be followed in the design. Attractive dressing-rooms, rest-rooms and alteration-rooms will be constructed on a mezzanine floor at the rear of the building. On the ground floor will be the shipping and receiving department. There will be offices, show-rooms, sales departments, shipping offices and dressing-rooms. In the basement will be a modern heating-cooling-ventilating plant.

A warehouse for storage of reserve stock will be immediately back of the store building across an alley. The building will be of brick with stucco facing and tile inserts ornamenting the frontage. The place is expected to be occupied some time in July, all stock to be moved from the present store into the new home of the branch.

The property, owned by W. D. Cook, is said to be leased for a long period, with optious of renewal.

Home Builders' Primer

By REX AVON

Question: We plan to install awnings as soon as we decide on the correct style and colors. What would be best for a two-story English frame and stucco residence.

Answer: You probably would get the best results with the scroll design awnings, as they are more suitable for the architecture of your home and afford more possibilities for color compositions. Some helpful literature in faithful colorings is available.

Q.: Would we obligate ourselves if we asked for a plan showing the proper layout of a built-in sprinkling system for the grounds around our home?

A.: No cost or obligation is attached to this service, which is provided by a leading manufacturer in order that the sprinkler heads and valves will be properly installed and give maximum satisfaction. How to obtain an engineer's blue print and full technical information is pointed out in a brochure entitled "The Lawn Beautiful."

Q.: What type of blinds would you recommend for a sleeping porch where the light should be controlled without interfering with the air circulation?

A. Easy to install and designed to fit various types and sizes of window openings are Venetian blinds which admit any desired degree of light at any angle without continually raising or lowering. Through recent improvements these scientific blinds are noiseless in operation and afford seclusion at all times.

Q.: Is it possible to combine a first and second mortgage into one and pay off the loan on the monthly payment plan?

A.: You need not hesitate to submit this plan to a building-loan association and have them point out a way to solve your problem. It is practical and feasible to combine two mortgages and to arrange for monthly payments which can be met conveniently. Unlike the straight mortgage plan, each payment will reduce the principal more each succeeding month.

Q.: Your opinion would help me to decide about glass for windows which I understand admits ultraviolet rays of the sun. They are for a wing we are adding to our home for my invalid mother.

A.: This glass which transmits the health-giving ultraviolet rays is used in homes, schools, sanatoriums, etc., because it stimulates and invigorates young and old alike. It is now in general use and its beneficial properties have been proven by the most exacting tests. The air of any room where it is installed will be noticeably more pure and vitalized.

Q.: We wish to conceal the toilet bowl in a lavatory which opens into the entrance hall. Must these enameled chairs be custom built?

A.: If the toilet bowl is one of three standard types, viz., with the flushing valve at back, with the flushing valve at side, or with the flushing tank, there is an artistic sanitary toilet chair made up ready to install. They are stocked in white or colors, and do not interfere with the operation or sanitary features of the toilet.

Real Estate and Building LAW

This department, which is conducted through the courtesy of W. Ross Campbell Company, business property brokers, is at the service of Times readers. Questions, however, should be addressed to the Publicity Department of the above-mentioned firm at its offices at 712 South Spring street.—Editor's note.

Question: "A" sells a lot on contract. "B" has defaulted in payments for one year. Court orders "B" to pay arrears within sixty days. "B" places balance of purchase price in escrow and demands deed and title certificate. "B" refuses title because part of property is condemned for street widening. "B" demands return of all payments with interest. Is "B" compelled to obey court order? Can "B" demand his money?

Answer: The situation depends on the status of the condemnation proceedings. If these were started after the sale to "B", he should have appeared in the condemnation proceedings, set up his rights and claim his award. The true situation might be set before the court on a motion to correct the judgment. Ordinarily, matters affecting title under contracts of sale are only those matters in existence at time contract was made.

Q.: I purchased property and all details handled through escrow. I have title company certificate in my name and seller's, showing title free and clear of incumbrances. I never received grant deed. Is this necessary?

A.: A buyer should have received a deed after recording. While title is governed by the record, it is advisable to have possession of original document showing chain of title.

Q.: I purchased place and gave trust deed. Holder borrowed from "B" and gave note and trust deed as security and notified me to pay "B". After several years' payments I became delinquent in one payment and "B" told me to pay when possible. Payment was delinquent one month, and when I wanted to pay "B" he refused to take it. Holder will not take it and has borrowed money from "C". Now holder and "C" have foreclosed, demanding all money and will not let anyone accept payments.

A.: Under the circumstances disclosed, you have right to pay whole amount due with charges any time before sale. Unless you can do this, it will be necessary for you to employ an attorney and file an action to enjoin the trustee's sale, setting up the tender of payment you made and your offer to make payments as they accrue under the trust deed.

Passing Years Show the Value of the ARCHITECT

TWO houses, side by side. Both five years old. The first was designed by an Architect. The second built from "free plans." Both about of a size. Though costing about the same, the second looks the cheaper. Looks the older, too. There is a "for sale" sign on it. The sign has been there six months. Desirable neighborhood, too. A month ago there was a "for sale" sign on the first house. It stayed there only a couple of weeks. And the buyer paid the owner a profit. The second house, with its forlorn "for sale" sign has a leaky roof. There are cracks in walls and ceilings. Inadequate foundation, poor trussing and bracing. Stairs creak. Doors stick. Windows rattle. It was skimped in the building—expensive economy. Yet it cost the owner just as much.

Two houses—and five short years—there is the Architect's story.

You pay for an Architect whether you use him or not!

PROJECT IN NORTH HELD HELP HERE

Long Natural Gas Pipe Line Declared Aid to Industrials in Los Angeles

Data on the physical aspects of the pipe line now under construction from oil and gas fields in the southern end of the San Joaquin Valley to San Francisco, which will serve cities in the Bay District with their first natural gas, were revealed locally for the first time yesterday by the Ward Heater Company, gas floor furnace manufacturers of this city.

The project, although not directly affecting the Los Angeles public, is attracting wide attention here through the increase in sales of locally manufactured home-heating appliances in the Northern California sales field, the Ward report stated.

The gas transmission line, scheduled for completion by the latter part of the year, will require an investment of approximately $13,000,000. Its total length, including a twenty-inch branch into San Francisco, and a twenty-inch branch into Oakland and other Bay cities will be 282 miles. Over 18,000,000 cubic feet of holder space and other necessary facilities will be erected at the terminus of the line to augment present equipment of the Pacific Gas and Electric Corporation. The initial capacity will be 65,000,000 cubic feet a day, which, through the installation of additional compression stations, can be increased to 125,000,000 cubic feet a day.

It is expected that the new fuel will effect a saving of between two and three million dollars annually to gas consumers through lower rates which will be established.

PASADENA, May 1. (Exclusive)—Construction of a $100,000 furniture factory building to be erected on Sunnyslope street, Lamanda Park, by Swanson and Peterson, local cabinet-making concern, now located at 920 South Raymond avenue, will be started within two or three weeks, it was learned today.

Plans for a two-story brick and concrete structure measuring 80 by 140 feet have been prepared by Swasey & Hayne, Los Angeles architects. The building will be of fireproof construction throughout and will include the latest mechanical equipment required for the manufacture of fine home and office furniture.

The owners, Swanson & Peterson, while declining to make public the details of their expansion program, assert that their experience here over a period of years has strengthened their belief that Southern California should produce its own furniture to obviate the high transportation costs from eastern manufacturing centers.

With the exception of a marked increase of activity in the San Fernando Valley area, the local realty market remained practically unchanged during the last week, according to the weekly survey made by the Standard Mortgage Company, based on instruments filed as published in the Los Angeles Daily Recorder.

The San Fernando Valley, ranking third in number of transfers, as indicated by deeds filed, with a total of 155 for the last week, showed a gain of twenty-two over the week preceding and an increase of [illegible] over the corresponding week of last year. This was the largest gain shown by any area during the week. The southwest section, with a total of 220 deeds filed, ranked first and showed a gain of three over the week previous. In the Wilshire district, which was second, there were 177 deeds recorded, a slight loss, as compared with the week previous. Hollywood was fourth with 126 deeds recorded, as compared with [illegible] during the preceding week.

EAGLE ROCK ACTIVITY

Second to the San Fernando Valley in point of increased activity was the Eagle Rock district, which showed a gain of seventeen transfers over the week previous. As compared with the same week of last year, however, the Eagle Rock district showed a drop of three. In the West Los Angeles district there was a gain of thirteen deeds as compared with the previous week; in the Hollenbeck Heights district there was a gain of five; and in the central business district an increase of [illegible].

Transfers in the Los Angeles Harbor district remained the same as the week previous, but showed an increase of twenty over last year. In the Venice-Playa del Rey district there was a gain of thirteen over the same week of last year, and the Westlake Park area showed an increase of eight.

Although gains were registered by seven of the fifteen districts in volume of realty financing, the total for the city as a whole was somewhat lower both as compared with the week preceding and with the corresponding week of 1928. Hollywood, which was fourth in number of transfers, was first in new financing with a total for the week of $1,141,271, a loss of slightly under $68,000.

In the Wilshire district, which was second, there were mortgages and trust deeds with a valuation of $1,022,119 recorded; and the southwest district was third with a total for the last week of $565,799. This district showed an increase of slightly more than $65,000 over the week ended May 11, 1928.

Fourth place in volume of realty financing was held by the central business district last week with a total of $561,510, an increase of $71,678 over last year's record. The largest increase for any area in the city in new financing was shown by the West Washington area with a total for the week of $479,317, an increase of $161,257 over the same week of last year.

FINANCING LISTED

In the Eagle Rock district there was an increase in financing of $56,425; in the Venice-Playa del Rey district a gain of $34,121; in the Hollenbeck Heights district a gain of $56,664; and in the Westlake Park section a gain of $100,291.

During the week just closed there were 1249 transfers throughout the city as compared with 1266 during the week immediately preceding. Trust deed filings reached a valuation for all districts of $4,088,429, and there were mortgages filed to the value of $1,567,683, a total of $5,656,112. During the week previous filings of these instruments reached a valuation of $7,052,359, and during the corresponding week of last year the total was $6,356,079. Releases of mortgages totaled 394, and there were 569 reconveyances of trust deeds.

BUSINESS UNITS HOLD EVEN PACE

Commercial Construction Equals Residence

Figures Based on Nine-Year Period Disclosed

Spurt Predicted in Coming Twelve Months

Commercial construction in Los Angeles since 1920 has passed the $500,000,000 mark, keeping unform pace with the $500,000,000 record set by residential construction for the nine-year period.

Residential and commercial construction has been so evenly balanced, the building of homes in almost exact ratio following the construction of manufacturing plants, mercantile establishments, other commercial buildings and the annual increase in population, as to place Los Angeles in a rank by itself.

That commercial construction in Los Angeles during 1929 will show a material increase over 1928 is another highlight of a survey made by Gilbert H. Beesemyer of the Guaranty Building and Loan Association, who based his prediction on building permits issued for the first four months of the present year.

PERMITS COMPARED

For the nine-year period ending with 1928 a total of $519,737,139 was expended in the construction of commercial buildings, 243,742 permits having been issued, as compared with 134,405 residential permits of a valuation of $594,891,689, the Guaranty report shows.

During the nine-year period permits for a combined total of 378,147 residential and commercial buildings, calling for an expenditure of $1,114,628,828, were issued.

Permits for commercial buildings, which include all construction other than residential, for the nine-year period, are given by the Guaranty survey as follows:

	Number.	Value.
1920	15,950	$27,586,666
1921	21,651	35,285,209
1922	28,346	54,201,998
1923	36,763	89,783,229
1924	32,092	71,477,322
1925	29,205	83,857,047
1926	25,798	58,872,005
1927	27,492	58,972,522
1928	26,445	39,701,141
Totals	243,742	$519,737,139

More mercantile buildings, which include department stores, shops and other retail establishments, were constructed during the last four years than in any similar period in Los Angeles history. In 1925 the total mercantile construction was $11,845,718, with $8,041,136 in 1926, followed by $8,483,088 in 1927 and $7,779,024 in 1928, indicating a steady, normal period of development.

INCREASE PREDICTED

That the construction of commercial buildings during 1929 will show a material increase over 1928 is indicated by the fact that 8183 permits, calling for the expenditure of $19,105,223, were issued during the first four months of 1929, as against a $39,701,141 construction program for the full year of 1928, the Guaranty report states.

Commercial-construction figures for the last four months were:

	Permits.	Valuation.
January	1937	$3,285,130
February	1716	5,242,438
March	2342	5,314,643
April	2188	5,263,012
Totals	8183	$19,105,223

With resources exceeding $100,000,000 the Los Angeles building-and-loan associations have taken a major part in keeping residential construction on an even keel with commercial building, the Guaranty survey points out in asserting that Los Angeles is the most evenly balanced city in the United States from a standpoint of construction.

Permits Issued for Dwellings

HUNTINGTON PARK, May 11. (Exclusive)—Construction of four residences was started during the past few days when permits were issued by the city building inspector, A. H. Ginsbach. Oliver H. Wilbur started the construction of one $4500 residence and also a $3500 residence on Santa Ana street. J. J. Nyland is erecting a $3700 residence on Broadway, and F. A. Pierce started the erection of a $3000 dwelling on Hood street.

DEVELOPER ENTERTAINS SALES UNIT

Affair Marks Beginning of Capistrano Beach Summer Campaign

Walles-Smith Company, managers of Capistrano Beach, was host to its selling organization at a banquet held on the 8th inst. in the Mary Louise banquet hall, marking the beginning of the summer selling campaign for the beach city.

More than 300 members of the sales staff with their families were present. James E. Appleby, general sales director of the organization, as toastmaster, introduced Frank Hogan, representing the Doheny interests, who in an address said:

"Southern California is on the threshold of a prodigious absorption of new population, an intense commercial development, and a significant industrial expansion, with the attendant aggressive building of homes, apartments, office buildings, retail establishments and industrial units.

"The potentialities inherent in Southern California are conducive and responsive to growth and expansion. Natural resources, back country and opportunity for expansion, combined with economic and sociological stability and wealth reflect the strong structure of which the Southwest is composed.

"The trend of national business is on a high plane. Plans for a greatly extended period of industrial activity are materializing, which will influence and add to our national wealth and prosperity."

New Highway Along Ocean to Open Soon

June 20 is the date set for the opening of the Roosevelt Coast Highway from Santa Monica northward to Oxnard. The opening of this important traffic artery will augment the advantages of the location of Huntington Palisades, according to L. A. Hardie, sales manager of the Huntington Palisades division of the Santa Monica Land and Water Company.

"Northbound motorists will find the new highway a short cut, and it is estimated that from 6000 to 10,000 cars daily will use Beverly Boulevard and the new route," says Hardie.

"It is understood that the Southern Pacific is to inaugurate a rapid motor-bus service from Huntington Palisades connecting with northbound trains at Oxnard. The inauguration of this system will mean a saving of an hour's time to residents in the West Los Angeles district, as they can leave their homes at the same time as the train leaves the Arcade depot in Los Angeles and take the motor bus connecting with the train at Oxnard."

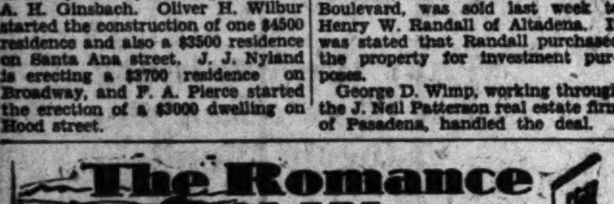
Activity Seen in Subdivision at Alhambra

An active campaign is under way at Edgewood Square, the residential subdivision in South Alhambra, at Valley Boulevard and Fremont street, declared P. L. Cowherd, general manager of the Alhambra, Oak Knoll and Pasadena divisions of the Frank Meline Company. There are twenty-six homes in actual construction, with 100 additional homes completed and occupied, according to Cowherd. He points out that Edgewood Square is the last available property in South Alhambra that is being disposed of at the original subdivision prices. The popularity of Edgewood Square is in a great measure owing to the excellent transportation facilities. Fast railway service over the Pacific Electric, combined with bus service operating at close intervals, makes Edgewood Square of easy access to Los Angeles.

Forty Acres at Glendora Sold

GLENDORA, May 11. (Exclusive) The forty-acre citrus ranch of B. M. Mass, located on East Foothill Boulevard, was sold last week to Henry W. Randall of Altadena. It was stated that Randall purchased the property for investment purposes.

George D. Wimp, working through the J. Neil Patterson real estate firm of Pasadena, handled the deal.



The Romance of the Ranchos

By E. Palmer Conner

(This is the ninth of a series of historical sketches on Southern California Ranchos, written by E. Palmer Conner, Chief Title Searcher of the Title Insurance and Trust Company.)

The Rancho Santa Anita, covered with oaks and on gentle, sloping ground, was situated between Pasadena and Monrovia, and included within its 13,319 acres the cities of Sierra Madre and Arcadia. Its title was founded on a Spanish land grant to Hugo Reid made in 1841, confirmed by the Mexican government in 1845 and by the United States government in 1857.

HAD THREE COUNTRIES

For 20 cents an acre Hugo Reid conveyed the rancho to Henry Dalton, an Englishman by name, a South American by birth and a Californian by adoption, and subsequently it passed to William Wolfskill, whose home in the pueblo of Los Angeles stood on the present site of the Southern Pacific station. Wolfskill sold it in 1872 for $85,000 to H. Newmark & Co. Both Harris Newmark of that firm and Hugo Reid, the first owner of the ranch, have perpetuated their names in history by their excellent historical writings of early Los Angeles. Mr. Newmark's book, "Sixty Years in Southern California," has had a wide circulation.

Three years later, for three times the amount paid by H. Newmark & Co., the rancho was purchased by E. J. Baldwin. Lucky at the mines, lucky in the markets, lucky with horses and luckiest of all with land, it is no wonder they called him "Lucky" Baldwin.

Baldwin, up to this time, was a San Franciscan and had made millions in the Ophir mines in the Comstock-Mother Lode mining district of Nevada. He built the famous Baldwin Hotel, the largest in San Francisco, later destroyed by fire. But the charm of the Rancho Santa Anita soon took Baldwin from his northern home and he moved into the large ranch house, devoting the balance of his life to the development of the rancho and the acquiring of others. Upon his death in 1909 his daughters, Anita M. Baldwin and the late Clara Baldwin Stocker, succeeded him in the ownership of the Rancho Santa Anita.

Baldwin's greatest love was for horses and he developed a breed of racing stock which became world famous. Next to his love for horses Lucky Baldwin loved trees, and he bordered every road within his rancho with trees and jealously fostered and guarded them. The towering lines of eucalyptus trees along Huntington Drive and Santa Anita avenue through the Rancho Santa Anita stand as evidence of the hand of "Lucky" Baldwin—they are his monuments.

Beach City to Install New Light System

HUNTINGTON BEACH, May 11. The Huntington Beach City Council has decided to utilize King Ferronite lighting standards in the construction of the $55,000 lighting system projected to replace the antiquated gas lights now on the main street of this city. General Electric glassware will be used in the construction of the new system. The standards will be furnished by the Western Lighting Company of Los Angeles.

Double-standard lights will be installed from Main and Ocean avenues to Main and Magnolia. Single standards will be utilized from Magnolia to Fourteenth street and beyond that street the double standards will again be used. The double-standard ornamental posts will be installed in a parkway extending along the middle of Main street from Fourteenth street to Mansion avenue above the high school, forming an ornamental entrance to the city from Santa Ana and other inland points. The system will comprise 104 lighting units when completed. Actual installation is expected to start in the near future.

The single standards will be fifteen feet high, while the double posts will reach a height of nineteen feet.

Magnificent Estate
The very finest I have ever had the privilege to offer for sale in the 24 years I have been in the real estate profession. Located on absolutely the choicest knoll in all Beverly Hills, as to view and surrounding estate, it has no equal in Southern California. Its interior appointments are excellent and its exterior contains all the requirements becoming to an estate of this character, such as formal gardens, swimming pool, tennis courts, etc. A conservative valuation of this palatial estate would be approximately $500,000, but we have been fortunate in obtaining a very great reduction in price owing to very unusual circumstances. Principals who can qualify for an estate of this nature may inspect same by calling David Haney, OX. 1145.

CITY'S BUILDING GAIN ANALYZED

Hollywood Section Leading in April Permits

New Dwellings Planned for 1402 More Families

Commercial Construction in Steady Increase

Hollywood took leadership over all other sections of the city in greatest valuation for building permits issued during April, with a total of $1,702,258, according to the monthly classification of building permits published by the California Title Insurance Company and compiled by the J. J. Rees Engineering Company, civil engineers, and surveyors.

The southwest portion of the city was second with permits valued at $1,255,825, while the Wilshire district, with its $1,077,492 in new building, took third place.

MANY HOMES BUILT

Housing facilities for 1402 more families were provided for during April, distributed as follows: 536 new homes, duplexes calculated to house 342 families and multiple family dwellings to take care of 524 households.

The southwest led all other sections of the city in number of new homes with 163, aggregating $433,875, an average cost of $3032 per residence. Second-place honors were evenly divided between a portion of northeasterly Los Angeles and the San Fernando Valley area, with sixty-three homes each, totalling in value $164,100 and $196,360, respectively.

The Westgate-Sawtelle area, however, took first place in point of greatest valuation of permits for new homes, with $643,700 for the forty-nine new one-family dwellings in course of construction in this district. That makes an average cost of $13,137 per home in this section. Permits for eight or nine exceptionally pretentious homes, ranging in price from $27,000 to $100,000, were the reason for the high figures in this district.

The southwest also led in the highest number of permits for new duplexes with forty-five, aggregating $185,000, an average of $4218 per building. But this total valuation figure was exceeded by the Wilshire district, where twenty-six of this type of housing structures are scheduled to cost $226,592, an average expenditure of $8715 for each duplex to be erected.

Leadership in permits issued for new apartment-house buildings was divided. The southwest section led in point of highest number with sixteen, costing in all $188,000, while Hollywood took first place with respect to greatest valuation with $690,000 representing the cost to construct the ten new multiple dwelling structures, permits for which were issued last month.

STORE PERMITS HIGH

Permits for ten new store buildings, some of which also provided housing facilities, were issued in the Hollywood district. These new buildings were scheduled to reach a total cost of $395,300 and give Hollywood first place over the balance of the city in this respect. The east side, however, led all other sections in highest valuation of this type of building and that, by reason of one permit only, the new $500,000 store building which is to be erected for Sears, Roebuck & Co. at 2652 East Ninth street.

The San Fernando Valley area witnessed the inception last month of twenty-eight new buildings housing industry, representing an outlay of some $119,450. This total valuation, however, was exceeded by the southwest with twelve new industrial structures aggregating $197,950 in cost.

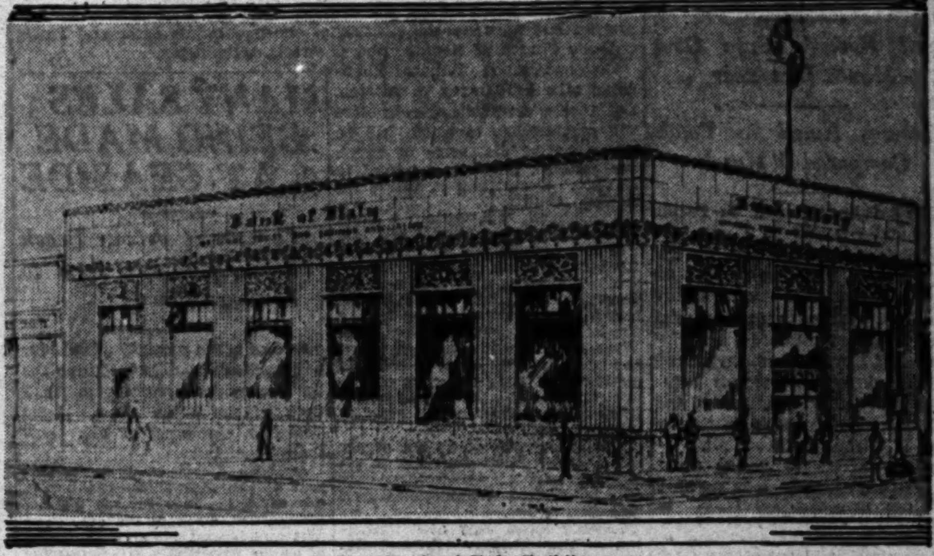
ARCHITECT COMPLETES PLANS FOR BANK

Santa Monica Structure to Be Erected at Once



New Bank of Italy Building

A BUILDING for the Santa Monica branch of the Bank of Italy National Trust and Savings Association is to be erected immediately on the southwest corner of Santa Monica Boulevard and Third street, Santa Monica. Plans for the structure have been drawn by Krempel & Erkes, architects and engineers, who also will supervise construction. Their offices are located at 415 Bank of Italy Building, Los Angeles.

Plans call for full basement, first floor and part mezzanine. The basement is to be equipped to contain record vaults, supply rooms, lavatories, mechanical equipment for heating and ventilating the building, as well as a sidewalk elevator. The mezzanine is to contain work space, lavatories and rest rooms for employees, and a large directors' room. The main banking room is to contain large coin and safe deposit vaults, conference rooms, and the latest of cageless low-type banking fixtures.

Both the interior and the exterior of the building are to be of modern design. The building is to cost approximately $100,000. Bids are to be opened this week and work will be started within the next two weeks.

LANDLORD RIGHTS LIMITED

Owners of Properties Must Go Through Many Legal Formalities to Regain Possession

BY N. B. NELSON
Member of the Los Angeles Bar

In the absence of an express provision in the lease granting him that right, a landlord has no right to re-enter and repossess himself of the premises where there has been a breach of any of the conditions of the lease, such as the nonpayment of rent. In order to entitle the landlord to re-enter the premises and dispossess the tenant, the stipulation in the lease must be in most positive language and must contain a positive consent on the part of the tenant allowing the landlord such right.

The fact that a lease contains a provision that in case the rent is not paid, it shall be lawful for the lessor, without previous notice or demand to re-enter the demised premises and retake possession thereof, does not confer such right of entry upon the landlord. The reason for the foregoing rule is that the exercise of such right is very apt to lead to oppression, brawls, affrays and breaches of the peace. If the landlord does re-enter without the consent of the tenant, and takes possession of the leased premises during the temporary absence of the tenant, he is then liable for damages in an action of forcible entry and detainer. This is true even though the tenant is considerably in arrears in his rent.

Where a tenant is in default as to the payment of rent, or the performance of the other provisions of the lease, and the landlord wishes to dispossess such tenant because of such breach, he must first serve the tenant with the statutory notice. If the default consists of a failure or refusal to pay rent, the landlord must serve the tenant with a three-day notice demanding that he pay rent or surrender the premises within three days. If the breach complained of consists of the failure or neglect to perform other conditions of the lease, the landlord must serve a notice requiring the tenant to perform the conditions of such lease within three days. Where the default consists of a failure to pay rent, the notice must contain a statement of the amount due. Such notice can only be given for the rent actually due by terms of the lease, and after it is actually due and not before.

If the tenant fails to pay the rent due or perform the conditions of the lease within three days after the service of such notice the landlord, if he desires possession, must then file an action of unlawful detainer in the proper court. The proper court is determined by the amount of the monthly rental and also by the amount of the damages claimed. In such action the tenant must answer the summons within three days. If he does not a judgment by default may be entered against him. If he answers, then the plaintiff may have the case set down for an early hearing, as such actions have a preferred right over general civil actions as to an early trial. The court in such action may award the landlord judgment for restitution and for three times the amount of the rents due. When a tenant is in arrears in his rent then the landlord is not obliged to resort to an action of unlawful detainer, but he may file the ordinary civil action for money due and garnishee the tenant's wages, or attach any property belonging to such tenant which is not exempt from execution.

Except in the case of furnished apartment-houses, hotels, inns, boarding or lodging houses, a landlord does not have any lien upon the personal property of the tenant. The fact a tenant may be considerably in arrears in his rent does not give a landlord any right to hold the furniture of such tenant, nor prevent the tenant from removing the same from the premises. The reason for such rule is that the necessary household furniture, furnishings and personal belongings of the debtor are exempt from attachment or execution. In some States the statutes expressly confer upon the landlord a right of lien, but such right is not given to the landlord in this State except to persons renting furnished apartments, or to hotel, inn, or lodging house keepers. In the case of apartment-house, hotel, inn, or lodging house keepers, the law gives them a lien upon the baggage or other property belonging to their tenants or guests for the rents due. Unless such lien is discharged by the payment within sixty days from the time the rent became due, the landlord may sell the same at public auction upon giving notice by publication and also by mailing the tenant a notice thereof.

The work now in hand will be completed within a month.

BANK LOANS ON REALTY SHOW GAIN

Survey Discloses National Institution Loans Treble in Last Seven Years

National banks of the United States have increased their loans based upon real estate by approximately 360 per cent in the last seven years.

This is revealed by an examination of the newest official government data made by Greenebaum Sons Investment Company. More than 7000 members of the national banking system had loans totaling approximately $1,289,900,000 secured by real estate in 1928, it is found. By comparison with the previous year this is a gain of $227,400,000, or more than 20 per cent.

The extent to which the national banks have expanded their realty loans since 1921 appears from the following table:

Year.	Real estate loans.
1921	$ 280,100,000

William Hertrich and T. U. Barber were the judges. Among winners were J. M. Elliott, Los Angeles banker; W. H. Holloway, La Habra Heights, and Mrs. K. K. Keifer.

Apartments to Formally Open

Wednesday evening, the 15th inst., has been set for the formal opening of the Fenmore apartments, new four-story structure built at a cost of $300,000 at the southwest corner of Van Ness avenue and Harold Way, according to announcement yesterday by Louis M. Halper, president of the Pacific States Realty Improvement Company, Ltd.

The building is of modernistic architecture and Class C construction. It was designed by Architect C. Waldo Powers. There are seventy apartments in the structure, divided into singles, doubles and bachelors, each equipped with electrical refrigeration.

TOWER STEEL PURCHASED

Edison Company Places Order for 2000 Tons of Material for Use in Expansion Program

A contract for the fabrication ol almost 2000 tons of western steels for transmission line towers has been made by the Southern California Edison Company with the Emsco Derrick and Equipment Company of Los Angeles, according to the announcement yesterday of E. F. Watkins, purchasing agent of the Southern California Edison Company. The Columbia Steel Corporation of Torrance will furnish the steel, and the bolt mill of the Southern California Iron and Steel Company at Huntington Park will supply 100 tons of galvanized steel bolts for the fabrication of these structures.

The Edison company has begun construction of a new 220,000-volt transmission line and a new major substation of 200,000-horsepower capacity between Torrance and Redondo Beach, as a part of its system program for the expansion of its primary distribution center facilities throughout Southern California. Approximately $1,000,000 will be spent for the construction of the new station and the transmission line, with auxiliary facilities to make the new service available immediately to the secondary distribution points. An appropriation of $575,000 has been made for the substation building and $370,431 for the double-circuit transmission line. The towers to be built by the Emsco company, will be used in the construction of eleven miles of transmission line from a 220,000-volt substation at Lighthipe to the new station. This new distribution center has been designated as La Fresa substation.

The contract, totaling $250,000, marks a new departure for the Emsco company, which heretofore has confined the work in its twenty-acre plant in the Vernon district to manufacture of its own materials for its own business. It also marks the bringing of the Southern California Edison Company's tower-construction business to Los Angeles. Transmission-line towers formerly were manufactured for the company in San Francisco. ter has been designated as La Fresa and the Atlantic Seaboard.

According to Mr. Watkins, many thousands of tons of steel will move from local mills as a result of the stimlus given by the present order. Engineers and metallurgists of the Columbia Steel Corporation have found it worth while to develop the grade of steel required for the Edison order, placing them in the position where they an supply the requirements of the Emsco company for oil derrick structures in both their local and Texas plants. Formerly, the Texas mill had been supplied from the East.

Manufacturing facilities at the Emsco plant, where between 600 and 1000 men are employed regularly in day-and-night operating shifts, have been expanded to complete the contract for about 100 Edison company towers in sixty days. Almost 200 men will be kept busy on this contract alone, adding more than $30,000 to the Emsco pay roll for the two months.

The new La Fresa substation will be the ninth major high-voltage distributing center on the "backbone" of the Edison company's transmission system which connects the Edison hydroelectric developments in the Big Creek-San Joaquin River area of Central California and the company's steam-generating plants at Long Beach. The new station is the first instance of construction of a primary distribution point away from the general north and south line of the high-voltage system.

SURVEY SHOWS COAST BUILDING

Activity Declared Greatest in Fifteen Months

April Records Gain Over Month Last Year

Increases Noted in Totals Compared to March

The building industry in Pacific Coast cities is now on a more active basis than it has been for fifteen months. Building permits issued in 106 cities of this area during April reached a greater total than has been attained since November of 1927, as shown by official building department reports tabulated in the May 1 bulletin of the National Monthly Building Survey of S. W. Straus & Co.

During April, 106 Pacific Coast cities issued 11,895 permits for new buildings involving $42,417,915 in construction costs. This is 17 per cent greater than the April total of last year and is 11 per cent greater than for March of this year. The March total is customarily the largest in the year. Of the 106 cities reporting fifty-four show increases over March and fifty-eight show increases over last April.

LOS ANGELES GAINS

Los Angeles reports a 13 per cent increase over last year's comparable figures with an April total of 2940 permits issued for new buildings to cost $9,843,782, although this figure is 10 per cent below the March total.

Seattle again holds second place on the Pacific Coast list with 763 permits for $4,604,090 in new construction issued during April. This is 32 per cent above last April's total and 3 per cent below that of March.

San Francisco issued 656 April permits for new buildings to cost $2,816,146, 4 per cent more than in March but 23 per cent less than the total for last April.

LONG BEACH FIGURES

Long Beach, reporting 523 permits for $2,025,165 of new construction issued during April, shows a 48 per cent reduction from the March figure but a 41 per cent increase over last April's total.

Oakland shows a 30 per cent gain over last year's record with an April total of 395 permits for $1,935,831 in new building, and this is 2 per cent above the March figure.

Salt Lake City reports a 181 per cent increase over last year's comparable figure and 22 per cent over that of March, issuing 134 April permits for $940,465 of new construction.

PERMITS DOUBLED

Beverly Hills shows a 114 per cent gain over last year with an April report of 127 permits for $766,400 of new buildings, although this is 33 per cent below the March figure.

Glendale, issuing 127 April permits for buildings to cost $726,230, reports an 11 per cent gain over March but a 7 per cent reduction from April of last year.

San Diego's April total, 404 permits for buildings to cost $719,406, is 19 per cent below the March figure and 21 per cent below that of last April.

Pasadena, issuing $680,623 in April permits, made a slight gain over both previous comparable periods.

In Arizona, Phoenix issued $436,482 in April building permits, a 76 per cent gain over last April, while Tucson, issuing $648,534 for the same period, gained 216 per cent.

Permits Hold Upward Trend at Long Beach

LONG BEACH, May 11. (Exclusive)—Construction records continue to tumble as building permit figures for 1929 top all past totals. The first six business days of May saw permits totaling $1,090,480 issued, more than for all of May last year.

Two large permits were issued during the week, the Wise company a $50,000 permit and the $200,000 Professional Building permit. Although excavation is almost complete for the Barker Brothers building, the $250,000 permit has not been issued as yet.

Permits for the year including the first week in May total $9,916,910, which exceeds by more than $1,250,000 the total figure for the year 1926.

The highest May figure in city history, $2,027,373, in 1924, should be exceeded by a considerable total this month, city officials declare.

Los Angeles real estate brokers are to compete with members of the San Francisco Realty Board in the annual tournament of the Los Angeles and Bay City boards at Del Monte the 17th, 18th and 19th inst.

Los Angeles delegation consisting of fifty members of the local board will leave for the north Thursday evening, returning Sunday night. A number of prizes, in addition to those regularly awarded, have been offered by members of the Los Angeles board. Arrangements for the tourney are in charge of Frank Greve, E. A. Christy, John J. Garland, Clarence Bean, E. C. Woodward, W. E. Dimmick and James J. Donahue.

CITY COUNCIL AWARDS CONTRACT FOR PAVING

At a meeting of the City Council of Culver City held last week, bids were opened for the improvement of Bledsoe avenue in the Albright City tract between Washington and Venice boulevards. The contract was awarded on a bid of $108,280 and includes the construction of 290,000 square feet of asphalt pavement of the nonskid type, with curbs, walks and sanitary sewers.

CONTRACT FOR CHURCH LET

Wilmington Catholic Congregation to Expend $110,000 for Edifice With Furnishings

Contract was awarded the Wurster Construction Company of Los Angeles last week for the erection of the new Saints Peter and Paul's Catholic Church at Neptune and G streets, Wilmington.

Designed along Italian-Romanesque stile by Murray & Newton, Los Angeles architects, the structure will cost $85,100, to which will be added furnishings, some of which are donated, bringing the total to $110,000. Completion is called for in five months.

The church will contain a main auditorium seating 800 persons, and two side chapels seating fifty each, for weddings and special services.

The church is fully financed, the largest contribution being $60,000 left for the purpose in the will of the late Mrs. Dolores Dominguez de Watson. A recent campaign raised the other $50,000. Some of this will go toward a pastor's home, due to contributions of a pipe organ by the heirs of Mrs. Watson and gifts by other donors.

The edifice will occupy one corner of an entire block owned by it, on another part of which ultimately will be erected Wilmington's first parochial school.

Already under way at Wilmington is the Calvary Presbyterian Church, at the southeast corner of Marine and L streets, to be completed late in the summer by H. C. Mead at a cost of $85,000. It will seat 700. The edifice takes the place of the former church at G and Fries street, burned last December.

Other harbor district building includes a thirty-one-room hotel for J. M. McLeod at 380 Ninth street, San Pedro, at a cost of $20,000, and contemplated construction of a $75,000 drive-in market at Fourth and Pacific avenue, San Pedro, for A. Rosenfeld.

MANY HOMES BUILDING IN CLAREMONT

Great Activity Shown in Construction of Dwellings During April

CLAREMONT, May 4. (Exclusive)—Claremont's building permits for the month of April exceeded those of the same month in 1928 by $8095. The total permits for April this year amounted to $21,845, while last year April showed a total of $13,750. The total to date this year is $587,522, as compared to $266,802 last year for the same period.

April's permits provide for construction on five new residences for C. White, $4900; C. F. Lawrence, $6300; P. J. McQuiston, $165; Bryn Mawyr Tract, $5150, and C. T. and L. S. Stover, $5550. Miscellaneous permits amounted to $295.

Several residences being built here by C. T. and L. S. Stover and Dwight S. Hamilton, local contractors, are nearing completion. Dwight S. Hamilton is completing two homes on West Eighth street, one of which has been sold to Prof. Henry Cook of Pomona College. Both are $6000 homes of the seven-room dwelling type of English design.

C. T. and L. Stover have started construction on one $6000 residence and another for $5200. They also have two other houses in course of construction, one for Clarence White, costing $4000, and the other for Clifford Pitzer, costing $5000.

Work is also progressing rapidly on the new $200,000 women's dormitory and $150,000 recitation hall for Scripps College, and the first two units of the $1,000,000 Pomona College men's dormitory. The Scripps buildings are being built by the Wurster Construction Company and the Pomona building by J. S. Metzger & Son.

Bank Building in Hollywood Holds Record

Rental records have been set by the new limit-height Bank of Hollywood Building which will be formally opened the 18th inst. The new skyscraper is more than 65 per cent rented ahead of completion.

That Hollywood is rapidly developing as the major center of business activities outside of metropolitan Los Angeles, is indicated by the fact that 70 per cent of the tenants in the new structure are from outside of Hollywood, the majority of renters originating in downtown Los Angeles, it was stated.

The Guaranty Building during the last five years has held the office building record of Los Angeles in percentage of space rented.

Lease Taken; Improvement Will Be Made

Rollins Jones, business property broker, announces the consummation of a ninety-nine-year lease with the Hollywood Casket Company on property fronting 100 feet on Mansfield avenue and running through the block 294 feet to Orange Drive. The company plans to improve this property at an early date.

The lessor, Mrs. Anna C. Alexander, bought this property in October, 1922, for $12,600, and under the terms of the ninety-nine-year lease the property is showing a net income on approximately $50,000.

Jones represented both lessee and lessor in this transaction.

Studio City Bridge Plans Get Approval

Plans and specifications for two bridges on Vineland avenue in the Studio City area have been approved by the Board of Public Works and bids will be opened on Wednesday.

The structures will be 222 feet long, of the steel trestle, pony type and will span the Los Angeles River and Tujunga wash. Cost is placed at $70,000.

MANY SALES BEING MADE AT SEASIDE

Scarcity of Private Beach Property Causes Rush to Southern Tract

Sale of beach property at Del Mar has reached a high peak during the last few weeks, according to Hugh Cook of the South Coast Land Company, developers of this seashore community.

Analysis of sales made so far this year at Del Mar show that buyers are divided into several distinct groups, Mr. Cook points out. The first and largest group is composed of people who realize the increasing scarcity of private beach property available along the south coast and are acquiring beach sites for themselves so they will not have to use the overcrowded public beaches, according to Mr. Cook.

"The second group is composed of old-time residents of Los Angeles, Pasadena, San Diego and other parts of Southern California—people who have visited Del Mar many times and have known of its attractive features. The majority of them have bought at Del Mar to enjoy the sports and recreation offered over week-ends and for country estates," Mr. Cook explained, "while the third group includes tourists who have decided to locate in Southern California and have selected Del Mar as the place for their permanent home."

HOTEL WILL BE BUILT AT SALTON SEA

Duluth Capitalist Plans to Improve Desert Property for Winter Resort

INDIO, May 11. (Exclusive)—A development of importance to the Coachella Valley is being planned by George H. Crosby, Duluth (Minn.) iron man, who owns considerable beach frontage and the Travertine Rock, which overlooks the Salton Sea and most of the valley.

Mr. and Mrs. Crosby have been in the valley for some weeks superintending the planting of palms and trees, building of roads and sinking a well, which recently was brought in with a large flow of water.

Mr. Crosby's plans include a large hotel, business section and winter homes perched upon the rocks above the sea. The buildings will be of uniform architecture, probably Mediterranean. The development will be started next fall when Mr. Crosby will begin construction of his own home on the property. Several others have expressed the intention of completing homes for next season.

Travertine Rock, or Coral Point, has a view of almost the entire length of Salton Sea and over the Coachella Valley to San Jacinto and San Gorgonio Mountains, with the Santa Rosa range on one side and the Chocolate Mountains on the other.

Pierpont Bay Construction Remains Active

Building activity continues unabated at Pierpont Bay, according to Donal M. Welch, general manager for the Frank Meline Company, owners of the project. Construction on a ten-unit apartment-house, to cost $18,000, was started last week. It is being built by Frederick S. Sibley, president of the Bradstreet Company, on two business sites which he purchased recently. The structure will be of Spanish design.

Construction of a multiple business and apartment-house to cost $20,000 was also started on the ocean front last week. Eight new homes are being constructed, ranging in price from $4500 to $30,000, stated Welch. Plans have been completed for the calling of bids for the 12th inst. for the completion of the bulkhead and ocean-front walk at Pierpoint Bay, which will be extended a mile farther along the water's edge.

Equity Ruling Adopted by Realty Board

Looking toward the elimination of the practice of accepting equities in contracts as part payment of other properties, the Los Angeles Realty Board last week adopted a rule of conduct for its members governing such actions.

The conditions under which such equities may be accepted stipulate that when they are taken as part payment complete payment of the contract is assumed and that the contract shall be carried out by the company accepting it in accordance with the terms set forth in it, President Mason Case stated in reporting the action of the governing body of the realty board.

The resolution adopted also carries a warning that any member who accepts such equities and fails to carry out the terms of the contract shall be subject to disciplinary action.

HEADQUARTERS ERECTED

LONG BEACH, May 11. (Exclusive)—Construction of headquarters building for the Clinton company, general contractor for the erection of the Ford Motor assembly plant in the Los Angeles-Long Beach Harbor, has been erected and work on the plant will be started next week, it is announced.

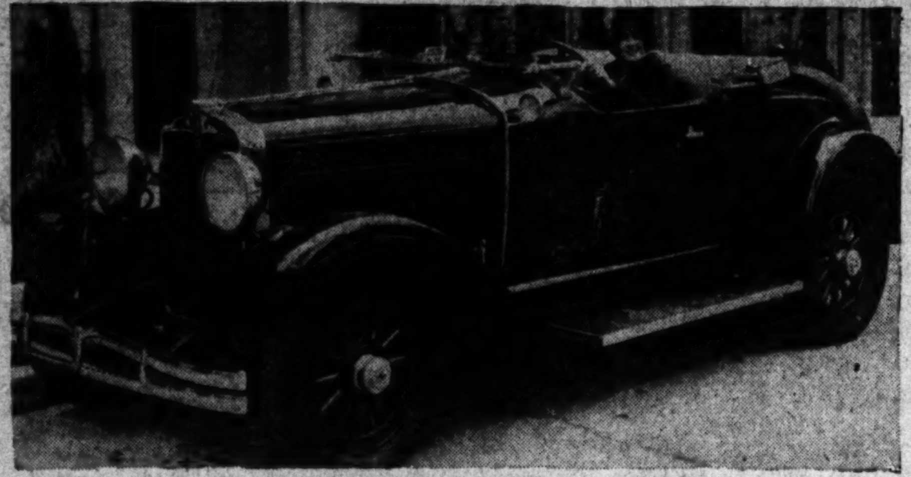
Southern California Offers Variety of Vacation Trips

THE CALL OF THE OPEN ROAD

SUMMER LAKES SUCH AS THESE.

OR IN THE HIGH SIERRAS AS HERE.



AND A CAR SUCH AS THIS HUPMOBILE.—THAT'S VACATION TIME

VACATION TIME COMING

Season of Automobile Trips in Full Swing as Mountain and Beach Offer Summer Lures

Some few of the earlier motorists are already out converting gasoline into monoxide and other gases on the annual vacation trail but for the majority the turning of the calendar from May to June three weeks hence will open the vacation season. And to a majority of Southern California folks this means an automobile trip of some length is in the offing.

Maybe a tent, roll of bedding, folding stove, maps and other accoutrements of the camper will furnish the equipment. Maybe just the car with a resort or several to furnish shelter of nights will be the program.

The car must be prepared for the trip, funds allotted, then comes the most important item—where shall the vacation trip find its objective?

The pictures in the layout above this story illustrate but a minority of the lures Southern California offers to the vacation motorist. There is one of Big Bear, another at Lake Arrowhead, the one with the snowy mountains in the background was taken in the high Sierras.

Southern California offers probably the widest choice for vacations of any section of the country. Starting where the State does—the Pacific Ocean—there are the beaches that annually are crowded with vacationists. From Coronado Beach just above the Mexican border to Pebble Beach near Monterey the

Former Manager Here Returns on Quick Visit

L. V. Starr, vice-president of United Chronium, Inc., New York City, former vice-president and general manager of J. W. Leavitt & Co., visited Los Angeles this week. It was his first trip here since he went East several months ago to take over his new duties.

Oldfield and McAdoo in Visit

William Gibbs McAdoo, former Secretary of the Treasury, and Barney Oldfield, veteran automobile ace, were among prominent aviation enthusiasts who inspected the Bach Aircraft plant yesterday.

Oldfield, who is learning to fly, is dickering with the Bach people for a standard Bach air yacht.

Safety Device Lessens Danger in Hill Climbs

Backing of automobiles out of control while on steep grades will be eliminated by the use of an automatic safety device perfected recently by Lawrence Zamboni of Pasadena.

The device, according to Chester A. Nickum, one of a group who have for several years been interested in developing automatic braking devices, is different from any other braking system. It is a device which prevents the driveshaft of a vehicle from moving in one direction while permitting free movement in the opposite direction. When a car stops on any up-grade the device becomes instantly operative, holding the car firmly. The gearshift lever can be changed into any forward position while the car is being held, without the slightest danger of any backward movement. Starts can be made without the usual handling of either foot or hand brakes.

Australia to Make Change

After years of use of the left-hand side of street for traffic, Australia has decided to follow the United States and adopt the right-hand side, according to reports to the Automobile Club of Southern California. The change will involve an expenditure of $2,100,000, since the government will have to change thousands of signals.

AVIATION INVESTMENT HERE $500,000,000

Magnitude of Industry Revealed by Survey of Factories and Allied Lines in South

BY AL PARMENTER

A survey of the aviation industry on the Pacific Coast indicates that the gigantic bird, Aviation, has made Southern California one of its favorite habitats.

Compilation of figures up to the first of the year on factories, airports, equipment, buildings and machinery forms a basis for the estimate of $500,000,000 as the investment in the aviation industry in California. This figure is the estimate of Capt. Walter F. Parkin of the aviation branch of the Department of Commerce.

In the State there are being operated 1200 ships, exclusive of those owned by the government. These army and navy craft furnish from 250 to 400 more ships for the grand total. There are pilots of the various grades numbering 1600, 1200 of them government licensed.

These figures represent State totals and of each Southern California furnishes about three-fourths of the total. No other Coast State has reached near the magnitude of air development attained in California, so it becomes at once apparent that Southern California is the center of the industry on the Pacific Coast and is a leader of any like area in the world.

MOST NEAR CITY

Los Angeles county has within its boundaries (mostly within a short radius of the city) the majority of the factories, airports, operating companies and other branches of the business that make up the Southern California total. The chief exceptions are the army activities and properties at March Field, Riverside, and the navy base at San Diego.

Among factories located in Los Angeles county are Douglas Aircraft Company, Lockheed, Kinner, Bach, Kruetser, Maximum Safety, Moreland and Emsco.

Of these the largest and nationally most prominent is the Douglas. In this factory were made the ships with which army flyers made the first successful flight around the world. Army and navy planes have been almost the sole product at this plant, although it is now entering production of commercial craft.

AIRPORTS NUMEROUS

Airports, their number and quality, determine the progress of any section in aviation. California has probably 300 of these if all the sand-lot variety are counted, but eliminating these, there is a dividing line segregating first-class airports out of which planes are daily operating. Within this classification there are 120 airports. In Los Angeles county there are forty-eight first-class airports.

Foremost among the privately owned airports are Vail Field, out of which the Western Air Express operates, and Grand Central in Glendale. Vail is a 300-acre field with hangar space and shops which care for the thirty-two planes of the company. The Grand Central was sold last week for $2,000,000.

Mines Field, the newly acquired Los Angeles municipal airport, is now in operation. Griffith Park Field is also municipally operated and houses the National Guard unit. Another is the municipal airport at Los Angeles Harbor used chiefly by navy flyers.

Each of the larger operating companies identifies itself with an airport.

WIDENING OF BOULEVARD COMPLETED

Celebration Planned to Open Foothill Highway After Improvement

MONROVIA, May 11. (Exclusive) Last concrete in the improvement of Foothill Boulevard between Mayflower avenue and Canyon Boulevard was poured this week, and J. E. Haddock, contractor, announced that the new highway would be ready for formal opening in not more than three weeks.

Contract for the paving and installation of a new ornamental lighting system amounts to $120,608 and is being completed only two weeks after the four months allowed by the terms of the contract. An extension of thirty days was granted due to the bad weather and other delays.

The boulevard has been widened to sixty-two feet between curbs, eighty-two feet including sidewalks. It will be a four-panel drive giving a greater degree of safety.

It is planned by the United Foothill Boulevard Association to open the new highway with a brilliant celebration, although date for the opening has not yet been set.

Rules Given to Prevent Forest Fires

The motoring public is to be watched with special vigilance in the mountain regions this summer, it is indicated in reports coming to the Automobile Club of Southern California, since many of the most serious summer forest fires are traced to the carlessness of motorists.

The forest rangers commend to the especial attention of all drivers the following fire-prevention laws:

"In building camp fires clear a wide space in the timber and make the fire in its center.

"Never leave camp fires unattended, and when breaking camp be sure to first put out with water and then cover with earth.

"Always extinguish cigarette, cigar and pipe ashes. These are deadly sources of forest fires. Never throw them out of car while burning.

"Always put out matches before casting them aside. Don't fail."

CONFERENCE TO DISCUSS SAFETY

Pacific Coast Conference Scheduled Here

Sessions Will Be Conducted at Alexandria Hotel

Industrial First Aid Meet Will Assemble

Safety in all its various phases will be the prime matter of consideration in the sixth annual Pacific Coast Safety Conference to be held Wednesday, Thursday and Friday at the Alexandria. Combined with this conference will be the seventh annual California industrial first-aid meet, both being conducted under the auspices of the California Safety Society.

Automotive safety problems will be a major subject for consideration, with Thursday afternoon, May 16, being devoted entirely to discussion of traffic hazards and their prevention.

Chairman E. B. Lefferts, manager of the public-safety department of the Automobile Club of Southern California, will open this meeting by outlining the general subject of automotive transportation. The first speaker to be introduced by the chairman will be Edward D. Lyman, president of the Automobile Club, who will address the meeting on the subject of "Broad Aspects of Transportation Safety."

STATE LAWS DISCUSSED

"Recent changes in the California Vehicle Act" will be considered at this conference by J. Allen Davis, associate counsel, Automobile Club of Southern California. E. E. East, chief engineer of the motoring organization, will speak on "Building Safety Into the Highways."

Other speakers on this automotive safety program include P. Ducker, superintendent of transportation, Southern California Edison Company, who will talk on "Why Safety?"

"Selection and Training of Drivers" will be discussed by F. P. Howell, general manager of the Motor Transit Company, and E. C. Wood, superintendent of transportation, Pacific Gas and Electric Corporation, will speak on "Accident Prevention in San Francisco Bay Region." Discussion by the assembly will follow each of these addresses. It is expected that this transportation and industrial safety conference of executives of the Pacific Coast will bring to light various new, constructive ideas on accident prevention which will be of value to all of the various organizations and sections of the Coast represented.

Industrial problems in the matter of safety to employees will be considered during three special conferences. On Thursday morning, May 16, construction and maintenance, accident causes and prevention will be dicussed. Dangers of scaffolds, falling objects and personal falls, and trenches and other excavations will be various subjects studied. On Friday morning safe handling of materials will be the matter of consideration, with special emphasis being given to the problems of heavy machinery and other heavy objects, sprains and strains, and inflammable materials, acids and caustics. Friday afternoon will be devoted to the subject of safety organization and administration.

FIRST-AID MEET

Highlights of the California industrial first-aid meet to be held in the State Armory in Exposition Park on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, the 15th and 16th inst., will be the exhibitions of skill and proper handling of patients in the first-aid contests.

The final meeting will be held following a banquet on Friday evening with R. M. Wood, master of ceremonies and president of the Los Angeles chapter of the California Safety Society, presiding. "What is Your Stalling Speed?" will be the subject of an address by C. A. Gummere, special representative, Herbert Woodward, Inc., Reo distributors. Following this will be the presentation of prizes to winners of the first-aid contest by E. W. Bullard, contest director.

Improvements Declared Interesting to Motorists

Recently Completed Projects Shown

Miss Wilma German inspects Highland avenue double drive, shown at top, and subway beneath Beverly Boulevard at Sawtelle Soldiers' Home. The trip was made in a Graham-Paige Model 615 car.

HIGHWAY PROJECTS VISITED

Driver Inspects Center Parkway, Also Subway Built Recently at Soldiers' Home in Sawtelle

Two highway improvements recently completed are declared to be attracting more than ordinary attention among motorists. One is the repavement of Highland avenue north of Wilshire Boulevard and the inclusion of a parkway. The other is the subway crossing of Wilshire Boulevard on the grounds of the Soldiers' Home at Sawtelle.

Miss Wilma German recently drove one of the new Graham-Paige Model 615 coupes to Highland avenue on a tour of inspection. An observing group of neighborhood residents surrounded the car and there was a liberal airing of views.

OBJECTIONS VOICED

"Putting that parkway in the middle of this street was a piece of foolishness," asserted one property owner. "In these days all available street surface is needed for street purposes. We can have all the shrubbery and flowers we want in our yards. What we need is more room on the streets."

Another interjected: "If they declare each side of Highland a one-way street I'll have to travel two extra blocks to get to Wilshire. And if each side of the street is not reserved for one-way traffic, it's going to be dangerous."

At the Soldiers' Home, where Miss German drove in a new Graham-Paige Model 615 roadster, just received from the factory, she learned there is complete accord over the subject of the subway crossing. Residents at the home were unanimous in declaring the improvement a big benefit, some of the more enthusiastic proclaiming it to be a "Godsend."

CAUTION STILL REQUIRED

Unlike many of the school subways in Los Angeles, the one at the Soldiers' Home is used by all. It was not learned whether orders on the subject have been issued but it was observed that not a pedestrian crossed on the surface. Motorists, also will appreciate the subway but they are not relieved from the necessity for careful driving and obedience to speed regulations when on home property.

The coupe and roadster models are the latest additions to the Graham-Paige line. Although they have been in production for some time, the first shipment was not received in Los Angeles until a few days ago. According to figures received by James M. Sterling, general manager for the Graham-Paige Company of Southern California, factory production in April totaled 11,550 cars, breaking all previous records for a single month. During the first four months of the year, the factories produced 36,834 cars and the orders on hand for shipment the 1st inst. were 13,500. In April, 230 new dealers were appointed bringing the total number in the United States to 2329.

ALL-YEAR HIGHWAY IN GOOD CONDITION

The all-year highway from Merced to Yosemite Valley is in very good condition, although gravel has been placed on it near Mariposa and careful driving is recommended over the freshly graveled portions. Oiling is in progress on short stretches between the Merced county line and Mariposa, necessitating slight delays, according to information received by the Automobile Club of Southern California.

TRUCKEE-LAKE ROAD OPEN

The road from Truckee to Lake Tahoe alongside the lake is open and reported in fair condition, according to advices coming to the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Services Unite in Betterment of Colby Pass

WOODLAKE, May 11. (Exchange) Colby Pass, a connecting link between the Kaweah and the Kern River watersheds in Northeastern Tulare county, is to be made more accessible during the coming summer, through mutual agreement between the Sequoia Forest Service, the Sequoia National Park Servire and packers of this region.

The Sequoia Forest Service will spend $300 on the forest side of the range, the park service will build to meet the construction on their side, while the packers pledged $300 to be spent on the forest side and agreed to pack in all supplies needed for the work, free.

Work done this year will make the trail passable, but the three organizations will continue improvements from year to year until a first-class trail is constructed.

HOOVER EXPORT AID SOLICITED

pany. This was the third visit of such a group. The Fiat people are keeping secret their plans with regard to any possible American affiliation.

A summary of the development of the export trade may be conveyed in the statement that American shipments of automobiles and kindred products in the last six years have increased 400 per cent.

Last year the total was $552,097,974, a gain of 29 per cent over 1927. The number of cars involved in this international trade of which the United States was the source was 368,328. This was 416 per cent more than shipments in 1922.

SHIP TO 107 NATIONS

According to figures given out by Alfred Reeves, general manager of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, American cars are now being shipped from Detroit to 107 countries. Mr. Reeves in large measure credits record-breaking production by America's factories in the first three months of this year to increased demand from foreign lands. The market abroad, he asserts, is now absorbing 18 per cent of the entire output of the American industry, which this year is certain to reach 5,000,000 cars, at least.

Mr. Reeves scouted a theory that growth of the motor industry must be at the expense of certain companies losing out in the fight for a limited market. He said that the belief of manufacturers was that the opportunity now is world-wide with the makers of this and other countries working together for broader markets in all lands.

SHIPPING FIGURES

How added export affects large producers is demonstrated by Hudson figures of this week, showing that in January, February, March and April 27,071 Hudson and Essex cars were shipped abroad, the total being a gain of 28 per cent over 31,314 cars shipped in the same period of 1928. Officials estimate that 70,000 cars will be required for foreign shipment this year.

The plant of Hudson's British subsidiary at London is now said to be producing 1000 cars a month. An assembly plant at Berlin recently turned out its six-thousandth car in two years. In the future a new plant at Brussels is to serve Europe, except England and Germany. It will have a capacity of 15,000 cars a year.

Willys-Overland reports an increase of 72 per cent in export business the first three months this year. Shipments to foreign markets reached 12,676 cars in that period.

VOLUME INCREASED

In April the automobile factories of the Detroit district swept on toward still greater volume production than in March. Ford led with total output of model A cars at 190,288, compared with 181,804 in March. The number of model A Fords produced since introduction is 1,549,743, of which 1,294,634 represented American output. Canada is credited with 121,654.

Among the Makers of high-priced cars peak activity prevails. Packard, during April, broke all records by delivering more than 6000 cars to customers. May, it is believed, will prove another record-breaking month.

SEASON HERE TO PLAN TRIPS

coast line is a succession of beaches. Some are close to the city and others require a trip of nearly 300 miles from home.

With the beaches so close to home many regularly spend weekends there and choose to go elsewhere to vary the vacation. In that case, the mountains are most frequently favored. The San Bernardino Mountains are dotted with resorts, the Los Angeles County Park at Big Pines among them.

TO THE MOUNTAINS

San Diego's back country is mountainous and offers it lures. A more frequent choice leads over roads to the north. The Owens Valley road reaches vacation land immediately after passing Little Lake, the edge of the desert. From that point northward each city passed is an entrance into some high Sierra retreat. Mt. Whitney and its nearly as high companion peaks hold the headwaters of the finest trout fishing streams California offers. Their shadows touch thousands of lakes, little and large, cold, barely molten snow at this time of the year.

Going onward out of the valley Lake Tahoe can be reached by way of Walker River—a beautiful country—or the motorist can turn at Mono Lake to go over Tioga Pass. At its summit starts another wonderland. Lakes, trees, meadows, flowers, wild animals (none dangerous.) winding streams, little but what nature put there, make this road through Tuolumne Meadows a fascination.

NATIONAL PARKS

Finally this route drops down into the valley of Yosemite National Park. Then it is but a short distance to Sequoia and Gen. Grant parks. These are just across the mountains from the Owens Valley retreats. Mt. Whitney is to the east instead of the west.

Perhaps vacation allows a longer trip. Northern California roads are but a continuation of those in the south and the State boundary need not be the end. Some go even into Washington and Oregon or into Canada.

The automobile has brought a variety into man's life that is evidenced in vacation plans. Last year one spot was visited. This year something new is to be seen. A trip into unknown areas is to be made. Resorts will all supply information for the vacationist. The Times has a bureau for such purposes and will aid with maps, circulars, reservations and advice. The Automobile Club of Southern California furnishes its members with this service.

WHAT'S OVER THE HILL?

With an automobile no vacation need be lacking in interest—even adventure.

MT. RAINIER ROAD CLOSED

The road from Tacoma to Mt. Rainier is open and in good condition as far as Longmire Springs, but closed beyond due to snow. The National Park Inn at Longmire and the lodge at Paradise are open for the spring season. There are nineteen and one-half feet of snow at Paradise and three feet at Longmire, according to reports to the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Balanced Diet for your Car

IS your car being fed just the right kind of lubricants, in just the right quantities and at just the right times? Proper lubrication has more effect on the welfare of your automobile than diet has on your own health.

At the ordinary grease rack little or no attention is given to the study of just what kind of lubricant is best adapted for a given part of your car. One kind of oil and one kind of grease is the usual bill of fare.

This we think is all wrong. We have proved that to lubricate a car right requires seven different kinds of lubricants, and we see to it that every portion gets just what it needs to keep it functioning properly. Our service also includes thorough inspection for loose and worn parts.

LUXURY FORMS KEYNOTE

Marked by new luxury, comfort and performance ability, the new Jordan eight, model G coupe has arrived here and is on display at the establishment of the Lord Motor Car Company, announced Harry A. Lord, president.

"This 1929 coupe is the handsomest and most finely equipped coupe the Jordan company has produced," declared Mr. Lord. "It is most luxurious and comfortable and is fitted with numerous devices that are appreciated by those who like comfort and driving aids.

"For instance there is an arm rest on the left front door for the driver. Also there is a little light under the dash which shines directly upon the ignition switch so the key can be inserted quickly at night. It is lighted by a handy little switch that turns on the indirect dash light when moved in a opposite direction and turns off the switch light.

"The front seat is very wide, deeply upholstered and large enough for three persons. It is covered with a fine broadcloth that has a neat figure. The lining is of solid color to harmonize with it. Controls are placed very close to the hands so that there is no necessity for stretching about when driving. The newly designed steering apparatus takes the work out of driving and perfect control is given by the four wheel hydraulic brakes that operate with but slight pressure of the foot.

"The coupe has a rumble seat which opens automatically when a lever in the front compartment is pulled. This rumble seat is upholstered in brown leather.

"One of the first cars to arrive has a body color of dark blue with black moulding. It has cream colored wire wheels with spares on the front fenders."

Even Steel Files Picked Up by Tires

Last month T. L. Rich, Ajax Gold Bond and McClaren Autocrat tire distributor, reported casings ruined beyond repair by six unusual objects run over by motorists in the downtown business district, in addition to severe cuts caused by common objects, such as nails and glass. They were a twelve-inch file, large horseshoe, jagged piece of cement, spring lever, neck of bottle and pick blade.

Mr. Rich, who has sold practically every make of casing during his eighteen years in the tire business in Los Angeles, says experience has taught him the average motorist has one tire completely destroyed each year by a severe cut, premature blowout, wheel out of alignment or underinflation.

ALLOWANCE MADE FOR WIDER STREETS

Allowing for wider streets in the a form of traffic remedy lately applied in some of the larger cities of the country, it is noted in reports reaching the Automobile Club of Southern California, and nearly every large city in the country has planned extensive and expensive street widening programs. In Chicago alone, according to reports, well over $100,000,000 has been spent on widening and at the instance of Chicago civic organizations seven counties and thirty-four municipalities have adopted subdivisions rules whose effect so far has been that 500 miles of 100-foot and eighty-foot rights of way have been made by subdividers where otherwise the old-time sixty-six-foot widths would have been laid out.

PARK ROAD RULES ISSUED

A control system will be in effect on the Wawona road entering Yosemite National Park from Fresno, Madera and Merced this spring and summer, according to advices reaching the Automobile Club of Southern California. A $320,000 program of reconstruction is the reason for this control of traffic. Supt. C. G. Thompson advises that the control will be in effect between the park line near Wawona and Chinquapin, at the intersection of the Wawona, and Glacier Point Roads.

Effective last Monday, outgoing motorists leaving the park via the Wawona road will be checked through Chinquapin beginning at 9 a.m., and at the same hour motorists entering the park over this road will be checked in at the park line near Wawona. Motorists will have free use of the road without delays throughout the day until 4 p.m., when the controls will close at Chinquapin and the park line. The contractors will begin their work late in the afternoon and continue throughout the night until 9 a.m. the following day, when they will stop all operations to permit an unrestricted flow of motor travel over the road. Park authorities are confident this arrangement will prove satisfactory to the Wawona road motorists during the spring and summer.

With the all-year highway entering the park from Merced in constant use, and the Big Oak Flat road soon to open from Northern California, it is believed the control system on the Wawona Road will not inflict any great hardship on the park visitors, as either of the first two routes can be chosen in the event motorists are unable to conveniently make the Wawona-road controls.

AT a record low price for so large and so beautiful a Knight-engined car, the new style Willys-Knight "70-B" is bringing the superiorities of the patented double sleeve-valve motor to thousands of added owners.

In each cylinder of this simplest and most efficient of power plants, two sturdy metal sleeves move smoothly, silently up and down in a protective film of oil, admitting and expelling gasoline vapor through openings in their sides.

These sleeves combine with the dome-shaped cylinder head to form a perfectly sealed combustion chamber. The full force of the explosion is directed straight downward against the piston, making the most efficient use of the highly compressed gas.

The Knight engine gives high uniform compression at all times, at all speeds, and with any gas—and is the only type of engine that keeps growing smoother and quieter with use.

In the Willys-Knight "70-B," a rugged seven-bearing crankshaft reduces vibration to a minimum, while the car's improved frame construction gives extra strength and rigidity.

field in the San Fernando Valley, which represents an investment already of over $800,000 and on which an additional expenditure of $500,000 is planned during the year. This is a Class A port. The Bach factory is located here.

A count taken among approximately forty operating companies in the Southern California district shows that there are more than 200 planes in regular daily operation. Western Air Express, foremost among these, Maddux Air Lines, Aero Corporation of California, Pickwick Airways and the Mutual Aircraft Corporation, operating over fixed routes with regular schedules. There are many others in charter, taxi and similar services of a commercial nature. These are only planes of the carrier class and do not take into consideration those privately owned by companies or individuals.

A national leader among operating companies and the first to declare a regular dividend, the Western Air Express operates thirty-nine ships.

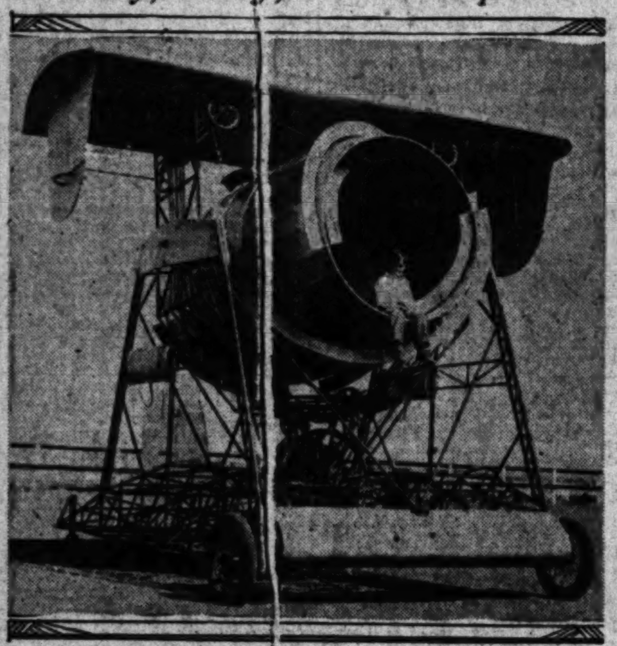
Western Air Express has been in existence three years. Commencing business operations in April, 1926, the company depended on the air mail for its revenue. Twenty men were employed, five planes were in use and one office sufficed to handle the business.

Now the count shows thirty-nine planes, 157 employees (all the pilots army or navy trained,) main offices stretched between Los Angeles, San Francisco and as far east as Chicago, and there are in addition nine field offices.

During its existence the Western Air planes have gone nearly 2,000,000 miles, with only one serious mishap, that occurring the day it opened its run to Cheyenne, when a new plane was burned and the pilot lost. Otherwise no injury has been recorded and no serious emergency has occurred.

Passenger carrying was possible in its early years only when the mail load to Salt Lake City was light, consequently this phase of the business did not develop early.

Really, Truly, It's an Airplane



Flies Like Hummingbird

This is the "fly-worm," as its inventor, Paul Maiwurm of San Diego, calls it. The plane, now nearing completion, depends on the rapidly revolving tube to lift and propel it. Helical fins within and without the tube push the air back. Altitude and direction are attained through tilting and pointing the tube. The tube is said to give the craft a sixty-mile speed when revolving only 300 revolutions a minute. Maiwurm adopted the hummingbird principle.

AIRPLANE COMPETES WITH TAXI

London Chaffeurs Look With Apprehension Upon Feat Demonstrating Saving in Time Made by Aerial Transportation Over Auto

LONDON, May 11. (Exclusive)—That the taxicab of today is already sensing the rivalry of the air taxi of tomorrow was revealed this week at a semiprivate meeting of taxicab owners in London.

United States visitors to London today who knew the city before the war, have noticed the vast difference and improvement in the appearance of the London taxicab. Although there are still a large number of rickety old cabs about the London streets they are finding it difficult to compete with the most arresting lure of smart cabs colored in chic shades, looking more like private automobiles, and containing every amenity of a new car, including heating apparatus and a rack containing books and the day's newspapers.

However, still more interesting facts were revealed in London this week at the meeting of taxicab owners and owner-drivers who took the opportunity of their annual dinner to discuss the probabilities of aerial competition. The question arose through the fact that the day before a noted aviator, who was attending a lunch at the Savoy Hotel, took a small seaplane from Hendon and landed on the River Thames just at the foot of the Savoy's water-gate. He carried a taxi passenger with him.

Point was added to this demonstration of aerial taxi-faring by the fact that a friend, also bound for lunch, picked up a taxi in Hendon simultaneously. He arrived at the Savoy just forty minutes after his friend. (Hendon is only eight miles from the hotel.)

London taxicab proprietors feel hurt at the amount of space devoted to the contest and the dismal showing of the taxicab, which they pointed out was not a new recruit to the London ranks.

Other remarks made at the meeting betrayed that the tiny saloon car, the favorite of the woman driver, is hitting the taxicab hard.

GUATEMALA AIR MEN HERE

Lines From Los Angeles to Central America Seen Soon as Expansion Plans Disclosed

Establishment of a regular air transportation service between Los Angeles, Mexico City and Guatemala City is seen at an early date as a result of a trip to this city by Victor Gordon, president of the Guatemala Air Service. He is registered at the Hotel Ritz with his associate, S. W. Neighbors, the two men owning 98 per cent of the stock of the Guatemala company, according to Mr. Gordon.

Eight planes have been purchased here by the two men for the Guatemala service, it was pointed out yesterday, and possibly two more will be bought before they return to that country. Five of the ships have been shipped to Guatemala and the others will be flown to that country, leaving here probably this week, Mr. Gordon said. Arrangements have been made with the Texas Company to service the planes with Texaco gasoline and oil before they depart, Mr. Gordon explaining that he is co-operating with that oil concern because of its extensive distribution facilities en route to Guatemala.

AIR RIGHTS HELD

"We have a contract with the Guatemala government which gives us the exclusive right to all commercial air activity in that country," Mr. Gordon said yesterday. "We also are under contract to train flyers for the government. No other transportation companies are permitted to operate in the air at Guatemala. That country is about the size of Colorado, but cuts off North and South America, which gives us a big advantage.

"We have at present about twenty planes in the service and before the end of the year we expect to have about fifty. We are planning lines from Guatemala City to New Orleans, El Paso and Los Angeles, via Mexico City, and hope to connect with air lines in this country. Our landing fields total sixty-six with a wireless station at each one, and we drop mail regularly at forty-six of the fields. The base field is at the outskirts of Guatemala City."

GOVERNMENT AIDS

Financial assistance to the extent of about $200,000 has been given the Guatemala Air Service by the government, Mr. Gordon added.

Ten Southern California aviators also have been engaged by the company for the Guatemala service and they will fly the planes to that country. The route to be followed is Tucson, El Paso, San Antonio, Brownsville, Tampico, Mexico City, Tapichula and Guatemala City.

TROJAN FLYING CLUB NAMES ITS OFFICERS

Final organization of the Trojan Flying Club recently was completed and fifteen charter members were chosen as a governing board of directors. The club plans to give members flying instruction at cost and to provide a plane for licensed pilot members for use in flying.

Officers elected recently are Dr. A. R. Harlin of the Los Angeles Medical Group, president; Nathan A. Rhine, University of Southern California law student, treasurer; Burdette J. Daniels, law student, secretary, and Myron D. Sunde, student in the college of liberal arts, vice-president.

Concern Begins First Airplane

Production started last week on the first of the new passenger monoplanes that are to be manufactured by the Maximum Safety Airplane Company of Los Angeles, it was announced yesterday. The plane is designed to carry three passengers and a pilot, and will be powered with a 170-horsepower Curtiss Challenger engine, giving it a high speed in excess of 120 miles per hour. It is expected that the plane will land at twenty-three miles per hour.

The design of the new plane contains many features not found in the freight-carrying model that is at present under production. Entrance to the pilot's cabin in the passenger plane is through the passengers' cabin, doing away with an entrance door just behind the propellor. Greater visibility than in the present model is obtained through the use of larger window sections in the wings. Other refinements are noticeable in the tail group.

The first of the new passenger planes is expected to be ready for its test flight on June 1. Production facilities of the Maximum Safety plant are being increased to permit the construction of two complete airplanes every day.

Improved Carburetor

A [illegible] is made by W. S. Hammel of the Hamm-Gerke Company, Southern California distributors for the Winfield carburetor, that a new and improved Winfield carburetor has been placed on the market.

"The new carburetor raises the [illegible] limits of any car to a new high standard," according to Hammel. "In every test, we have been able to show an increase in [illegible] mileage. This is unusual, when you consider that this carburetor also adds at least another five miles of peak speed. This increased speed means more power and quickness through the entire power range of the motor. On a stop-watch test, we found that this carburetor makes the acceleration about one-sixth quicker than the former equipment."

ENTRIES FOR JUMPING FROG JUBILEE MANY

Five hundred entries have been received for the jumping-frog jubilee, which is to be held at Angels Camp, Calaveras county, next Saturday and Sunday. There will be a '49 celebration, a street parade, a museum of relics of the days of the gold rush, timber-sawing contests, old-time saloons and gambling houses and many other interesting features of the early pioneer days, reports the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Dealer Makes Announcement of New Model

The new Stutz four-passenger speedster has arrived here, according to F. W. Clampett of Marshall & Clampett, Stutz and Black Hawk distributor.

"This speedster, which is mounted on a Stutz chassis with a 145-inch wheelbase, has a stylish foreign air due to its new lines and equipment," explained Mr. Clampett. "Its streamline body is broken by a deep, graceful semicircle sweeping from the cowl across the front doors and up to the back of the front seat.

"One of the first received here has a body of black with cream wire wheels that have chromium rims and wide hubs. The top is tan Burbank cloth that folds down into a neat boot. The top bows are of natural wood finish and chromium-plated metal. There is a large trunk at the rear containing suitcases and hat box. It is covered with a tan Burbank slip-on cover.

"Upholstery is of fine grain wine-colored leather and there are auxiliary center arms in both front and back seats. These arms fold up into the back cushions when not in use and the car really will carry six persons comfortably.

"The chromium-plated windshield can be folded down over the cowl. Large Ryan-Lite lamps are mounted in chromium-plated brackets.

"The car is fitted with the No-Back device which prevents it from rolling backward on a grade. It also has a booster brake that operates with slight toe pressure and is adjustable to road conditions. It has all of the other Stutz safety features.

"Miss Rhoda Cross, daughter of Leach Cross, former boxer, greatly interested in sporting affairs, was the first to take demonstration of the speedster."

THROUGH ROUTE OPEN

The through route to Monterey via Salinas and Castroville is now in excellent condition. Motorists are using this highway during the reconstruction of the other Salinas-Monterey highway.

Tires Should Be Inspected, Holds Dealer

The summer touring season will find many motorists roaming far from base, and one of the beauties of such travel is freedom from worry and car trouble of any kind, according to Frank T. Price, president of Nelson & Price, Inc., local distributors of India tires.

The first thing to do when planning a long drive or vacation trip is to be sure that the "safety" factor is well taken care of, Price believes. This is best done by checking up on the salient parts of the car that have to do with safe driving.

Tires are important in this respect at all times, but even more so when longer drives are contemplated or when long mountain grades and sharp turns are likely to be encountered. Skidding and its resultant bad effects may come from improper tire equipment.

Brakes should be inspected and if not found in first-class condition, should be repaired at once. The same checking-up should be applied to the steering apparatus. These salient features of a car's mechanism are especially important on mountain roads.

Old-fashioned wheelbarrow races with women as passengers were held during a recent society event at Cannes, France.

Two Writers En Route Here on Auto Tour

Two well-known writers are now on a tour "rediscovering America," and are expected to arrive in Los Angeles within the next month or two, driving a Willys-Knight six sedan, according to information received here by Claire R. Savage, general manager of J. W. Leavitt & Co., Willys-Knight dealer.

These men are Bob Davis, who claims title to being the most widely traveled newspaper correspondent in the United States, and Frederick Faust, the novelist. Davis is employed by an eastern newspaper and a syndicate, it was stated.

"The pair started from Columbus Circle in New York which is marked 'O' in the guide books," explained Mr. Savage. "During the next three months they will travel through almost every State, looking for story material.

"When they started from New York they headed south, and are on the way to the Pacific Coast now. The itinerary includes a trip along this coast to Seattle and other Washington points, thence east over the northern route and back to Columbus Circle.

"The back seat of the car was loaded with portable typewriters, copy paper, fishing paraphernalia and suit cases when they departed."

HAIRBREADTH precision and custom care

A demonstration reveals surpassing results due to Chrysler's finer standards

CHRYSLER, by applying new and ingenious methods of scientific efficiency, introduced to volume production the fine precision heretofore associated only with hand-built cars.

The man who buys a Chrysler Imperial, a Chrysler "75," a Chrysler "65," gets a car that is held to hairbreadth limits in every specification.

From raw material to finished product, Chrysler is applying to all phases of manufacture the custom care and accuracy formerly possible only in costly hand-built cars. An elaborate system of inspections and tests safeguards the finest kind of craftsmanship, and makes certain that every part scales to the ultimate decimal of its prescribed weight and dimension.

The extreme to which Chrysler invariably goes in protecting quality and accuracy is something unique in the field of big production. Care guides skill in every move. Infallible instruments eliminate chances of human fallibility.

So it is that Chrysler cars, as they take to the road, are in every particular as fine and fault-free as modern science and expert human craftsmanship can make them.

And as the natural outcome of all this standardized care and precision, plus the genius of Chrysler engineering, there is a distinct difference in Chrysler performance that is wholly and lastingly delightful. Take a demonstration and learn the difference yourself.

GAIN SEEN IN FOREIGN AUTOS

Use of Motor Transport in Other Lands Grows

Facts, Figures of Industry Shown in Survey

Total Cars, Trucks Now in Use Mounts High

NEW YORK, May 11. (Exclusive) That the use of motor transportation abroad is approaching conditions in the United States is indicated by "Facts and Figures of the Automobile Industry," 1929 edition, published by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce this week. Motor vehicle registration outside of the United States now equals 7,285,000, according to this publication, which compares with 7,888,000 registered in the United States on December 31, 1919.

COVERS YEAR 1928

This volume, which is the eleventh annual edition, covers data for the calendar year 1928. It is a compilation of statistics dealing with all phases of motor transportation. Among the facts presented are the following:

Automotive freight carried by rail lines during the past year amounted to more than 3,500,000 carloads.

Automotive products rank first in export of manufactured articles, with a total value of $500,174,431.

Motor vehicle taxes in 1928 amounted to $808,000,000.

Arizona led the States in increase of motor vehicles, with a gain of 16 per cent.

CALIFORNIA LEADS

California has the most automobiles in proportion to population, with one car for every two and seven-eighths persons.

Seventy steam railroads are using motor trucks for short hauls and terminal service.

Motor truck registration in the United States totals 3,113,999. Passenger car registration is 21,379,125. Total registration of motor vehicles is 24,493,124.

There are 92,000 motor busses in the nation.

Seventy-two of the railroads in the United States are operating 2115 buses.

There were 38,000 miles of surfaced roads built in 1928.

There are 4,341,000 persons employed in motor transportation.

Dealer Urges Repairing of Speedometers

"We carry watches to have the correct time and equip automobiles with speedometers to measure distance and speed correctly and unless they are accurate their usefulness is impaired," declares F. Parks Harris, vice president of William E. Bush Inc., De Soto Six dealer. "Therefore it is obvious that when a motorist goes on a trip he should have his speedometer registering correctly.

"With the summer vacation season coming on all motorists should have their cars checked over and made ready for the journey. The speedometer is important and should be made to register accurately, especially if maps are to be followed for one is easily led astray by a faulty speedometer.

"Other important inspections the summer tourist should have made are ignition, brakes, front and rear axles, universal joint, wheels, clutch, tires, transmission, lubrication, water circulation, valve and steering mechanism. The lights too are important and car owners should see that they are functioning properly.

TRANS-SIERRA HIGHWAY NOW OPEN TO TRAVEL

The first trans-Sierra highway, Yuba Pass, is now open for travel. This road, which connects Sacramento and Reno, is paved by way of Auburn to Nevada City, with good gravel to Downieville. From this point a narrow mountain road is used to Sierra City, followed by narrow mountain road over Yuba Pass to Sattley. This section is rather muddy on account of melting snow, but it is frozen in the early morning.

Motorists planning to use this route are advised to drive over the summit as early in the day as possible and also to carry chains. The road from Sattley direct to Truckee is not yet open, although the road by way of Loyalton and Chilcoot to Reno is in good condition, reports the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

DRIVING DAYS MADE EASIER

Engineers Credited With Improvement

Chrysler Coupe Used in Neveda Work by L. H. Visalia

GONE are the days when motorists returned from a long trip with legs cramped, arms weary and eyes strained and bloodshot. Today the car driver reaching the end of a journey of perhaps many hours' duration steps from his car as free from fatigue as any traveler leaving a Pullman. That, at least, is the attitude of L. H. Visalia of the Elks' Club, Los Angeles, whose duties as an engineer on a government munitions plant at Hawthorne, Nev., take him on long jaunts where roads sometimes are little more than trails.

Visalia selected a Chrysler 75 coupe for his business travels. "It has been due to the unceasing efforts of engineers," he said, "that little or no physical effort is needed to drive and manipulate the controls of a modern automobile. It wasn't so long ago that the driver who wished to turn a corner threw his whole strength upon the steering wheel and hauled the front wheels around by main force. When he desired to shift the gears he used practically all the strength in his left leg to push in the clutch while his right hand and arm yanked upon the lever supposed to control the gearshift. All these maneuvers were performed with the driver sitting in a cramped compartment, permitting little leg or shoulder room."

Tires Declared Being Put to Harder Service

H. A. McKELLAR.

Never before in the history of the motor car have tires been invested with such tremendous responsibility in automotive transportation as they are today, declares H. A. McKellar, manager of the Los Angeles factory branch of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company. The combined factors of better roads, faster cars, four-wheel brakes and more liberal speed laws subject tires to service that is vastly more strenuous than a few years ago, he points out.

"Consider the increased acceleration of the modern car and the accompanying effects on tires," says McKellar. "Starting from a dead stop, the newer models are capable of reaching a higher rate of speed in less time than former cars. Wheel slippage brings greater tangential or cross forces to bear on the tread or tire, putting the tread and, in fact, the whole carcass under greater stress and strain.

"The effects of braking are the same, because the present-day automobile comes to a dead stop from higher speeds in shorter time, as the result of four-wheel brakes and more efficient mechanism. Speed is another factor to be considered in tire wear. The higher the speed the less chance the tire has to cool from one revolution to another. The temperature builds up, causing more rapid tread wear and less life both to rubber and cotton.

"The real effects of modern driving, speed and brakes are clearly reflected in the increasing demand for heavy duty tires. Firestone heavy duty sales are now 45 per cent of total balloon sales."

APPLE BLOSSOMS IN BLOOM NEAR YUCAIPA

The apple blossoms are reported to be in full bloom in the vicinity of Yucaipa and Oakglen, located in the mountains near Redlands, reports the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

QUEEN OF NORWAY BUYS AMERICAN CAR

The Queen of Norway purchased a new series Marmon sedan as a wedding gift for her son, Crown Prince Olav, and Princess Martha of Sweden, who were married recently, according to George S. Pelton, president of the Pelton Motor Company, Marmon distributor. The car was bought through Pass & Joyce, Ltd., Marmon distributor in London.

Planes Assist Game Leaders Cover District

The Junior Olympic Games have taken to the air. Boyd Comstock, director of the juvenile pentathlon is touring various county districts in an Eagle Rock plane owned and piloted by Andrian Cameron, president of the Motor Rim and Service Company of California.

When the total entrants began to exceed the 30,000 mark in the Junior Olympic Games the matter of being able to visit the many sections became acute and Mr. Cameron, who is an enthusiast in boy development and interested in the furtherance of aviation, volunteered his services and that of his ship to the executive committee of the Junior Olympic program for the coming county and Southern California meets.

Three planes accompanied Mr. Comstock to Inyo county Friday. They were piloted by A. E. Cameron of the Motor Rim and Service Company and W. Williams, sales-promotion manager of the Alexander Aircraft Company and E. Burrell Smith, salesmanager of the Aero Corporation of California. J. C. Low of Palos Verdes Estates was a passenger. All airmen planned to attend the district meets in Lone Pine and to inspect airports in Inyo county.

Plymouth now offers even greater luxury, efficiency and operating economy

COMPARE the full-size Plymouth with more costly cars and you will discover that it is easily their match in size, in comfort, in economy, in simplicity of operation, speed and power.

Each Plymouth that flashes by tells a story of style whose every word is impressive of modish quality—in the gleam of its slender-profile radiator, in the grace of its "air-wing" fenders, in the sweep of long, smart lines.

Beneath the beauty of the Plymouth is the modern, sturdy, high-compression engine that now is made even more startling in performance by numerous basic betterments.

An increase in stroke and piston displacement creates a mightier surge of supple power. The heavier crankshaft gives more even torque and still greater smoothness. Larger bearing surfaces on crankshaft, camshaft and connecting rods, and a newly designed full-pressure lubricating system of utmost efficiency mean longer dependable life. Longer, perfectly balanced connecting rods actuating the light aluminum-alloy pistons assure quick, flexible responsiveness. Silcrome exhaust valves act positively, preventing loss of power, and reduce periodic adjustment to a minimum.

Rubber insulated engine mountings and body impulse neutralizer further insure quiet smoothness. In fact, innumerable refinements now present in the improved Plymouth are most unusual for an automobile so low in price.

Plymouth passengers are secure in the safety of the positive brake action provided by full-size Chrysler internal-expanding 4-wheel hydraulic brakes, safe and sure in all weather.

Plymouth owners are proud of the car's dashing behavior. They relish its economy of upkeep and operation. Best of all, they can enjoy Plymouth power in comfort and share its delights with family and friends because it has full-size roominess.

On every count Plymouth exhibits superiority. It delivers the utmost in its field—full-size comfort, quality and value at an unparalleled low price.

Coupe, $655; Roadster (with rumble seat), $675; 2-Door Sedan, $675; Touring, $695; De Luxe Coupe (with rumble seat), $695; 4-Door Sedan, $695. All prices f. o. b. factory. Plymouth dealers extend the convenience of time payments.

PLYMOUTH—product of Chrysler engineering and craftsmanship—has been so named because its endurance and strength, ruggedness and freedom from limitations so accurately typify that Pilgrim band who were the first settlers of Plymouth, and who were among the first American Colonists.

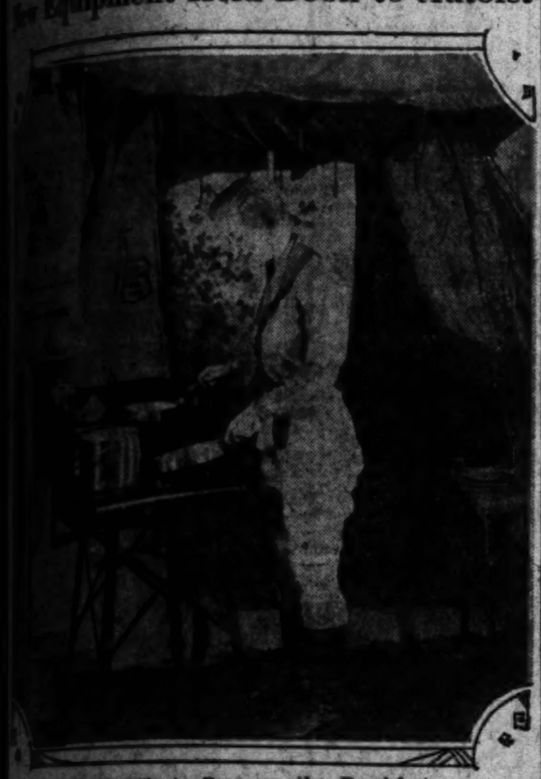
AUTO-CAMPING TIME NEARS

New Equipment Held Boon to Autoist



Laura La Plante Prepares the Breakfast

THE family who has decided to spend the summer vacation on a camping trip might well begin to "shop around" to see which of the many available trips offers the most for the money, advises "Kamp-ez" Wilcox, camp goods and fishing tackle department manager of the Western Auto Supply Company.

"There is no substitute for auto camping," declared Wilcox. "It offers a wide diversion suitable for all members of the family. In the average family Dad wants to spend his vacation fishing; mother needs relief from the daily drudge and the hot kitchen, so she chooses the mountains; brother wants to go hunting, and sister chooses the seashore. The answer? Take them all auto-caming.

"The itinerary of a vacation should be planned weeks before the trip is actually begun. Definite plans should be formulated and many problems must be solved. How many are going on the trip? What is to be the aim of the trip? What points of interest are to be seen? How many miles can be comfortably covered in a day? What accomodations are to be had along the way? Where to camp at night? These are but a few of the problems that will need solutions before starting out.

Oil Independent Operator From Mid-Continent Field Picked as Vice-President

[illegible] of the leading independent oil operators of the mid-continent field has come to Los Angeles to join one of the larger companies of the Pacific Coast was revealed last week in the announcement that James A. Bermingham had been elected a director and vice-president of the Texas Company of California, producers of Texaco gasoline and oil.

JAMES A. BERMINGHAM

He has also been appointed manager of the producing department of the company, it was announced, that department comprising the drilling, natural gasoline, geological and lands and lease divisions.

Truck Carries Loud Speaker

Frank Hetzel, part owner of the largest loud speaker in the world, which is mounted on a Dodge Brothers truck, has just returned from New York.

Hetzel started from Los Angeles under contract with a picture company to open a show in Salt Lake City. He made the trip in thirty-[illegible] hours. From there the troupe headed for New York. The Dodge truck arrived on Sunday.

When the truck started booming its messages up the canyons of New York Hetzel says the people seemed to fly from work with one accord and rush forth to see what was happening. From all directions [illegible] disgorged human beings and the street was completely blocked, and two dozen cops on each corner tried valiantly but vainly to unsnarl the traffic [illegible]. After giving New York a thorough ear-drumming, they trucked the equipment off to Washington, D.C., and Cumberland, Md., where [illegible] was due to open. The truck will remain in the East for six months, publicizing various [illegible], Hetzel said. Thompson-De [illegible] Company, Dodge dealers [illegible] sold the truck to Hetzel and helped with the installation of the speaker equipment.

SALES MANAGER'S DUTIES INCREASED

Louis C. Lieber

The sales manager of the International Harvester Company's factory branch in Los Angeles has been appointed regional branch manager of the territory which includes Southern California, Arizona and the west coast of Mexico.

Lieber has managed the sales department on International motor trucks for the past several years in Los Angeles.

His new duties will carry him over the territory several times a year, but his activities in this area will [illegible] most of his time.

Eastern Oil Cost Advanced

The price of pure eastern lubricating oils to the motorist here will be higher according to the announcement made by Norman E. Day of the Pennzoil Company here.

NORMAN M. DAY

Pennzoil the trade name under which this company markets its pure Pannsylvania oil, has heretofore sold for 35 cents a quart on the Pacific Coast, but has now been advanced 2 1-2 cents per quart to retail at 37 1-2 cents.

The increase in price at service stations is the reflection of the rising prices of Pennsylvania oils for the past several months which has forced a like increase in the price to dealers, Mr. Day declares.

Motorist Told How to Save

D. R. McBryde Lubricating Service is sponsor for the statement that any motorist can easily save $200 per year in operating his car.

"The best way to reduce the cost of running a car is to make sure that it always is properly lubricated," said McBryde. "Improper lubrication takes heavy toll in several ways. Anyone knows that a well-oiled, correctly greased and smoothly running motor requires much less fuel than one that is insufficiently or incorrectly lubricated. If your gas bills are higher than you think they ought to be, nine times out of ten you will find that faulty lubrication is to blame."

Western Oils Win Approval

The Union Oil Company's newly developed Union aero oils have been placed on the approved list by the Pratt & Whitney Aircraft Company, and the Wright Aeronautical Corporation, according to a telegram received by local officials from W. L. Standard, manager of lubricating oil sales, now on a tour of the eastern airplane factories.

In winning the approval of these two major airplane engine manufactures for the Union oils, the local company is declared to have scored a distinct victory for a western product and have justified months of patient research work that went into the development of these lubricants.

INSURANCE ORIGIN CITED

Insurance had its origin in the necessities of commerce and has kept pace with its progress, points out J. E. Coberly, executive vice-president of the West American Commercial Insurance Company. The first principles of insurance, says Coberly, appear to have been acted upon at a very early period. They were known in the days of the Roman emperors, and among the Anglo-Saxons the members of sundry "guilds," or social corporations, guaranteed each other against loss from "fire, water, robbery or other calamity," on payment of certain fixed contributions of the nature of premiums.

"It was, however, to cover maritime casualties that insurance, in its commercial aspect, seems to have been first undertaken," says Coberly. "As early as 1435 the magistrates of Barcelona in Spain issued an ordinance relating to this class of business, and in the speech of Lord Keeper Bacon, on opening Queen Elizabeth's first Parliament, we find the allusion, 'Doth not the wise merchant, in every adventure of danger, give part to have the rest assured.'

"Today the insurance companies of Great Britain and the United States rank among the greatest financial institutions of the world.

"Automobile insurance is now a factor of major importance. With the constantly increasing numbers of high-powered automobiles and trucks, and the ever-increasing congestion of traffic, the risk of injury and the damage to property has increased at an alarming rate and has, in fact, reached such proportions that no motorist can afford to operate along the highways without insurance protection."

Flowers Still Abundant in North Valley

That it is still not too late to view wild flowers in the Antelope Valley was the information obtained by Joseph Farber of the Pacific Tire and Vulcanizing Company from one of his customers.

In the neighborhood of the Lovejoy Buttes, east of Palmdale, are a number of varieties of flowers that have not yet been withered by the sun. Great numbers of yellow flowers may be seen throughout the valley, while smaller quantities of blue, violet and lavender blossoms will be found nestling close to the earth. Most of these are tiny blooms, but some attain the size of daisies, with long stems and lacy petals.

Novel Glider Being Built by Two Brothers

BREA, May 11. (Exclusive)—With less than two weeks in which to complete their task, two Brea youths are working late every night and putting in every spare moment in order to have a novel glider ready for the Fullerton air meet May 18.

Tony Naccareto, mechanic with the Industrial Fuel Supply Company, and his brother Theodore, student at the Brea-Olinda High School, are the joint inventors, designers and manufacturers of this new type of glider, which is to have a wing area of 200 feet, with a spread of 38 feet, the entire machine in spite of its size, not weighing over 150 pounds when complete.

RESORT AND HOTEL NOTES

THE trout-fishing season opens in the high Sierras on the 30th inst. According to all reports, this will be an exceptional season.

Rushing streams, ice-cold water, a late hatch-out of bugs and worms will greet the angler this year in the June Lake section in Mono county. For that reason nearly every cast of the fly should be rewarded with the rushing splash of a giant trout on June, Silver, Grant and Gull lakes.

A great snowfall, fourteen inches in the first week of April, has caused every camp owner in the June Lake section to rush plans for the opening of the season. This is the center of the high Sierras trout-fishing section, situated as it is but a few miles from the foot of famed Tioga Pass.

LOCATED in a beautiful valley nineteen miles north of San Bernardino, surrounded by lofty mountains on all sides, Glenn Ranch resort lies amidst vast orchards of apples, pears, peaches cherries. It is essentially a resort for young people with easy trails to test the endurance of adventurous hikers extending in every direction from the ranch, while burros and horses are available for those who prefer to ride. A large swimming pool, cement tennis court, several trout streams and nightly dances contribute to the entertainment. Housekeeping and hotel accommodations are available at moderate prices and the ranch dining-room is notable for good food.

DEEP WELL GUEST RANCH, California's pioneer dude ranch, closed its first successful year this week.

Charles F. Doyle of Pasadena announces that extensive additions are to be added before the opening October 15 this year. Among these are an old '49er stage coach drawn by six horses with a picturesque cowboy driver making a twice daily trip the two miles to the village of Palm Springs for mail and passengers. A large stable to accommodate fifty horses and rodeo corral, where weekly shows will be held also are planned.

RECENT arrivals from Los Angeles sojourning at the Hotel Virginia, Long Beach, include the following: R. L. Fairbank, J. T. Reed, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Wood, Howard Mitchell, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Giddings and Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Baker.

OAKGLEN LODGE had the pleasure of entertaining the Kenowan Klub of Occidental College last week-end. There were thirty-seven in the party, which came Friday afternoon and remained until Sunday afternoon. It was the third time this club has chosen Oakglen Lodge for its outing and, according to the members, they plan to return next year.

BEAR VALLEY has been playing host to numerous fishing parties since the opening of the season the 1st inst. Good bass fishing is reported on the lake, with several limits and many good-size catches taken.

Those who prefer stream fishing will find Bear Creek much to their liking. Several limits have been caught in the creek, with conditions steadily improving.

THE following is a list of the recent arrivals at the Mt. Wilson Hotel: Miss Edith Ball, Josephine M. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Mather, Theodore Curtis Abel, R. B. Stewart, Charles E. Beardsley, Alfred Sturdberg, Miss E. W. Snell, Commander and Mrs. H. A. Wadington, Mrs. F. A. Henderson, Charles G. Adams, Harvey Humphrey, Edward G. Leaf, Dana H. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Wilson, Mrs. L. Tyler and Mrs. Theodore Hampe of Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Barber, Mrs. N. S. Hoff and Hallock Hoffman of Pasadena; Mrs. H. D. Schroeder of Hollywood and Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Hawkinson and son and George W. Cossell of Upland.

BOB LACEY, for the past several years in charge of Mountainaire Lodge, has leased Lowes Camp at Big Bear Lake and will operate it under the name of Sierra Lodge. This resort, one of the oldest and most popular in Bear Valley, was known last summer as Camp Sierra.

In anticipation of a busy season, Mr. Lacey announces that a number of improvements, including a plunge 40 by 80 feet are either under way or are planned for the near future.

THE improving of the picnic and camping grounds of Ice House Canyon resort, located on the slope of Mt. Baldy, two miles above Camp Baldy, is progressing rapidly, according to George D. Allison, owner and operator of that popular winter and summer mountain retreat.

The grounds are situated alongside a mountain stream and are planned so that a number of outdoor fireplaces will be available.

Ice House Canyon resort comprises seven housekeeping cabins, a store, soda fountain and a dance hall. It is at an elevation of one mile and is exceptionally attractive.

NEW furnishings in several of the group of comfortably furnished housekeeping cabins at Woodland Lodge, situated on the south shore of Big Bear Lake, are reported by A. C. Eaton, manager of that resort. All of the cabins at Woodland Lodge are with private bath and with hot and cold running water. The resort is open the year around.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the recent purchase of Eleven Oaks resort, situated in the San Antonio Canyon, just this side of Camp Baldy, by Mrs. Frances Nesch, formerly of Santa Monica.

Mrs. Nesch will make a number of improvements and will personally operate the resort. She caters to a family trade, who will find excellent accommodations there and wonderfully scenic surroundings.

The former owners, George E. and Lloyd Russell, are now engaged in business in Venice.

CONSTRUCTION WORK DONE

The construction work which has been in effect between Santa Cruz and Watsonville has been completed and the detour eliminated, according to reports to the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Los Angeles-Built Cars Tell Their Own Story

They Speak for Themselves

Here are shown three locally constructed Whippets which have been touring the city and surrounding territory recently, "telling the world" about the good qualities of the line to which they belong.

Display Cars Sent Out by Three Dealers

Los Angeles residents and especially those employed at manufactories have heard the Los Angeles-built Whippet cars "speak for themselves" recently. Three of them, specially decorated and equipped with a loud speaker, have been making a tour of the city.

The cars represented three Whippet dealers here, J. W. Leavitt & Co., the Bozzani Motor Car Company and S. G. Stephens, it is stated.

"The Leavitt car is finished in gold with red moulding, window reveals and red wood wheels," said Clair R. Savage, general manager of J. W. Leavitt & Co. "There is a loud speaker horn mounted on the top which can be heard for a couple of blocks.

"The Bozzani car is finished in pure white with dark green moulding, window reveals and wire wheels. It is a six-cylinder model, while the other two are of the four-cylinder type. The spare wheels are carried in fender wells.

"The S. G. Stephens car is done in a beautiful shade of lilac, with white moulding bearing a gold stripe. Window reveals and wheels also are white. All three of the cars are stock model sedans.

"The cars have been traveling about the city and frequent announcements of the Whippet's many outstanding features made by the man operating the loud speaker. Their striking appearance alone attracts much attention and the announcements excite further interest."

Visits were made to many of the larger manufacturing plants throughout the city where the workmen learned much about the cars during their lunch hours.

AIRPORT EXPERTS TO MEET IN CLEVELAND

CLEVELAND, May 11. (Exclusive) Airport experts, charged with building a nation-wide network of landing fields, will seek to solve their common problems at the first annual airport convention here starting Wednesday and lasting until Saturday.

The convention, sponsored by the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce, will bring together for the first time authorities on airport construction, field lighting, radio, weather service, insurance and allied subjects.

NIGHT LIGHTING OF AIR FIELDS IMPROVED

Announcement is made of a new step forward in the night lighting of airports and airways. This is in the form of a new Rainbow beacon which is said to be visible for seventy-five miles, even through fog. Most important is the fact that efficiency has been so greatly improved as to permit operation of the new beacon with the small power plant found at outlying fields, according to E. G. Neale, president of Neale, Inc., western licensees of the manufacturers of the Rainbow beacons.

RED-HEADED PRINCE

marry the winner." The princess was delighted. She felt sure Prince Axel would win. The king was sure of it, too. That's why he was sitting in the pavilion, worrying. He muttered, half aloud, "that black-haired fellow's sure to win."

And that is just what Prince Axel did. He won every event. The king couldn't help feeling sad about it. He had so wanted the princess to marry a red-headed prince. But in spite of that, he couldn't help liking Prince Axel either. There was something so winning about him. "If you only had red hair," the king sighed, "you would be perfect." Prince Axel grinned.

The princess was sitting upon the pavilion, under the soft and lovely light of the moon-shaped lantern, when the king brought the victor to her. She stretched a welcoming hand toward the prince, but he hesitated, and stood back. "Are you sure," he asked her anxiously, "that it is really me you love? It isn't just my fame, is it? Or my handsome face? Or these black curls?"

"Oh, no!" said the princess. It isn't any of those things. It's just yourself that I love."

"Well," said the prince, "I'm glad it's me, and not the curls you're fond of, because they're not my own. I hope you will forgive the little trick I played. I was determined to win your love, and I had heard that you would not even look at a red-headed prince."

With that he pulled off the black curls, and dropped them on the floor, for it was only a wig. And now for the first time, the princess saw Prince Axel's very own hair, which was bright red.

"Oh!" gasped the princess. She stared at him a moment. Then she said cheerfully, "Really Axel, red curls are even more becoming to you than black ones, but then, anything would be becoming to you!" She was flattering him, you see, but she did it so prettily, that he couldn't help liking it. He went over, and sat close beside her upon the bench, so that they could talk better.

When the king realized that the princess was going to marry a red-headed prince after all, he was too pleased and tickled for words. He leaned against one of the pillars at the side of the pavilion, and chuckled. "I told you the cleverest ones are always red-headed!" he said, several times, but the princess did not hear him. She was too busy admiring the prince.

And it is like a house.
If the foundation is sturdy,

You can attain.
But if your foundation
Is slipshod

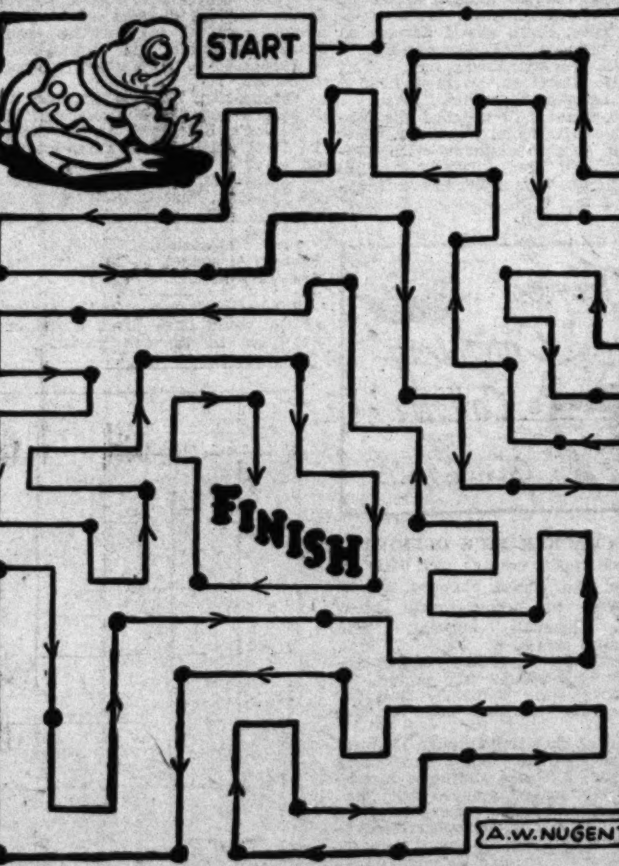
The Jumping Frog



Here is a game that two can play and that is productive of a lot of excitement. Take two small counters—bits of cardboard will do, if they are marked to distinguish one from the other—and a penny or other coin. Then let one player select "heads" and the other "tails." The coin is now tossed; if it comes "heads," the heads player takes his counter to the start, where the frog is waiting to jump, and jumps it along the line in the direction of the arrow to the first spot. The coin is now tossed again; if it comes heads a second time, the heads player may move ahead two spots. If it comes tails, the tails player jumps to the first spot, landing on the heads player, which sends the latter back to the start. The game continues until one of the players reaches the finish, when he wins. Remember that on the first toss you move one space; if you get the same toss again you move two spaces; then if you should get the same toss the third time you go only one space; the fourth time two spaces, and so on. If a jump takes you on to your opponent he must move back to one space behind you. You will find a lot of excitement in trying to get home before the other.

LETTER BOX

Dear Aunt Dolly:

Auntie, dear, you can't guess how proud I am that I have earned something by my efforts, and auntie, mother was so proud when I showed her the two $1 bills, and I'm so very happy. I wish I could shout with joy, but I know that would not do, because people would think I was crazy or something. I'm so glad that I have not worked in vain, but auntie, I am ashamed of my articles, cause I know they are awful, but I am going to work hard and improve.

Inclosed please find a paper that came with the award.

Auntie, I was never so surprised, as when I looked up from a flower I was drawing, and saw your two letters which somebody had brought from the mail box. Please excuse my writing because I am excited and, auntie, I'm very glad that I am a member of our club, not because of the prizes, but because I am glad to do something that I have always yearned to do; to write articles and such things. Thanks ever so much for your letter, auntie.

Yes, I have read Alcott's "Little Women," and "Little Men," "An Old-Fashioned Girl," "Jack and Jill," and I hope to read "Under the Lilacs" soon. I just love Miss Alcott's books, and also Dickens, too. Thanks just heaps for every-

MY HOBBY

By Betty Godbe, Glendale.

Most boys have a hobby of collecting stamps or something like that, and I think it is a good idea, only I never seem to get any stamps to save, outside of buying them. I love to collect things, and I have a very large collection of samples of face powder, perfume, and things of that sort. However, I found that I couldn't get many more samples, so now I am saving pennies.

The new 1928 pennies look so shiny and nice, that I decided to make a collection of them. But then I saw some of these old nineteenth-century pennies, and so presto! the first thing I was saving them, too. Whenever I got one of the kinds of pennies I was collecting, I put them in a box, that was real strong; in fact, it is made of iron, or steel, or something like that, so that I wouldn't take them out and spend them. I took the key and gave it to my mother, so that I couldn't even be tempted to open the box. I keep account of all the pennies that go in the box, and so far I have forty-six 1928 pennies and fifty-four real old ones.

If I should get a penny that is neither old nor new, which I frequently do, I put it in a little envelope, and then whenever I see a penny that I want, I ask the owner if he won't trade with me. I explain why I want them and they all seem very interested in my humble little collection, and many of them have promised to be on the lookout for those kind of pennies. I find this hobby very fascinating, and I am sure many other boys and girls would, too, if only they tried it, or perhaps they have already tried it.

THE TWIN SISTERS— AN INDIAN MYTH

By Ethel Croxen, Pomona

Long, long ago, the mighty tribe of Hotiwa, the Ancient, used the plains of Nebraska for their hunting grounds.

In the center of their village stood two majestic cottonwoods. Beneath their spreading branches were built the ceremonial fires of the Hotiwas. Side by side, the two trees had grown until they met. Each one developed like the other. To the awed Indians worshiping at their base it seemed a symbol of something greater than they could comprehend.

At last the old medicine doctor, Tahn-te, conceived the idea that as long as the two trees, the "twin sisters," should stand, there would be peace among the tribes of Hotiwa and Kah-po, now their enemy.

Early the next day Yahn, the runner, was dispatched to summon the Kah-pos to a peace council.

Many times the peace pipe passed around. Many the times the "twin sisters" were examined. Many words and signs were exchanged, before the Kah-pos believed that this peace was ordained by the Spirit God.

So through the long years reigned a peace unknown before in this wild land.

At last there arose a great storm. A storm that shook the very earth. A storm that bowed the Indians to their knees in fear. A storm that laid one of the "twin sisters" low upon the ground.

With the storm came the Kah-pos, who had grown tired of the eternal peace that held sway. They were armed and painted in their hideous war paints. They completely demolished the tribe of Hotiwa, with the exception of one. This one escaped.

The poor tribeless man believed until his dying day that the falling of the left "twin sister" was the cause of Hotiwas' defeat.

RED-HEADED PRINCE

BY ROSEMARY WIESS

(Illustrated by Elaine Andrews)

His Majesty King Wicks sat in his favorite pavilion, beneath the moon-shaped lantern. The lantern, which was shaped like a crescent moon, was very pretty, and King Wicks was most proud of it. Right now, he wasn't feeling proud, though, he was too busy worrying about his daughter, the Princess Nida.

His Majesty, King Wicks, was bald, but in the days of his youth, his head had been covered with curly red hair. His wife, the queen, now unfortunately dead, had been very fond of his bright red curls. Many times every day, she would say how beautiful the King's hair was, and if the King had not been the very nicest sort of a person, he would have become too stuck-up for any good use.

When Princess Nida was still a baby, the Queen often looked at her, and sighed, and said that she hoped when the Princess grew up, she would marry a prince with red hair, "for princes with red hair," said she, "are the nicest princes of all." And the King promised her that he would try his best to see that the Princess married a red-headed one.

And now the Queen was dead, and the Princess was grown up, and she simply hated red-headed princes. At least that's what she said. To make matters worse, there had come to the court of King Wicks a handsome young prince with shining black curls, and the princess straightway fell in love with him.

His name was Prince Axel of Axeline. He had heard of the great beauty of the princess, and he was determined to make her fall in love with him. But he had also heard that she did not like red hair; so before going to her father's court to woo her, he bought himself—but no, I must not yet tell you the secret of the little trick the prince played on the princess.

Princess Nida thought Prince Axel the most charming prince she had ever seen, and so on the morning of the very day I am writing of, she went into her father's study, and sitting on a stool by his feet, she said, "Father, why are you so set on having me marry a prince with red hair?"

"My dear," said the king, in his most fatherly manner, "your mother always said red-headed princes were nicer, and more clever, than any other kind. I promised her I would try my best to see that you married one."

"Father, you have tried your best," the princess replied, "but I just can't like any of the red-headed ones. You must admit most of them are frightfully homely, not to mention Prince Nick of Hockera, who is bow-legged, besides."

"Red hair is always beautiful," said the king firmly, remembering the hair that had once crowned his own head.

"Of course," murmured the princess, comfortingly, "I'm sure you looked beautiful in yours," she stroked his bald head. "But then, she added, in her sweetest tones, "anything would be becoming to you!" She was flattering him, you see, but she did it so prettily, he couldn't help liking it. His heart grew softer and softer.

"Tomorrow," he said, "we will have a tournament, and you shall

MOTHER
by A.G. BENEDICT

Mother dear, on this, Mother's Day,
We lift up our faces to God and pray,
Asking His blessing, on our mother so true,
Mother, dear mother, we all love you.
Sometimes we're careless, sometimes we're bad,
But mother, dear mother, don't feel sad.
It's just the way of a growing child,
Not understanding, just crazy and wild.
Each one in our heart, means nothing but love,
For the dear, dear Mother, God gave from above.
We know mother dear, you have struggled for years,
There were times when thoughtlessness caused you some tears.

We did not mean it, dear mother, so true,
Each one of us love you, really we do.
For years you have struggled, to give us the best,
It is now about time, we help you to rest.
To be helpful, cheerful, loving and kind,
Will lighten the cares, on our dear mother's mind.
Today, we bow our heads in prayer,
Thanking dear God, for our mother's care.
Now God, give us strength to care for mother we love,
Bless her, and guide her, dear Father above.

CHAPTER VIII

The two boys pushed open the swinging doors and stepped into an abyss of darkness. Even the street lamps above them were shrouded in heavy mist.

"This came up quickly," whispered Tommy, "it seems the Providence of the Gods, we can follow these people with small fear of detection."

"Yes, and have every chance of losing them, too," grumbled Chico, buttoning his coat tightly about him. "who can see in this dense fog?"

"Me," boasted Tommy, looking quickly about him. "There they are." Chico looked doubtfully into the mist, finally discerning two figures standing by a lamp post. "It is Dr. Samson's nurse," he cried, excitedly, "you remember how tall she was?"

"You are right," chuckled Tommy, "the trail won't be so hard after all." And he flattened himself against the wall, following the two figures as they walked slowly up the street.

"Perhaps they have a machine. What then?" asked Chico, his heart beating furiously. Tommy shook his head. "They are lovers, anxious to promenade, with small concern for time. Look how slowly they amble along." It was true, the man and woman, shrouded in heavy mist, moved like shadows through the night. Not until half a dozen blocks had been traversed, did they turn toward a brightly lit thoroughfare.

"Going to take a street car," prophesied Chico, "dare we hope board the same one?"

"Have to," Tommy assured him, quickening his pace, "we can't lose this clew. It is far too valuable."

The nurse and her companion hailed a car, stepping back, as its blurry light fell full upon them. Chico glimpsed the man's face and his bandaged arm as they swung lithely aboard the same car. Tommy pressed back upon the platform, hiding his face in the shadow of his cap. Never for an instant taking his eyes from the couple, sitting shoulder to shoulder, in a cross-seat. They were deep in conversation, the woman leaning a trifle toward the man, her green eyes suffused with a tender, yet fearful, light. Tommy watched her lips move, her hands flutter toward him, in appealing gestures.

"They are having an argument," surmised Chico, stifling a yawn, "wonder where we are bound for?" He looked through the mist-wet panes about him, discerning a highly respectable neighborhood. The houses were large and substantially placed upon neatly clipped lawns.

"Perhaps he lives here," suggested Tommy, "wish our journey would end as I am more than ready for a little sleep." No sooner had he voiced his hope than the nurse rose to her feet, making her way toward the door. The man hesitated, looked at his watch, then followed. When they alighted, Tommy and Chico scurried into a shadowy retreat, watching them closely as they sauntered up the street. Finally they stopped, glancing up at a forbidding-looking mansion, whose windows were in darkness save for a golden speck on the ground floor. Chico pinched Tommy's arm as the nurse ascended the steps, then ran quickly down them, until she reached the man's side. Impulsively, she cast her arms about him, holding up her lips for a good-night kiss. He gave it with small enthusiasm, then turned and walked down the avenue.

The nurse stood in perplexity, looking after him, then ascended the steps once more, this time more slowly, as though each move she made was a heavy burden. Tommy crept forward, with Chico sidling close by. They stood in the shadow of the porch, watching her insert her key in the lock. Then came lights, two of them, directly beside the one illumined window. Chico sighed. "I guess that ends our quest," he said. "We know a lot more than we did." Tommy gave him a warning shove as a slight click reached them. One of the shades was being lifted. For an instant the figure of the nurse showed plainly in the frame of the window before them. She had removed her hat and coat and was garbed in an evening gown of jade green. It matched her copper hair and piercing eyes, softening, to some degree, the masculine tilt of her features. She scrutinized the mist-clad night, then moved back into the room.

"How I wish we could see in there," whispered Tommy, "Armine might be imprisoned in this gloomy old structure."

"But we can't. That window is twenty feet above the earth."

Tommy did not answer his friend. He was studying the elaborate decorations that embellished this house of mystery. Suddenly he gripped his friend's arm. "I have it," he exclaimed. "See that curleyque railing running beneath the window? If the fog hasn't made it too slippery, I could climb on it, hang on to the sill, and peek in." But just then the nurse came back to the window, grasped the window shade in her thin hand and sent it whirling downward to its full length. Fate, however, was kind on this night of nights, as the side of the shade seemed to have caught on some pointed object.

"What luck," breathed Tommy, starting to place his feet upon the slippery railing. "That provides a loophole, just the right height for my eye."

"Be careful," warned Chico, "if she should flip up that shade, you would never have to worry about Armine." But Tommy was not easily daunted. Once an idea took form in his mind it was hard to affect his planning, so he raised himself inch by inch along the irregular facade until his face came flush with the side of the window. Here, gripping the sill with cold fingers, he peered into the room. A low exclamation of surprise came from him, as his figure involuntarily grew taut.

Chico, watching his every move, sensed a new adventure. "What do you see?" he whispered, tugging at Tommy's foot.

The boy turned impatiently and motioned for silence. "If you could only guess," he promised him, "it might open your eyes, wide as a barrel. There are certainly developments, to say the least."

"I'M A PATRIOT, I AM!"

By Helen Wade Siebenthal, age 16 years, Morenci (Ariz.) High School.

When the flag of my country passes by,
I salute the banner and cheer and cry,
"Hurrah for my country and Uncle Sam!"
For I'm a patriot, I am!

Boom, boom! When I hear the drums,
My heart leaps up; off my hat
comes.
I love to watch their tread, so slow,
For I'm a patriot, you know.

Dad says I'm as polite as can be,
I always act right before company.
I say, "Yes, sir," and "Thank you, ma'am,"
For I'm a patriot, I am!

WALIPI PUEBLO

By Mary Martha De Best, Springville, Iowa.

Desert night—
A million stars set in blue-black velvet.
Outlined in ivory
Stands a deserted city—
A contrast in black and white.
The ghosts of small boys
Climbing like jungle monkeys;
Watercarriers;
Old blanket-weavers;
Young pottery painters;
Wraiths haunting the Pueblo
When a million stars
Are set in blue-black velvet.

THE RAIN ON THE ROOF

By Louise Hogan, Polytechnic High School, Santa Ana.

Last night on my roof of scarlet tile,
I heard the pattering of tiny feet.
Though they had traveled many a mile,
Through the long day's dust and heat
They tapped on my roof to tell me
they were there.
The glistening sapphire of their shiny array
Shone like silver—as bright as day,
A peace and calm settled o'er all,
On the roof, the raindrops ceased to fall
And spraying a kiss through the window to me,
They hastened away—off toward the sea—
Leaving my roof as clean as could be.

PLAYING THE GAME

By Josephine [illegible], Age 14 Years, Los Angeles

A square-cut jaw, unflinching blue eyes, straight nose, and sensitive lips were a part of Will's shiny face. His hair was rumpled and curly. One day, while going home from school, he saw his friend on the opposite side of the street.

"Lo, Fred!" he called, cheerfully. Fred turned around. A round face, stout of body, and flashing white teeth were Fred's outstanding features. "Oh, say, I've something to tell you, Will." Quickly he joined his friend across the street.

Fred's face clouded. "Well, you're captain of the baseball team, and you ought to know that Dan is, I can't believe it, but I heard that Dan is up to something; he is going to have John, our pitcher, put off the team by false work." The other boy's face darkened as he replied, "I don't think Dan would do that."

"Well, that's what I heard."

"Who told you, Andy?"

Will kicked a stone in his path, and looked doubtful. "I never trusted Andy so much," he said at length.

Fred glanced at his friend. "Do you think it's true?"

"I can't say, but I'm going to find out," was the response.

They came to a cross-road, and the boys parted after exchanging words of consolation.

The next morning the worried captain was confronted by Dan on his way to school. "Have you heard the rumor about me?" asked Dan.

"I think I did," said Will, "about your planning to put John off the field?" "Yes," said Dan calmly. "It isn't true."

"I knew it wasn't, Dan."

"Thanks," said Dan, smiling feebly. "Everybody knows what a fine fellow you are," added Will hastily, as he noticed the hurt look in the other boy's face.

They walked a while without saying anything. Then Dan spoke. "Andy has an old-time grudge against me," he said. "He's clever," assured Will, "but he doesn't make good use of his smartness. We'll have to set him straight."

At school the following day, Will's face was a shade paler than usual. Taking an opportunity to speak to Andy alone, he said, "What's the yarn you've been spinning?" "Who do you think I am—Betsy Ross?" inquired Andy, laughing lightly. "No," answered Will seriously, "I'm referring to Dan." "What about Dan?" inquired Andy, "nice kid, eh?" "I'll say he is!" replied Will energetically, "He doesn't deserve the false statements you've told about him." Andy stared at the book he was carrying. William Welsh, the boy whom he had always admired, was talking to him in this way:

"What have you got to do about it?" he asked at length, coloring deeply. "Plenty," assured Will. "Now listen here, Andy, we don't want to be enemies, but we must straighten things out. Think it over by yourself. Are you being fair to Dan? Are you playing the game straight?" With these words, Will abruptly turned and left Andy staring after him. Andy shuddered. He had seen a look in Will's eyes that had never been there before. Over and over again he heard Will's words, "Are you playing the game straight?"

Later in the afternoon, Will met Fred. "Andy'll come through all right," he said cheerfully, "if you ask me," said the latter. "I say he won't."

Three serious-faced boys were walking home from school that night; they were Fred, Will and Dan. "I think everything will be all right," said Will, addressing Dan. "Thanks," he replied, with a relieved look. "Boys," said Will, "Andy is headed our way."

What was expected, happened. Andy joined them. He seemed ill at ease, and mumbled something about the weather. With the exception of exchanging greetings, the boys said nothing for a time, but walked along in silence. Andy opened the conversation by saying, "Dan, I wanted to get even with you for not picking me to play on the basketball team of which you were captain last year. It's my foolish pride, that's all. I know what I've been—a sneak—even worse."

Will grasped Fred's arm, saying softly, "Come on, let them have it out between themselves."

Fred and Will watched the other two boys from a distance. "Poor Andy, he's so disgusted with himself," said Fred. Then he smiled as the two boys shook hands, knowing that a bitter feud had ended.

Is the distance from A to B greater or less than from C to D? Is EF longer or shorter than GH? Is JK longer or shorter than LM? Make your guess—and then measure the various distances carefully. We think you will be surprised when you compare the results with your guesses. These figures can make the saying "seeing's believing" look untrue.

Put cracker jack through the meat grinder several times, until finely ground. Add one cupful of marshmallows, cut or chopped into small pieces, and add pineapple. Mix whipped cream with these ingredients and freeze in small molds or glasses.

The Magic City

"Well," said Squirmy, doubtfully, "that's all right, just so long as you love me like a mother, but please don't get any foolish notions. I'm an old bachelor; always have been, and always shall be."

The bug looked greatly insulted. She turned toward Mrs. Hen. "What a rude person," she cried, "he acts as though I wanted to marry him. He's just a poor little fish. Look at me, in comparison, there is only one me in all the ocean, and, as I am only five minutes old, you must admit I'm pretty smart to be swimming around and talking, when I have just been born."

"Dear, dear—of course, you are," cried the fish, "you'll pardon me, of course. I don't mean to be rude."

"Then you do like me?" asked the Bungle-Bug, shyly, smiling from feeler to feeler.

"Oh, dear, yes, if you'll only let up harping on the subject, I do hate people who keep bothering me."

"Don't be so grumpy," scolded Mrs. Hen, "if you are—you will never get along with Neptune. He's so cross himself, even the mermaids have to turn he and springs in order to make him smile."

"Ha," cried the Bug, "listen to that; I know he'll laugh at me, with all my little rooms inside of me. I shall be very popular with Neptune."

Squirmy raised his forehead, in the place his eyebrows should be, and remarked in a very dry tone of voice, "You think a lot of yourself, don't you?"

"Boo-hoo," cried the Bungle-Bug, "I shall cry until I flood the earth, if you speak to me that way."

"Close your mouth, please, you're letting all the warmth out of my sitting-room. I saw smoke and sparks rise out of your throat, and I do adore to be warm," sniffed Squirmy.

"Thenn-n-n, like me, promise to like me," wept the Bungle-Bug. "If you don't, I'll howl myself sick; I'll howl until all the waves sit up on end."

"Golly, yes," promised poor little Squirmy, "but let's be going, I hate these scenes. Open your trap, and let me in."

"Open my what?" asked the astonished Bug.

"Pardon," giggled Squirmy, "I meant, open your trap door. I'll ride in my living-room. Are there any windows?"

"Dear, yes," cried the Bug, "plenty of them, and they heave up and down, every time I breathe." The fish looked doubtful.

"Sounds like a ship," he grumbled, "and I didn't like those painted battleships one bit."

"Try me," coaxed the Bug, "dear little Squirmy, I am an easy sailor."

"Humph!" He did not seem at all convinced. "Another thing, do you know where Neptune's castle is? It floats, they tell me, first North, then East, and South. I must find it."

The Bug wrinkled her forehead, into dozens of tiny knots.

"I'm not used to thinking," she complained, "it hurts my new head. I am very new, dear friend, and even my thoughts come slowly. Give me time to grow up. But this has nothing to do with the question. We must find Neptune. If his castle floats, why don't we swim north, and if he isn't there, go south, and so on. We're bound to catch him."

Squirmy snorted through his nose like a weasel.

"You are so ignorant," he cried, "anyone could tell, your thoughts were spandy new, and not used to producing anything worth while. If we went north, and he was south, we'd miss him, swimming north, wouldn't we?"

"Lack a day," cried the puzzled Bungle-Bug, "bless all my 756 legs, if I know. I'll leave it to the mermaids, they will direct us."

"But they have gone," cried Squirmy, "I tell you, there isn't a mermaid in the sea. Mrs. Hen magicced them, along with Lion, and my other friends. It's simply awful what she has done," and he gave her a very mean look.

"But think of what she gave you, when I was created," cried the Bungle-Bug, "there's only one me, you know."

Squirmy nearly said, "Thank goodness," but checked himself in time.

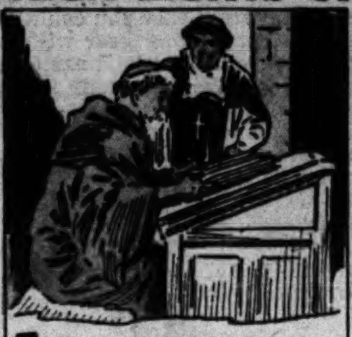
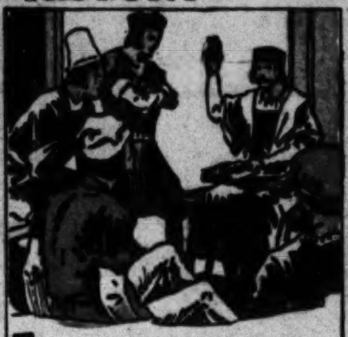
HIGH LIGHTS OF HISTORY

Chapter CXVI—The Revival of Learning.

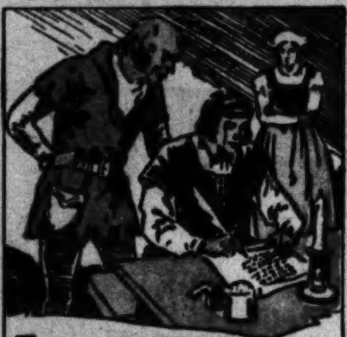
By J. CARROLL MANSFIELD



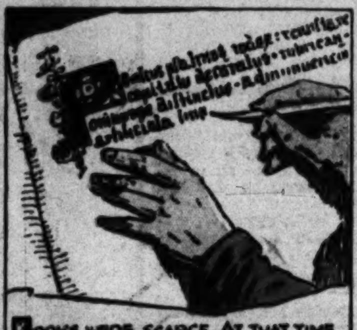
DURING THE FIRST PART OF THE "MIDDLE AGES" LEARNING WAS CONFINED ALMOST ENTIRELY TO THE CLERGY. THIS STATE OF AFFAIRS WAS GENERAL THROUGHOUT EUROPE.



ABOUT 1100 A.D. MANY MEN BEGAN TO DISPLAY A THIRST FOR KNOWLEDGE. THERE WERE FEW TEACHERS, AND EVERY WELL-EDUCATED MAN WAS LIABLE TO BE BESIEGED BY A CROWD OF STUDENTS EAGER TO LEARN. ——•

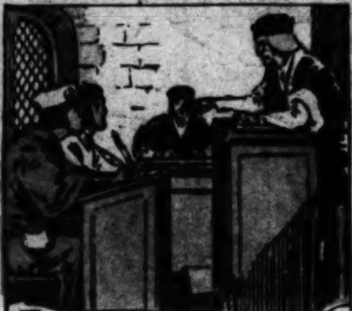


VERY FEW PERSONS,—EVEN AMONG THE NOBILITY,—COULD READ AND WRITE. "CLERKS" AND "SCRIVENORS" WERE EVERYWHERE IN DEMAND TO READ AND WRITE FOR THOSE WHO COULD DO NEITHER. ——•

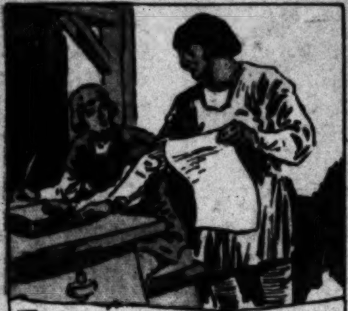


...sapientia ... affectus ... rubrica ... distinctus ... administratio

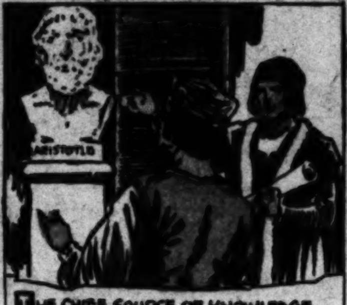
BOOKS WERE SCARCE. AT THAT TIME THEY HAD TO BE LABORIOUSLY COPIED BY HAND FROM THE ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPT, AND MANY MISTAKES WERE MADE BY THE COPYIST. MOST OF THE BOOKS OF THAT DAY DEALT WITH PHILOSOPHY THEOLOGY AND LAW.



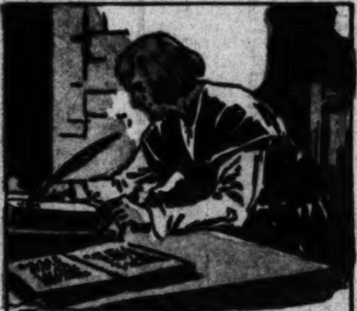
GROUPS OF TEACHERS AND STUDENTS GATHERED AT PARIS, BOLOGNA (ITALY) AND OXFORD (ENGLAND). FROM THESE GROUPS GREW THE FIRST GREAT UNIVERSITIES OF THE MIDDLE AGES ——•



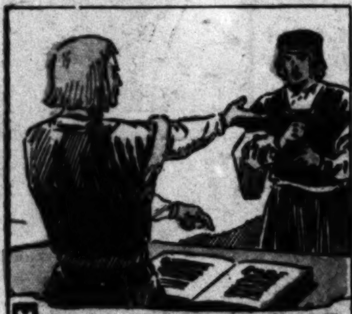
MOST BOOKS HAD BEEN WRITTEN IN LATIN, THE LANGUAGE OF THE CHURCH. NOW THEY WERE TRANSLATED INTO VARIOUS LANGUAGES SO THAT THE FRENCH, ITALIANS AND ENGLISH COULD READ THEM IN THEIR OWN TONGUE.



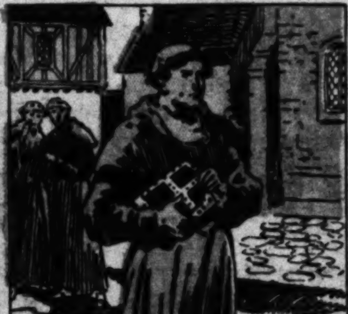
THE CHIEF SOURCE OF KNOWLEDGE WAS THE WRITINGS OF ARISTOTLE, THE ANCIENT GREEK PHILOSOPHER AND SCIENTIST, WHICH HAD BEEN PRESERVED THROUGH THE "DARK AGES" BY THE MONKS. FOR A LONG TIME EVERYTHING ARISTOTLE HAD SAID WAS ACCEPTED AS TRUE.



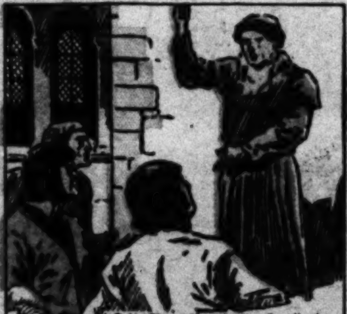
IN TIME MEN OF INQUIRING MINDS BEGAN TO MAKE EXPERIMENTS AND INVESTIGATIONS OF THEIR OWN. IN MANY CASES THE RESULTS OF THEIR EXPERIMENTS BROUGHT THEM INTO CONFLICT WITH THE TEACHINGS OF ARISTOTLE.



MOST OF THE OLD SCHOLARS BELIEVED THAT THE WORKS OF ARISTOTLE REPRESENTED THE SUM TOTAL OF HUMAN KNOWLEDGE, AND THEY STOUTLY DEFENDED THEIR IDOL AGAINST THE CRITICISM OF THE FEW WHO DECLARED THAT MUCH REMAINED TO BE LEARNED.



FOREMOST AMONG THE LATTER WAS ROGER BACON (1210-1293), ENGLISH FRANCISCAN MONK AND TEACHER AT OXFORD. A MAN FAR IN ADVANCE OF HIS TIMES, HIS VIEWS SOMETIMES GOT HIM INTO TROUBLE WITH HIS ORDER.



© McClure Newspaper Syndicate

BACON CLAIMED THAT TRUTH COULD BEST BE REACHED BY SCIENTIFIC INVESTIGATION, AND PREDICTED THAT THE DAY WOULD COME WHEN SEEMING MIRACLES WOULD BE WROUGHT BY PRACTICAL EXPERIMENTS. ——•

SOME 650 YEARS AGO ROGER BACON MADE THIS AMAZING PROPHECY ——•

"MACHINES FOR NAVIGATING ARE POSSIBLE WITHOUT ROWERS, SO THAT GREAT SHIPS... GUIDED BY ONE MAN MAY BE BORNE WITH GREATER SPEED THAN IF THEY WERE FULL OF MEN.—

LIKEWISE CARS MAY BE MADE SO THAT WITHOUT A DRAUGHT ANIMAL THEY MAY BE MOVED.

AND FLYING MACHINES ARE POSSIBLE, SO THAT A MAN MAY SIT IN THE MIDDLE TURNING SOME DEVICE BY WHICH ARTIFICIAL WINGS MAY BEAT THE AIR IN THE MANNER OF A FLYING BIRD."

Dear Aunt Dolly:

I have been reading The Junior Times, and I think it is a very interesting paper.

How can you think of so many funny characters to put in "The Magic City?" You may think it is funny for a girl of 14 to like fairy tales, but I don't think I'll ever get tired of them.

Oh, yes, I nearly forgot my purpose for writing to you. I would like very much to belong to The Junior Times Club. I decided that I would not send a story to you with this letter, because I do not know the rules for stories for the Junior Times.

Hoping to be a member soon, I am,

Yours truly,

Dear Aunt Dolly:

Your "Magic City" is wonderful. I never miss one installment, and I get the biggest laugh out of it. I don't like to color, April Fool! I enjoyed coloring Laura Brock's "Valentine," and also her wardrobe. Thanks, oodles of times, for reprinting the first "Valentine," and for sending back the second one. Please tell me how many points I have on my card. I am so anxious to know.

Please thank Laura Brock a million times for drawing that last picture of the little girl on the rock, and the back ground of flowers, because if there is anything I love to do, it is combining colors.

Your pal always,
[Signed]
THELMA KELSO,

Dear Aunt Dolly:

I am one of the great many readers of The Junior Times. I think it is the most wonderful little paper that was ever printed.

I am reading that lovely mystery story, "The Cracked Mirror." It almost made me have nightmares. How many chapters is there to this hair-raising story? If all the chapters are as exciting as this one, it is S O M E story! I just love mystery stories, and I believe this is going to be the best one I ever read. I am going to save all the chapters, and make them into a book, then let my friends read it, that don't read the Junior.

I would like very much to be one of the members of your lovely club. Could I join?

I am 13 years of age, and in the eighth grade at Cajon Valley Union grammar school.

That funny little story, "The Magic City," certainly is good. I read it every Sunday. Can't you make the chapters a little bit longer? I can hardly wait until Sunday comes, so that I may read the Junior.

Will you please send me the rules and regulations of the club? Also, a membership card. I will be very proud to be the only person in El Cajon who is a member. I am going to be a real live booster, and have all my friends join the T.J.C.

I hope to soon get one of those blue envelopes the members write about.

Must close now,
Your new niece (to be)

Dear Aunt Dolly:

You can't guess how happy I was when I received your letter and I got twenty-five points! I spinned around the table like a red top; you see I had a red sweater on. Well, I made something else this time for the sick children; it is stuffed kittens, and puppies, and elephants, etc. Now here's something else—I am sending a poem I wrote in school for English and I got A-1 in it. It is going to be put into the class poem book. Our class is noted as good poets.

Well, Aunt Dolly, if this poem is not good enough to put in the paper, I'll just keep on trying until I will have something put in. You know I am very interested in writing poetry, and stories, and plays, and things like that. I wrote a play about safety. I'll send you a copy next time, maybe it will be good enough to publish in our Junior Times. Well, I have to go now.

Lovingly,

BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

The Price of Heedlessness

By Thornton W. Burgess

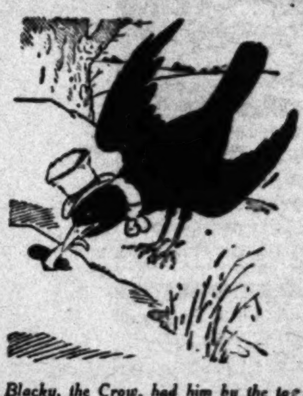
When you've been heedless once or twice
You've learned you always pay a price.
—Danny Meadow Mouse.

Danny Meadow Mouse has had many narrow escapes and many great frights, but never was he more frightened than now. Blacky the crow had him by the tail. It was only the tip of the tail, but that hurt. However, Danny wasn't thinking of the pain. He wasn't suffering from the hurt, but from fright. Blacky the Crow was trying to pull him out of the snow. You see, Danny had dived headfirst into one of his little tunnels leading down from the surface of the snow on the Green Meadows. Now he dug his claws into the walls of that little tunnel and held on.

Danny know perfectly well that he was paying the price of heedlessness. Had he heeded the advice of Nanny Meadow Mouse he wouldn't be in any such difficulty now. No, sir, he wouldn't be in any such difficulty now. But he hadn't heeded Nanny's advice and he had been careless and now Blacky the Crow had him by the tip of the tail.

The tail of Danny Meadow Mouse is, you know, very short. That meant that if Blacky could just pull him out of that hole, let go for a second and strike again, it would be the end of Danny. Danny felt his claws slipping. It was a dreadful feeling. He dug them in frantically. It was no use. They were slipping, slipping, and in a second or two they would let go altogether.

Blacky the Crow braced himself and gave an extra pull. This was too much for Danny. Out he came! And then a funny thing happened. Blacky was pulling so hard and Danny let go so suddenly that Blacky half lost his balance and he let go of Danny's tail. He had jerked Danny out so suddenly that when he let go Danny went flying over behind him.



Blacky, the Crow, had him by the toe

Now, despite his fright, Danny didn't lose his wits. This was all as unexpected to him as it was to Blacky the Crow, but Danny didn't waste any time. The instant he touched the snow he was on his feet any scurrying for another little hole. With a hoarse "Caw! Caw!" Blacky was after him. But Blacky wasn't the only one who was after him. Roughleg the Hawk had discovered that something was going on and he had come over to see what it was all about. He had arrived just as Danny was pulled out by Blacky, but he wasn't set to swoop instantly.

Blacky the Crow hadn't noticed Roughleg. He had but one thought and that was to catch Danny Meadow Mouse. So he started after Danny half-flying, half-running, just as Roughleg made a swoop to try to pick up Danny. The result was that Blacky got in the way. Blacky was knocked flat and Roughleg, of course, failed to catch Danny. My, my, such angry birds! Roughleg blamed Blacky the Crow and Blacky the Crow blamed Roughleg. Blacky declared that that was his Meadow Mouse, anyway, and he called Roughleg a robber and a lot of unpleasant names. But he took pains to do it from a safe distance. You see, Blacky had no desire for a fight with Roughleg. He knew he was no match for him. Roughleg looked at Blacky as if he were thinking of attacking him. Then he changed his mind and looked around for Danny Meadow Mouse.

Meanwhile Danny had made good his escape. By the time Blacky and Roughleg were through quarreling Danny had joined Nanny in their

Building Curtiss Robin Scale Model in "Times"-National Course

OPERATION PRINCIPLES TOLD

Students May Select One of Two Engines as Model; Ninth Lesson in Air Course for Boys

By the faculty of the National Automotive and Electrical School, Aeronautical Division, Los Angeles

This lesson will cover the installation of the power plant of the Curtiss Robin, together with an explanation of types of airplane engines now in general use, with a treatise on their principle of operation.

Most of you boys know something about an automobile engine. You know that it is a gasoline engine, that it derives its power from the combustion of a gaseous mixture and that the mixture is ignited by an electric spark.

It is well to have a general idea as to how the airplane engine differs from that of the automobile engine.

The two main differences are that the airplane engine must be capable of running at its maximum power for long periods and that the weight shall be as light as possible. The automobile engine usually runs at from 15 to 25 per cent of its maximum power and, of course, is built much heavier. The airplane engine then must be built very accurately and nothing but the very best and lightest metals used.

The principle of operation of all gasoline engines in general use are the same. Gasoline is used as a fuel vaporized by the action of the carburetor; passed through a pipe or manifold to the cylinder and by action of the valves and travel of the piston is compressed and then ignited by an electric spark. The power or pressure developed by the burning mixture forces the piston down inside the cylinder, the piston connected to crank by means of a connecting rod transmits the downward motion, or reciprocating motion, to a rotary motion necessary to apply that power to work.

All the mechanical parts necessary for the engine to function are lubricated by a high-grade of petroleum oil. The heat developed by the burning mixture is radiated off into the air by either fins cast integral with the outside of the cylinder that come into direct contact with the air; termed an air-colled engine, or by means of water circulated around the outside of the cylinder, the heat being transmitted to the water and from the water to the air by means of a radiator, through which the water circulates.

A is the piston, B the connecting rod, C the crankshaft, D the cylinder, E the exhaust valve and spring, F the intake valve and spring, G the spark plug that ignites the mixture, H the intake pipe leading from the carburetor, I the exhaust and J the cams that operate the lift of the exhaust and intake valves.

Figure 1 illustrates the piston traveling down inside the cylinder causing a displacement in the cylinder head K. The intake valve, F, operated and lifted by the Cam J, allows the gaseous mixture from the barburetor to rush in through the valve opening, filling the displacement at K caused by the downward travel of the poston A.

Figure 3 now shows the spark plug igniting the compressed mixture, both valves still closed and the piston traveling down on the power stroke.

The sequence of operation is, first, the intake stroke, in which the mixture is taken into the cylinder; second, the compression stroke, in which the mixture is compressed, completing one revolution of the crankshaft; third, the firing stroke in which the mixture is ignited by an electric spark, creating great pressure forcing the piston downward, and fourth, the exhaust stroke forcing out the burnt gases, completing the second revolution of the crankshaft ready for the repetion of the operations.

One power stroke is developed in every four strokes of the piston in two revolutions of the crankshaft. If enough power was developed in one cylinder; a single-cylinder engine; sufficient to drive an automobile or an airplane, the cylinder would be so large and the power stroke so massive that the construction of such an engine would be entirely impractical. This necessitates the use of more than one cylinder in order tha tthe power may be evenly distributed within the two revolutions of the crankshaft.

A four-cylinder engine has four power strokes in two revolutions of the crankshaft. A six-cylinder engine six power strokes, an eight-cylinder eight and a twelve-cylinder twelve power strokes in two revolutions, and so on.

The more cylinders there are the more power is divided up in the two revolutions and the more flexible becomes the transmission of the power developed. The more cylinders there are the more complicated becomes the mechanism of the engine.

This is the problem of our engineers to solve, particularly in the design of engines for aeronautical purposes. An engine with great horsepower, very light in weight, yet with a flexible transmission of the power developed. Of the many engines produced for aeronautical purposes during the past twenty-five years, there are two outstanding types that hace received the most usage and proved the most practical. One is the V-type water-cooled engine and the other is the radial type air-cooled engine. Both types are used in the Curtiss Robin airplane so that it will be interesting to know more about these types.

Figure 5 illustrates a view of the Curtiss OX-5 engine of 90x100 h.p., eight-cylinder, V-type with the cylinders set at 90 deg. It has magneto ignition and uses a Zenith carburetor. Weight dry is 375 pounds.

It is interesting to note the difference in horsepower in comparison to the difference in weight.

The radial type engine is undoubtedly becoming a ver ypopular engine.

The reason for this is that greater horsepower is developed for the same amount of weight as in a V-type, water-cooled engine. There are less parts so, consequently, less percentage of trouble. The greatst faature, however, is the fact that the power developed is centralized and concentrated on one center and one crankshaft throw as against an eight-cylinder V-type with the power concentrated on four centers and four crankshaft throws.

Figure 7 illustrates a nine-cylinder radial engine showing the various operations taking place in the cylinders and showing also how the power developed is concentrated at one center. While there is no intention to go into the design of airplane engines to any great extent, it is well for every student to have a general idea as to how an engine operates and to know a little about the problems involved.

The Curtiss Robin of which we are more interested in than any other model may use either a Curtiss OX-5 engine or the Curtiss Challenger R-600.

For our scale model it is not practical to construct a complete model of an engine, install it and then construct a suitable stream-lined cowling the same as is used on the full-sized airplane.

The best we can do under the circumstances is to carve out of soft pine the general shape of the front end of the fuselage, the engine section.

Figures 8 and 9 show a sketch of the front end and side view of the Curtiss OX-5 engine section.

Figures 10 and 11 show a front view and side view of the Curtiss Challenger.

Students may choose either engine for their model and may decide for themselves the materials to use. tI is up to the student to show his resourcefulness and ability in constructing the model as near like the airplane as possible.

HELEN'S BRIDGE DEBT

An Episode in the Married Life of Helen and Warren

By Mabel Herbert Urner

Creator of the "Helen and Warren" Characters

"HELLO! . . . Oh, Mrs. Morley . . . Oh, I see, but—"

Helen thinking fast. She DIDN'T want to play bridge! A quiet evening alone—so many things to do—

"I'd love to, Mrs. Morley," groping for a plausible evasion. "But I—I can't leave. I'm expecting a rather important phone call . . . Oh, I never thought of that! Why certainly, come right on down."

Hanging up the receiver with helpless chagrin. Her ineffectual excuse! They were coming down! Better to have gone up—

A practiced glance about the lamp-lit library. Clearing away her sewing. A tangle of velvet scraps. Bundling them into the tooled-leather waste-basket.

Straightening an errant lamp shade. Everything else in order.

Where were the cards? Rummaging in the desk drawer. Only one pack? Yes, Bobby had ruined the other—building a card-house.

Opening the rarely-used card table. That wobbly leg! Tightening the screw with the scissors when the door-bell rang.

"Awfully sweet of you to make our fourth," her tenth-floor neighbor's effusive greeting. 'I hope we aren't imposing on you?"

"Not at all. I'm all alone— Mr. Curtis had a club dinner this evening."

Murmured how-do-you-do's as Mrs. Hoyt and Miss Ingalls were introduced.

Helen ushering them into the library. Proud of its old-world charm.

Appraising her self-invited guests as they settled at the table. Miss Ingalls rather young and good-looking. Smartly dressed, but colorless.

Mrs. Hoyt! Helen shuddered inwardly. The cold, superior type she always dreaded. Middle-aged—a miraculously-preserved middle-age. Meticulously groomed—manicured, marcelled.

"Where's the other deck?" Adjusting her pince-nez, Mrs. Hoyt picked up the cards with a down-to-business air.

"Oh, I—I'm awfully sorry—my little nephew got hold of them," Helen nervously apologetic. "Will you be my partner, Mrs. Morley?"

"We'll pivot," Mrs. Hoyt taking brisk charge of the game. "May I have an ash-tray? We should have two decks. And I always use new cards."

"We play so seldom," supplying Warren's ash-tray. "If I'd known—"

Then checking her apologies. She hadn't invited them—not supposed to be prepared.

Picking up her cards. Determined to be poised, at ease.

"Your bid, Mrs. Curtis!" a sharp reminder. "Cigarette? What, you don't smoke!"

"No, thanks. I—well, one heart," a hasty glance at her half-sorted hand.

"I've already bid one spade!" tartly. "You'll have to say two hearts."

"Oh, I'm sorry—I wasn't following," crimsoning. "Then I pass."

A bad beginning. Already flustered, trying to concentrate on the plays.

"Mine for two spades? You lead, Mrs. Curtis," with crisp authority.

Lead—what? No sure trick—and her partner hadn't bid. Hesitating—then conscious of Mrs. Hoyt's impatient frown.

Play anything—Throwing out a card—no, not that! Wanting to take it back—too late. Mrs. Hoyt had snapped up the trick.

The game proceeding at a furious tempo. Helen dazed, bewildered. Playing haphazardly. Losing all count of the cards—

"That's leg for us," Mrs. Hoyt appropriating the score pad. "Forty honors. You had the Queen, Mrs. Curtis?"

"I—I don't remember." Then, at the incredulous stare, "Oh, yes, of course!"

Her deal now. Always awkward with cards. Dropping one. Exposing another.

"Count your cards!" Mrs. Hoyt's you-might-at-least-deal-right contempt.

The misdeal corrected. All set up. Waiting for Helen to bid.

"Oh, I—I pass," timidly, afraid to play a hand in this expert group.

"Dealer should always declare something," again that censorious instruction.

"I—I'm sorry," still sorting her cards. "I really can't.

Mrs. Hoyt dummy now. Trailing a wreath of smoke around the table.

Helen shrinking from her over-the-shoulder scrutiny. More and more flustered.

"You should've bid an informative one club on that hand, Mrs. Curtis," her gold pencil jotting the score. "And why save that ace of spades?"

A grilling post-mortem. Every play condemned. Bewildering technical terms.

"I'm sorry—but I can never play if anyone looks over my shoulder."

"Nonsense! You played just as badly before!" Mrs. Hoyt adjusting her glasses with arrogant finality. "Nothing but lack of concentration."

"I suppose so," hating herself for her humbleness.

Miss Ingalls her partner now. But still losing—steadily.

'What're trumps?" Then biting her lip at the withering glares.

Playing worse and worse. Poor cards. But the crushing certainty that Mrs. Hoyt would have scored—even with those hands!

How long would they play? If only Warren would come—break up the game—

"If you hadn't thrown away that Jack—" Mrs. Hoyt conducting another acrid post-mortem. "It's a fundamental principle—Oh! Oh, what's that?"

Dropping the score pad. Jumping up in shrill agitation.

"Something under the table—Oh, a CAT! Take it away—PLEASE!"

"I'm sorry she frightened you. I'll shut her up in the pantry."

Helen cuddling the outraged Pussy Purr-Mew as she carried her away.

Helen longing to stop now. But they'd think because she was losing—

Wondering if she should serve anything. Grape juice? Plenty of that cocoanut cake. But no, eager to escape that annihilating presence.

At last the game over. Mrs. Hoyt swiftly adding the total scores.

"Let's see," her pencil poised. "We're playing a half a cent a point, aren't we?"

Playing for money! Helen checked her startled exclamation. They hadn't even told her—just took it as a matter of course. Like professional gamblers!

"You owe me four-fifty, Laurette," after expert calculation. "Two seventy-five from you, Frances. And Mrs Curtis, you owe me twenty-three."

"Twenty-three dollars?" amazed Helen.

"That's what I make it," frigidly, pushing over the pad. "Would you like to add it yourself?"

"No—no, of course not!" crimsoning. "I'll get my purse."

Into the bedroom. Tremulously snatching her bag from the dressing-table.

Twenty-three dollars! To force her into such a game! A wretched evening—and out twenty-three dollars!

Counting the bills. Only twelve? Why, where—Oh, yes, that C. O. D.—

Powdering over her indignant flush. Achieving an outward composure. Hurrying back.

"I'm awfully sorry—I've only twelve dollars. But I'll give you a check."

"Quite all right," replacing the Russian cigarettes in her glittering purse.

Helen fumbling in the desk for her checkbook. Opening the leather folder. Only stubs!

Then she remembered. That last check to the Women's Animal League—her favorite charity. And the had neglected to get a new book!

"I—I'm so sorry!" flaming red. "I'd forgotten I hadn't any checks."

"Oh, I see!" Mrs. Hoyt's sarcastic incredulity.

"Please take these twelve dollars," controlling her resentment. "If you'll give me your address I'll mail you the rest."

"I think I have a card," mollified by the tangible bills. "Yes, here's one. I'm sure you won't forget."

A banging door. The clatter of a stick on the hall table.

Warren!

Stalking in now. How wonderful he looked in his dinner coat! Big, prosperous. Pride-restoring!

Helen's poise returning as she introduced him.

"Bridge, eh?" a careless glance at the card-table. Don't let me break it up."

"We've just stopped. Dear, I've lost a lot—I owe Mrs. Hoyt twenty-three dollars and I've only twelve. Will you give her the rest?"

"Want eleven?" promptly pulling out hus wallet. Then, with a good-humored grin, "Guess Helen's game could stand brushing up."

"There're so few really scientific players. Thank you," Mrs. Hoyt accepting the crisp new bills. "Most women just won't concentrate."

Then consulting her watch. Starting the chorus of gushing farewells.

Helen keeping a fixed smile until the door closed after them.

"Oh, that awful woman!" flying back to the library. "I was never so furious!"

"What about?" Warren lazily stretched in his arm-chair. "Nothing to get het up over. What if you did lose a few bucks?"

"It's not that!" crumpling the disastrous score. "But her attitude—that hateful, superior air! And she acted as if I didn't intend to pay her!"

"Looks like a regular shark, all right," stuffing his pipe. "Bet she bawled you out plenty for makin' fool plays."

"If you could've heard her! She did nothing but criticise. I had wretched hands, too," clearing the card table. "And I didn't even know we were playing for money! Half a cent a point—isn't that a lot?"

"Trimmed you proper, eh?" striking an obdurate match. "Probably thought you deserved it. Those hard-boiled card-jugglers haven't much use for duffers."

"She said I ought to take lessons. Here, dear," emptying the overflowing ash-tray. "I wonder—maybe I should."

"No you don't! No lessons for you!" explosively. "I'd rather square your losses the little you play than have you turn bridge-fiend. Those dames get hard as nails—look at the hatched-faced Hoyt! Now no auction expert for mine—your dumb Dora game suits me!"

CARE OF THE BODY

method of "taking something," the laxative, pill, castor oil, or other form of commercial patented compound which is supposed to have a laxative effect, but by means of water taken internally through the rectum and stomach.

Then stop putting in more food. Give the body an opportunity to disengorge all its wastes.

When you suffer from chronic migraine headaches, when you have the regular fortnightly or weekly headache or the headache that sometimes comes with the menstrual function, with bilious attacks or with periodic stomach "upsets," the logical thing to do is to stop eating. Go on fruit juices for a day or two or three. Clean out and you will find that the headache will, more or less, take care of itself.

On the other hand, there is the other type of headache—the nervous headache, the eye-strain headache, the headache involved with the muscular contraction of the neck, and so on.

For this type of headache we are accustomed to taking aspirin, bromo-Seltzer and other types of drugs. These medicines are deadly, destructive and injurious. Sooner or later they are bound to work havoc on the human body.

The Urinary System

Q.: How do liquids taken into the stomach reach the kidneys and bladder.

A.: The stomach and intestines are lined with a series of vessels known as lacteals. All foodstuffs are liquefied and mixed with the digestive juices.

When everything taken into the digestive system—solids and liquids—is reduced to the right consistency by digestion and dilution, it is absorbed into these lacteals by a process known as osmosis. From the lacteal system the dissolved foodstuff passes into the portal circulation through the liver. From there it is taken out and passed to the heart via another system of blood vessels. From there it goes to the lungs for aeration with the oxygen of the air—then back to the heart and then to all the cells of the body.

The blood then goes through the renal arteries into the kidneys. Every minute, approximately four times the kidney weight in blood is received. The kidney filters the blood, taking one part to be discharged through the ureters into the bladder. The other part is permitted to go back into the blood circulation.

The kidneys are not reservoirs for fluid. Very little uriniferous substance is in the kidneys. Only that portion which is in the process of transmission is ever found in them. The bladder is the reservoir holding the urine.

The kidneys pass it through two ureters into the bladder. The bladder has but one opening—the urethra.

Arthritis

Q.: Will you please say a few words concerning arthritis?

A.: Arthritis, or inflammation of the joints, can be stopped. It is a disease of the blood in which one has been robbed of the vitamines and mineral salts.

The joints enlarge because of the irritating inflammation.

The degenerative process can be stopped. The devastation of the disease can be prevented from including unaffected joints.

The diet is the keystone on which the cure must be built. The acid-producing meatstuffs, coffee, white sugar and white-flour products are the bane of the modern dietary and must be excluded. Salt and its associated irritant condiments must not be taken.

The diet must consist basically of fruits, vegetables, nuts, whole-grain breadstuffs and milk.

Hydrotherapy and the work achieved in the various hot springs are of value for relief. However, the diet is the main thing.

Once achieved, enlarged joints can never be reduced.

I have a special leaflet on the subject of arthritis. If you are interested, send me a stamped, self-addressed envelope and I shall be glad to mail it to you.

GET THIS STRAIGHT

Many thousands of people suffer from gastro-intestinal ills. From these spring most of the more serious and fatal maladies. Intelligent men and women ask: It is inevitable?

Rettger and Cheplin, brilliant bacteriologists of Yale University, have convincingly demonstrated the remarkable efficiency developed by two carbohydrates—Lactose and Dextrin—in combatting and controlling the malevolent bacteria which infest the intestinal tract.

Further research has proved that the full efficiency of carbohydrates cannot be utilized without the presence of a sufficiency of Vitamin B. This can only be secured by the administration of definite amounts of the standardized vitamin.

AMYLACTONE and VITAMIN B

ARE YOU SUFFERING from painful affliction of the feet, broken down arches, callouses, bunions, etc.?

Ready-made Arch Supports are an unsatisfactory makeshift because everyone's foot is different and the displaced bones, enlarged joints and deranged ligaments complicate matters still further. We make supports from carefully prepared plaster of Paris casts and alter them to accommodate changes brought about by the wearing of the supports. In order to give relief and lasting satisfaction it is imperative that the feet be restored to as normal a shape as possible. We have an extensive experience in the correction of flat-feet, broken down arches and other deformities of the feet, and are able to promise our clients comfort and relief in every case.

It is not necessary to wear clumsy shoes with our supports; on the contrary, we often restore daintiness of appearance to feet badly deformed and unsightly.

DOUBLE GUARANTEE

As originator and distributor of the Yodina rectal treatment:

FIRST: I agree to return initial purchase price if you are not satisfied with results.

SECOND: I guarantee that it contains no mercury, no zinc, nor arsenic, or any other harmful ingredients.

Prominent Specialists Endorse Yodina Discovery

The above double guarantee is published so that every reader of this paper who suffers from any form of hemorrhoids will positively give the Yodina Treatment a trial.

Relief in 5 Minutes

No matter how bad, nor how long you have had piles, hemorrhoids or rectal ulcers—quick, safe, certain relief is now assured by this discovery of the specialist, Dr. H. H. Luntz.

The Yodina pile treatment has already been used extensively in the famous Lindlahr Sanitarium, as well as in other well-known institutions. The results from Yodina certainly must be unusually good if so many doctors write in its praise. Dr. Oscar Lee of Washington, for instance, calls Yodina "a remarkable treatment for patients afflicted with all manner of hemorrhoids—internal, protruding, itching, etc—with quick results."

Hemorrhoids Dry Up

Dr. A. W. Herr of Cleveland, formerly physician at the Battle Creek Sanitarium, says: "Yodina suppositories are the best I have ever used. They seem to dry up the piles. And they are perfectly harmless. Even though you have bleeding hemorrhoids, insert one suppository at bedtime and you will feel much better in the morning."

The London Health Center and other internationally known health institutions laud Yodina.

Don't wait. Try Yodina—it is soothing, healing and in time will help abolish all forms of piles. It induces comfort and a normal condition.

CLIP THIS AS A REMINDER

Take this to your druggist or health food store. Leave $1 as deposit in full payment of a Yodina treatment. If, however, Yodina does not bring desired results, bring back partly used package and get your deposit back. Mail orders filled.

Where did we find ourself on a warm April morning but in a little town that has no policeman.

We Missed the Presence of a Policeman

Nor a jail, even. It is a little town off from any railway, and you have to leave the high road to find it. And it is down in a hollow of the hills like a red apple in the bottom of a basket.

It was good to find a town like that. And we spent a long, happy day there.

It was at the heel of the day, and just as we were turning our thoughts homeward, that we asked where the policeman had been keeping himself. Which it was then that the people told us they have no policeman, and never had.

It is a town where everybody behaves himself. And if the same rule prevailed in all other towns all over the world there would be no such person as a policeman anywhere.

Yet, we told the people of this little town we are talking about, that we thought they ought to have a policeman if only to make at least one man in the world happy at that kind of a job.

Get yourselves a policeman, we said to the people of the little town. Dress him up in a stunning, gorgeous uniform. Give him a gold star to pin on his coat. Equip him with a club. Then tell him to enjoy life.

Imagine the lot of a policeman in a town where he would never have to holler "hey, you, there" at anybody from one year's end to the other; never have to shoot at anybody; never stick anyone in jail.

All he would have to do would be to walk around and look grand, gossip with the women, tell funny stories, attend church suppers and play ball with the kids.

A policeman whose lot was so cast would be like the unused presence of a Salem ducking board for witches, a whipping post in a Methodist camp meeting, or as impossible as a riot in Pasadena. It would be a reminder of the absurd crudities of a dark age long past.

The folks in the little town have promised to think the matter over and to give it careful consideration.

A superstition might be correctly defined as an error of the mind. And, while an error of the mind is, as a rule, a handicap to a man, there are exceptions. There are a number of superstitions that serve a useful purpose.

Errors of the Mind Both Good and Bad

Also it seems to be a fact of history that many great men were superstitious. Caesar was superstitious. And so was Napoleon. You would be amazed at the number of otherwise practical men of the present day who consult fortune tellers regularly.

It is well known that Julius Caesar was so great that he conquered the world and dragged it in the dust, tied to his chariots. But he was so superstitious that he refused to go to battle one morning because he had put his right shoe on first instead of putting his left shoe on first.

Now, there is what we call a good superstition. Because the truth was that if Caesar was so fuzzy minded that morning that he put his right shoe on first instead of putting his left shoe on first, the way he was told to do by his mammy ever since he was knee high to a grasshopper, why, it proved that he was in no shape mentally to go into a fight against an army that had maybe a thousand elephants ready to tramp him into a grease spot.

Well, we were talking all this over with a man of the Synagogue, lately—a man who was, like ourself, born among the old blue hills of Penn's Woods.

And he was telling us how once when he was a boy Back Yonder on a farm that his great great grandfather got hold of by means of a grant from the Government that the folks in that place cut down all the locust trees they had because they were told locust trees drew lightning.

By gollies, if it were true that locust trees draw lightning we wouldn't blame anyone for cutting them down. We are more scared of one streak of lightning than a hundred earthquakes. We could crawl in a rat hole if a lightning storm were to overtake us. That's all we ever had against Penn's Woods—the lightning storms.

But, it is ridiculous to suppose that locust trees draw lightning any more than any other trees. So, here, on the other hand is a bad superstition. It is a sin to cut down a locust tree.

This Penn's Woodser made us homesick as he talked. He spoke of "the sweet scented air," made so by locust bloom. And he said that away out here, his head grown gray, he can still imagine he smells the sweet honey locusts his childhood knew.

Dang it all, that's the trouble with meeting a man from Penn's Woods. He is sure to talk about the blue hills and the shining rivers that wind their way to the sea. And the locust bloom of Spring will come then again to our nostrils. And we get so danged homesick we could most die.

The way the thought happened to come to our mind was that there were two items of news in the papers on the same day, one concerning the Prince of Wales and the other concerning a son of the President of the United States.

Sons of Presidents and Sons of Kings

The first news item related that the son of a King had taken up his residence in a palace reserved for his special use. He had just returned from a voyage on a battleship manned by a vast crew of government paid sailors and marines. And there was a lot in the paper about the intricate organization of the palace in which the Prince is to live.

The other news item, brief and unobtrusive, mentioned casually the fact that a son of the President of the United States had secured a job with an aviation company and had rented a modest bungalow in a little town where he is now domiciled. He pays his own bills and receives no stipend of any nature whatever from his government. In other words, he has no other standing than that of the son of any citizen of the Republic.

And so it would appear that there is a wide gulf between the theory of republican forms of government and monarchical forms..

Also it is worth thinking about that the President of the United States has more power in his hands than all the monarchs of Europe combined.

This thing of the heriditary rule of kings, has, it is true, slumped into mere form. A king is a figurehead now, and not much more.

Once a year, Doctor John Willis Baer of Pasadena and America gives a "Stag Dinner." This annual function has become famous, and it is a great honor to be invited. It is a foregathering of intellectuals and the intelligentsia.

There Are Too Many Proofs to Doubt

But, John Willis has a kind heart, notwithstanding that he has so many highbrow friends and runs a big bank in the town where he lives. And so, danged if he didn't invite us to the dinner. And we went in state in Henry VIII all dolled up in a boiled shirt and a claw-hammer coat.

At the table where we sat while the viands were being consumed the talk drifted to the age-old question: "Is there a future life?"

One of the seven or eight guests at the particular round table at which we sat called attention to a debate between Clarence Darrow, the noted Chicago lawyer, and others on this very subject—a subject that has been argued over since the world began, we guess. Darrow asserts that when you die you are dead, and that's all there is to it. He laughs the idea of a future life to scorn.

But, there was another man at the table who asserted that while this question has been open to guesswork heretofore, the matter has been scientifically settled during later years.

He says that scientists who have grouped themselves together for the study of this question have today in their possession more than ten thousand authenticated instances of the reappearance of persons on this earth after they had passed through what we call death.

Assuredly, the grave not only does not end all—it is really only the beginning of life. We pass through the portals of the shadows to another existence where we shall meet again those whom we have loved and lost—another existence free from the burdens, the worries, the pain, the sorrow and the care of this life.

This has been the faith of the ages. And now that faith has been amply supported by scientific investigation.

We were asked in the Synagogue if we know that there are three sides to every argument.

We answered and said no. We said we know there are two sides to an argument, but we never heard that there are three.

There Are Three Sides to Every Argument

Yes, Conductor, asserted the man who was talking to us, there are three sides—your side, my side and the right side.

Well, sir, it never struck us that way before, but when we came to think it over we couldn't help but feel that the man was more than half right.

Because when two persons have an argument over something, each one contending he has the right of it, the way it often turns out is that they were both wrong.

Also, it is a fact that argument is quite the most futile thing in the world. It seldom, if ever, settles anything. What are wars but arguments? And wars never settle anything.

The thing is for each human soul to strive for whatever is truth, and then to be happy and content in the knowledge gained. If your neighbor has other views and convictions, let him have them. Don't argue with him.

The Call of Motherhood

I long for you today, my sons, my daughters,
Brave sons, and daughters fair as morning's light,
I'd guard you from the world's tempestuous waters,
I'd shut your eyes from all that was not right.
I hold my arms out-stretched for your dear arms;
My arms, that ache to hold you close once more.
So oft they've stilled you from the false alarms
Of infancy's wild fancies; as of yore
I'd sing our lullabies with tender care;
Old times crooned to the young in ages past.
I'd tell of Goldilocks and the big bear,
And how they're all made happy at the last,
Oh, Joy! They've heard my call, my sons, my daughters.
I hold my children in my arms once more!
My ears are filled with sound like rustling waters,
My eyes with happy blinding tears are sore.
Gone are the somber clouds of fear and sorrow,
Like mist that melts before the sun's warm rays.
My heart which longed some memories to borrow,
Is satisfied with this, my king of days.
The sun shines on my Dear Ones in their splendor,
Forgotten are all cares; each with the other
Vies to give happiness, so sweet so tender.
I feel a queen upon her throne—their Mother.

CARE OF THE BODY

to relieve a long-continued contraction.

The dangers from muscular specialization in occupation, sports, music or writing lie in the permanence of distortion.

Some time ago I had a locomotive fireman as a patient. His forearm was completely ossified and united with his upper arm. For over twenty years he had been shoveling coal into a locomotive and maintained the crouched position of the elbow in handling the shovel for hours and hours steadily each day.

A letter carrier recently came to me. He had been carrying mail for Uncle Sam for over twenty-five years and had a very decided lateral curvature of the spine. The slight hunch of the shoulders that mailmen usually display from supporting the mail bag over a period of years produced a well defined and easily demonstrable curvature.

The logical thing for him to have done was to have habituated himself to carrying his bag on the other shoulder, alternating either month by month or year by year.

A baseball pitcher shows a very marked difference between the spine, shoulders and back of the right side as against the left side. His pitching specialty induces a greater muscular activity of one group of structures over the other.

Occupational curvatures of this kind are very common.

Stenographers, typists, book-keepers and those who bend over their work considerably come under this category.

Persons who read a great deal develop curvatures and lung ailments.

It is a very easy and simple thing to sit upright, yet at the same time to do one's work satisfactorily.

Never stoop down to read. Bring the book up to you. On your reading table you should have a book rest which may be raised or lowered, according to your vision. It is easy to make and comparatively inexpensive. The up-to-date libraries usually have them.

Simple precautions of this type will prevent an accumulation of anatomical distortions and thus prevent disease in later years.

How to Avoid Typhoid Fever?

Q.: What is the best way to keep from getting typhoid fever, especially during the late summer when drinking water gets bad?

A.: This is a very good question, especially as summer comes on earlier here in California than it does in the East where they consider summer as nothing more than July, August and September.

It is true that drinking-water is much more liable to bacterial invasion, corruption or pollution in summer than in winter largely because bacteria will grow faster when the weather is warm than when it is cold.

A bacteria-laden water is a potential typhoid water.

It is for this reason that the health boards pay such particular attention to the bacterial cleanliness of water. Chemicals are added in order to get rid of the bacteria.

The safest thing for you to do during the summer months is to get bottled water or to boil the city water. When you boil it, decant the top half and throw the lower half away. As a general rule we can then get a water nearly as good as distilled water.

Headaches and Drugs

Q.: If you do not recommend aspirin, bromo-Seltzer or other antiheadache medicines, what method may one use to stop a headache?

A.: Let us see whether drugless measures are as effective as medical measures in overcoming a simple ailment of this type.

What is a headache?

In the first place, there is no such disease as headache. It is a symptom. It is the red flag of danger—pain, telling us that something is wrong in some other part of the body, inducing discomfort in the head.

The thing we are primarily concerned with is the cause—not the effect.

In many cases we find headache coming from an overloaded stomach and intestines.

The logical thing to do is to clean house—not by the commonly accepted

BUNIONS

WE have invented a day and night appliance for bunions and overlapped toes, and we have every reason to believe it will cure nine cases out of ten.

The night splints are worn while sleeping and the muscles are relaxed, to stretch the contracted tendons that distort the toes and cause this hideous deformity.

The day reducing appliance shields the bunion, hides the deformity and holds the toes in proper alignment and the normal traction for the bones will be re-established and in a short time the bunion disappears completely and forever.

Stomach Gas

Q.: What would be the quickest way to eliminate severe gas pains around the heart, caused by a cencerous stomach?

A.: The answer is contained in the question. It cannot be done until the problem of cancer is solved. This is an entirely different question. I have written on the subject of cancer and others. I would refer the writer of this question to my articles on cancer.

Adhesions

Q.: Is one able to correct adhesions by local treatment and exercise?

A.: There is no other way.

By adhesions is meant that two surfaces adhere together. They invariably are the result of surgery.

When surgery is performed for breaking up the adhesions, the doctor merely gets into the abdomen with a blunt instrument and separates the tissues which stick together.

There are no adhesions without surgery or other injury. Healthy tissues will not adhere. Diseased and injured tissue will.

If you have not had surgery, don't delude yourself with the belief that the pain you are experiencing in the abdomen is due to adhesions. It is not. It is more than likely due to sickness.

Even post-operative adhesions respond very nicely to good manipulative treatment.

Electrical treatment is also highly beneficial, breaking up the adhesions quite effectively.

All manipulative work should be taken with moderate exercise.

If you are suffering from adhesions, it would be a very much wiser policy for you to try six months to a year of a combination of such electrical treatment, manipulative technique and exercise than to resort to surgery.

Muscular Congestion

Question: What kind of exercises, diet and treatment would you advise for muscular congestion in the muscles of the back—strain caused from playing the violin?

Answer: I am answering this question because of its value for many occupations.

Industry is now so specialized that millions of men perform a limited muscular activity, highly specialized and restricted to a very small group of muscles.

The violin player is an excellent illustration of this specialization. His head is bent to one side. One shoulder is raised higher than the other. He is in a strained and abnormal position. If he practices many hours, the strain becomes accentuated.

From a strain we have contraction. From a contraction we have congestion. From congestion we have pain—the neuritis or rheumatism.

Piano players have a form of cramps in the fingers. Writers, clerks and others who use the pen extensively often get "writer's cramp."

All of these are occupational contractions.

It is not a diet question. It is not an exercise question. It is largely relaxation and counterpoise. Every muscle in the body has its countermuscle. For instance, we have flexors which draw in the bony attachments and extensors which draw apart the bony attachments.

A group of muscles should not be used for any purpose—occupationally or for exercise—without also using the opposing muscles.

The strain of posture in an abnormal position is relieved only with quick, free motion.

The violin player compelled to stay in an abnormal position for many hours can secure almost immediate relief by calisthenic exercises involving the shoulder muscles of the affected part and the opposing parts. Complete relaxation should always come following exercise.

Relaxation prevents congestion. Freedom from congestion means freedom from pain. Two or three minutes three or four times per day are usually enough

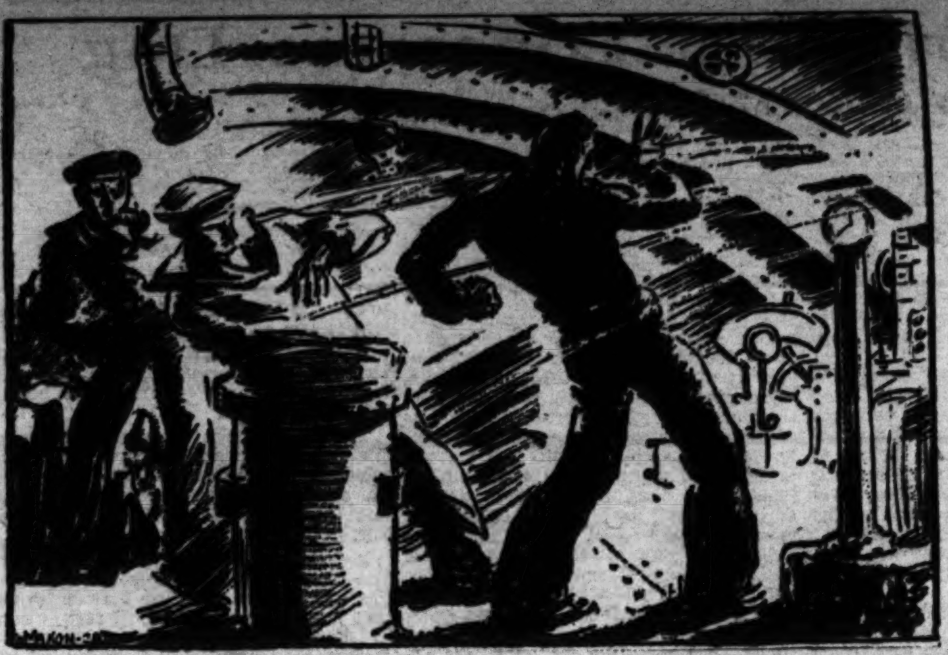
Mystery Ships!

By Captain Harold Auten V.C., D.S.C., R.N.R.



Thus perished U 68, one of the latest model German submarines, armed with a four-inch gun, a twenty-two pounder, eleven torpedoes, and with an action radius of about 11,000 miles as an independent unit.

IN SEPTEMBER, 1915, I was employed at Devonport Dockyard on fitting out trawlers and drifters for patrol duties. The Germans were laying mines outside the harbors and along the routes, and it was necessary to press all sorts of vessels into service.

Coming into the barracks late one evening, I was informed that an appointment had come through for me, as First Lieutenant of a ship called the Zylpha.

On looking through the navy list, I could find no such vessel, and although I inquired of all and sundry could not find out what sort of vessel she was. What was the Zylpha, and where was she? There was something out of the way about this unexpected appointment to a ship that apparently did not exist. Afterward the secretary to the commodore of the barracks sent for me. I went over to his office and found out that I was one of six whose names appeared on a secret list which had just come through from the Admiralty. One curious instruction appeared on the list, we were to proceed and take up our new appointment in plain clothes. It was undoubtedly some special service and the mysterious way in which it was being planned promised excitement and action, for which I was eager.

I noticed that among the names on the list was that of Lieut. Gordon Campbell. He was at that time in command of a small destroyer, called the Bittern, attached to the Plymouth local port defense flotilla, I observed that he was to command a ship called the Lodorer, which was subsequently known as the Farnborough and later as H.M.S.Q.5. At this time, none of us knew upon what work we were to be employed, or why we had been selected for this duty. The name of Rear Admiral Gordon Campbell, V.C., D.S.Q., as he now is, will always be intimately associated with the brilliant record of these Q ships and although he was comparatively unknown in September, 1915, it was not long before he entirely justified his selection.

To Rear Admiral Campbell belongs the distinction of being the first "mystery V.C.," the decoration being awarded to him for his brilliant exploits with the Farnborough. It was on September 23, 1915 that Lieut. Campbell was appointed to the Lodorer, a tramp steamer of some 2050 tons, and she was sent by the Admiralty to Devonport dockyard to be converted into a special service ship to fight the increasing submarine menace.

It was not until the end of October or early November that she sailed from Plymouth on her perilous quest. Her armament at that time consisted of three twelve pounder guns. At a later date, an additional 2-12" and two 6" guns were added.

She went out on her strange cruise with none of the panoply of war. The officers and crew were dressed in old dirty garments, and the ship looked for all the world like an ordinary old tramp, carelessly handled and anything but ready for a fight.

From remarks I have heard expressed by the general public, it would appear that many people hold the view that as soon as a Q Boat put her nose outside of port, she started mopping up U Boats. This was by no means the case. I know of only one instance in which a Q Boat got into touch with a German submarine within an hour or so of leaving the harbor, and on that occasion it was the German who did the mopping up.

It was the fate of the Farnborough to tramp the ocean for six weary months of winter and early spring before she first tasted blood. Day in and day out she cruised about in the war zone and only those who have experienced bad winters off the south and west coast of Ireland can appreciate what this means. Bitter cold, a continual gale, driving rain and sleet that cuts like needles, numb hands struggling with stiff ice-sheathed ropes, high angry seas, on which the little tramp pitched and rolled constantly as she ploughed along.

In addition to all this there was the danger of the submarine, the terror of the sea. An unseen periscope, the swift trail of a torpedo and the Farnborough would be sinking almost before they knew it, leaving them adrift on the merciless Atlantic possibly for days, with starvation and worse staring them in the face. The long strain of waiting in the Atlantic winter began to tell on the nerves of the men. They wondered if the longed-for action would ever come. And then very suddenly it happened.

Early one spring morning, after a tiring night on the bridge, Capt. Campbell went down to the saloon for some coffee. He had just returned to the bridge when the officer of the watch suddenly reported. "There's a torpedo coming right for us, sir." There was a tremble of excitement in his voice, as he watched, fascinated, the rack of white bubbles that grew swiftly across the sea. The torpedo passed just in front of the Farnborough and the men on the bridge, tensed for the shock of the explosion, breathed again.

Capt. Campbell sent the excited and eager crew to stations and held the Farnborough on her course as if he had not seen the torpedo. A few minutes later the submarine broke surface about 800 yards astern and then maneuvered on to the ship's port quarter, where she fired a shell across the latter's bows and then partly submerged. It was the warning to the crew to get off the ship. Capt. Campbell stopped his engines and the panic party, consisting of spare ratings to represent the merchant ship's crew, were ordered to leave the ship. The gun crews and officers lay concealed at their posts on the vessel, which had lost its headway and was rolling heavily in the swells.

The submarine, after the abandon ship party had pulled clear, came closer and carefully examined the Farnborough. Not a human being was visible, and every soul on board was lying absolutely still, awaiting instructions from their captain, who was controlling from a corner of the bridge, where he lay watching through specially prepared observation slits.

The submarine commander evidently made up his mind that the ship was deserted, and proceeded to come closer. It was their habit when possible to save the precious torpedoes and sink a ship by firing shots along her water line. This apparently was what the submarine intended.

It was the Farnborough's opportunity, for which she had waited for six weary months. The submarine drew closer and closer, with the waves breaking over her slim black hull and several of the crew standing around the gun on the deck. She came within range, into the trap, and still the commander of the Farnborough held his fire.

It must have seemed an eternity to the concealed gun crews. But at last came the crisp command. Down fell the disguises, the guns were righted, and shell after shell was poured into the submarine. She was rapidly holed and slowly began to sink. Capt. Campbell immediately turned the Farnborough and went full speed over the spot, dropping a large depth charge. This shook the wounded U Boat so badly that she appeared again on the surface about ten yards away in an almost perpendicular position, the whole of her forward end as well as the conning tower being out of the water. A large hole was observed in her bow. Capt. Campbell again opened fire and put five or six shells into the base of the conning tower. As the U Boat went down for the last time the Farnborough steamed over the spot and dropped two more depth charges. Behind her two great columns of water rose high into the air with a dull shock, as the tons of water dropped back into the sea, churning the surface for yards. As the sea subsided, large quantities of oil and bits of wood covered the water. Of the men who had so lately been closed in the steel shell of the submarine, working her man-made engines and surrounded by countless tons of water, there was not a trace.

Thus perished U-68, one of the latest model German submarines, armed with four-inch gun, a twenty-two pounder, eleven torpedoes, and with an action radius of about 11,000 miles as an independent unit.

For this action, Lieut. Commander Gordon Campbell, as he then was, was promoted to commander, and awarded the D.S.O., suitable decorations being given to a number of his crew.

On September 17, 1917, Commander Campbell, who was still in command of the Farnborough, known at this time as the Q-5, again sank a submarine under circumstances which, although not published at the time, sent a wave of intense curiosity throughout the British nation when he was awarded the Victoria Cross for an unstated action, and thus became known as the "Mystery V.C."

He was cruising on that date, off the southwest coast of Ireland. Germany, at the beginning of February, 1917, had declared an unrestricted warfare on merchant shipping. The orders given to the submarine commanders and signed by Admiral Bauer of the German Adon collapse, sun baths should not be taken.

CARE OF THE BODY

While I am on the subject, I want to give you a few precautions to follow when taking a sun bath.

First, remember that the only importance of the sun's ray is in the ultra-violet substance that comes in contact with the body. You do not necessarily want the heat. Therefore, I would say that the body should be kept cool. On very hot days, sponge the body. Take a cold shower. Let someone turn the garden-hose on you if necessary. But keep the body cool.

Next, tie a cold cloth around the forehead and neck. Keep it on during the entire time that you are taking the sun bath.

It is a good plan to distribute the time in which you are exposed—one-half to the front and one-half to the back.

Finally, if you are a blonde, take less time for a sun bath. If you are a brunette, you can stand more. Start the exposure with one or two minutes. Don't start with twenty minutes or an hour. You will get sunburnt. Work up until you are taking as much as you like or as much as you have built up tolerance for—no more.

Swollen Ankles

Q.: What is the cause and cure for swollen ankles?

A.: Dropsical oedema is the commonest cause for swollen, puffed ankles. Sometimes, however, the abnormal pressure of ill-fitting shoes may be responsible for the swelling. In other cases, there is an infiltration of fluids that occurs in the late afternoon or evening, usually as the result of intra-pelvic pressure from a uterus in an abnormal position, intestines that have prolapsed, or as the result of the presence of tumors.

The cause should be ascertained before the effect can be remedied.

Diabetes

Q.: What do you consider the cause of diabetes? Is it true that the insulin which is lacking from the pancreas is the responsible factor for diabetes?

A.: I do not question the fact that insulin is lacking in the average case of diabetes. But how did the insulin disappear from the pancreas?

In reality, diabetes is a compound ailment. It is due to a deficiency of insulin in the pancreas and to the incompetency of the kidneys to discharge the normal quota of toxic poisons.

In the background of diabetes—even though the disease itself is manifested by a large quantity of sugar being thrown out through the urine, we do not find the lack of insulin as the primary cause. It is the incidental cause—the main cause being a blood stream which has been polluted by the diet, hygiene, shocks, worries, fears and similar depletions to which we have subjected ourselves.

If the body resources were not drained through these elements, the insulin would remain in the pancreas and diabetes would be impossible.

I can frankly say that the tremendous consumption of huge quantities of meats, proteins, coffee and white-flour products are just as much responsible for the presence of diabetes as is the consumption of large quantities of refined sugar.

Even though the disease manifests itself in the form of an unusual sugar metabolism, nevertheless the original cause of the diabetes lies in the toxemia, the autointoxication, and the diet and hygiene habits which preceded the breakdown of the pancreas and kidneys.

Consequently, in the dieetitc treatment of diabetes it is not sufficient merely to eliminate the sugars and and starches from the dietary. We must arrange the dietary so that there will be no further irritating substances coming in contact with the delicate function of either the kidneys or the pancreas.

This involves dietetic and hygienic reform all down the line, exactly the same as in any other depleting disease.

Merely because the doctor prohibits you from consuming sugars and starches is no justification for your free indul-

[illegible] stated that every Allied ship was to be attacked without delay. The order further stated that the object of this form of warfare was to force England to make peace and thereby to decide the whole war quickly. The secret instructions proceeded to state, "Our object is to cut England off from traffic by sea as far as possible," and that submarines were to take up stations near the English coast where the routes converged, and where divergence was impossible.

The Farnborough was plugging along across an empty sea, and the lookouts were keeping an alert watch on all points of the horizon. It was about ten o'clock in the forenoon when the man on the bridge saw the ghostly track of a torpedo speeding through the water toward the ship. Capt. Campbell had previously given instructions in his order book as follows: "Should the officer of the watch see a torpedo coming, he is to increase or decrease speed, as necessary, to insure it hitting." He had deliberately premeditated the sacrifice, which might easily cost the lives of everyone on the ship, with the object of more completely deceiving the submarine and making sure of his prey. He had warned all his ship's company of his intention, and had given every man an opportunity to leave the ship before he carried this into effect. So loyal however, was the crew that not a man left the ship.

Suddenly there was a terrific explosion, the ship listed heavily and trembled as if under the blow of a mighty sledge hammer. Debris was scattered over the deck and the men aboard were thrown violently off their feet. The torpedo had struck abreast of No. 3 hold, wounding an officer, and making a huge hole in the side of the ship.

The crew was already going to stations. When the ship was struck Capt. Campbell stopped the engines and sent away the panic party in two life boats. His gun crew lay down at their positions on board and the captain controlled from one corner of the bridge.

Almost immediately the chief engineer reported through the voice pipe that the engine room was filling rapidly. He was told to remain at his post as long as possible and to take every precaution to secure his boilers against an explosion. When it became impossible for him to remain below any longer he was to creep up and hide himself.

The ship was beginning to settle. With such a huge hole in her side she could not long stay afloat, and must certainly have gone down very quickly had it not been for the cargo of wood, bolted in her hold, which was carried by every Q Boat. This kept her afloat long after she would ordinarily have gone to the bottom.

The panic boats pulled away to a position upon the ship's beam. Observing this through her periscope the submarine surfaced 200 yards off on the starboard quarter. She immediately submerged again, and cautiously came past the ship on the starboard side, only about fifteen yards away, and within ten yards of the boats. She was so close that Capt. Campbell said afterward he could see the whole shape of the submarine below the water quite distinctly.

Now came the real test of the Q Ship's commander. Was this the moment that he should open fire and trust all to a wild gamble, or should he wait, although his ship was sinking, and trust that the submarine would surface and come to the boats to obtain the ship's papers? For Capt. Campbell the temptation to open fire must have been almost unbearable but on carefully weighing the chances, he decided to hold his hand. To a man lying and watching under those circumstances, and having to hold his hand, the minutes as they slowly ticked past must have seemed an eternity. The submarine passed along and then went close around the Farnborough's bows and finally broke surface about 300 yards distant on the port bow. Shortly afterward the U-83, as she was, came along the surface past the port side, continuing her scrutiny with less caution than she had observed previously. Capt. Campbell, concealed on the bridge, was waiting only until all his guns could bear, and as soon as the enemy came into this arc of fire, he gave the order to let go and open fire.

The first shot hit the conning tower and killed the German captain. The surprise of the German submarine's crew was instantaneous, and most effective, for they never recovered from the shock, but remained on the surface while the Q-5's guns smashed the hull to pieces.

Over forty rounds were fired into her, and she finally sank with her conning tower open and her crew coming out. The Q-5's life boat went immediately to their assistance and were in time to pick up one officer and one man.

After this successful action, Capt. Campbell had time to inspect his stricken ship. The engine room and stoke holds and No. 3 and No. 4 holds were rapidly filling, and the ship was sinking by the stern. He decided to send a wireless signal for assistance, which was answered by the sloop Buttercup, which took the Farnborough in tow.

But there appeared to be no chance of saving her, and Capt. Campbell sent the following message to Admiral Sir Lewis Bayly, Commander-in-Chief at Queenstown. "Q-5 slowly sinking, respectfully wishes you good-by."

However, although she was in such a battered condition the Buttercup and later the Laburnum managed to beach her at Berehaven.

The Farnborough, otherwise known as the Q-5, had fought and met with both adversity and submarine, and had won on each occasion. Sound seamanship and the timber in her holds had saved her.

For this action, as previously stated, the King was graciously pleased to approve of the grant of the Victoria Cross to Commander Campbell, in recognition of his conspicuous gallantry, consummate coolness and skill in command of one of His Majesty's ships in action. Thus was the first "Mystery V.C." won in the war.

THE $300 PARSNIP

By James J. Montague

Even the best of parsnips are not worth $300, which was what this one cost us.

WE HAD the parsnip for dinner last night, it was very good. The time to eat parsnips is in the spring. Up to a certain point they improve with age. But even the best of parsnips are not worth $300, which was what this one cost us. Any vegetable dealer would have sold us one just as good for fifteen cents. The difference between $300 and 15 cents is $299.85. That was a little too much to pay for a fragmentary part of a single dinner. But this is a world in which one lives and learns.

The idea of a garden which enveloped the family last spring came from various sources. Its principal stimulus grew out of a rooted belief in the minds of my wife and children that outdoor exercise would do me good. I pointed out that golf is not exactly an indoor sport. They countered with the indisputable assertion that golf is expensive. I could get the exercise just as well conducting a garden, an occupation which not only would be free from cost, but would actually pay a profit in reduced prices for food. After they had sent for the catalogues and persuaded me to read them I, too, became a garden enthusiast. After all what was the use of having a yard large enough for a garden and not using it. I could do a little work night and mornings—light work with a hoe and spade, and mass in the autumn a store of vegetables that would easily last over the winter.

We were all fascinated with the pictures. We discovered that gardening has kept abreast of the times. Gone are all the old varieties of vegetables, and in their place are new ones, developed by Luther Burbank and others, insect-proof, blight-resisting vegetables, and require hardly any care at all. which will stand any stress of weather, After reading the catalogue through from end to end and noting with regret that there were some things like eggplants and Rocky Ford cantaloupes that were difficult to rear in our climate, we sent for the seeds. Then I began to prepare the soil.

This task proved more difficult than I had anticipated. There is a curious thing about such soil as that of our garden. It produces rocks. I don't know exactly how, but I do know that when I had spaded twenty square feet of soil, run it through a spading fork and picked out all the small stones in it, I would discover next day that there were just as many small stones in it as there were the day before. The stones are evidently produced in the night. Time after time when I had got them all picked out, I would sneak back and thrust my hand into the loose earth, hoping to grab one of the things in the process of manufacture. But they ways eluded me. The next morning however a new supply was ready for me. This is a phenomenon which science has apparently not investigated, for I can find no explanation of it in the geology books.

After I had found that it was as idle trying to get out the stones as it would be to get the salt out of ocean water, I gave it up and began planting the seeds. The next week sprouts began to shoot up from the soil, and I began to think that the back aches I suffered every night were not wholly in vain. It was beautiful to see the tiny rows of tender green thrusting up from among the stony beds. But no sooner were they an inch or two high than insects of various kinds, chiefly the squashy, thick-bodied ones called cut worms appeared from somewhere and began to eat them.

The next job was to cut pasteboard collars out of the boards that come with the laundry, and inclose each plant. In our garden, which is small, about six hundred of these were necessary. I wonder how a market gardener can manage without employing twenty or thirty hands just to cut collars. Probably he does it by machinery. The collars stood off the cut worms for a while. It was a real pleasure to go out in the morning and see the ugly things collected around the collars gnashing their teeth in baffled rage. I suppose they were gnashing their teeth. I am perfectly certain that they must have teeth, for how else could they shear off a plant as if it has been cut by a scythe?

In a week the cut worms gave up the attack, and moved over to somebody else's garden. In their stead came a kind of fly which lays eggs on the plants. The eggs hatched into voracious mites which began to resume the work of destruction till we fed them arsenate of lead. They relished this food too well, and in a day or so they expired, I trust in agony. Then came the ants. Don't let anybody tell you that an ant has any virtue but industry. He has too much of that. The ants did not eat the plants themselves, but they herded in their little green milch cows, called aphis, and pastured them all over our growing things. The aphis is a tiny creature, and one of them cannot do much harm. But a million of them can destroy any garden that ever existed. It required a week of experimenting with various deadly poisons to find one that would so much as give an aphis a stomach ache. But at last somebody told us to try iodine. The iodine did the work. The ants lost their herds, and went away to pester somebody else.

After the aphis had departed moths of various hues as to tails from brown to bright green came along and nested in the cabbages and beans. Their offspring hatched quickly, and proved to have excellent appetites. One morning I woke to find that half the garden was destroyed It took me all the next day to replant it. But a neighbor told me that by building a fire and throwing sulphur into it, so that the fumes would blow over the garden the baby moths would be destroyed. They were. So was the friendship of the neighbors living to leeward, who happened to have a washing out on the line. The washing all turned bright yellow, and a telephonic communication they held with the police department resulted in an urgent request from the chief that I put out my sulphur fires. Incidentally I have a suit for damages on my hands. But I did kill those moths.

However they were hardly disposed of before it began to rain and rained for a week. The garden is at the foot of a slope and the rain water swept over it steadily till most of my plants were uprooted. Then I gave it up. Also I began to understand why we have to pay the grocer so much for fresh vegetables. The mystery is that they can be had for less than $5 a piece.

We paid no attention to the garden through the summer. But in the fall when I was practicing mashie shots in the backyard one morning I noticed a clump of greenery on the spot where the garden had been—a plant that somehow did not look at all like the surrounding weeds. I went over to examine it, and after clawing away some of the soil at its base observed that it had a large root. Something distracted my attention then, and I did not notice it again till the other day, when I was picking more stones out of the soil in order to make a base for a private putting green. My hand came into contact with a pulpy mass of some kind, and I grasped it and plucked it forth. When I took it into the house for identification, supposing that it was some kind of an iris root which had gone astray from my wife's garden, the cook took a passing glance at it. "That's parsnip," she said.

She was right. While she was preparing it for dinner I went over the little account book I had kept when I was purchasing the garden supplies last spring. The parsnip was the sole product of the garden. And it cost the sum I have mentioned. That is pretty high for a parsnip.

Nightingale Pest Feared

Hardiness of the nightingale in its new home in New Zealand is causing fears that the sweetest of English song birds will become a pest in the Antipodes. When a number of nightingales were introduced into New Zealand some time ago it was believed that the winters there would kill many of them, and thus keep down the number. Practically all of the newcomers survived the last cold spell in such good condition that a pest is feared.

Her Beauty Was Marred by Eczema

Until She Found Relief at the Health Center

A YOUNG WOMAN was troubled with eczema to such an extent that her face—which was normally good looking—became almost repulsive, even to her closest friends. For several years she had been treated in the east without securing any relief.

Shortly after her arrival in Los Angeles she learned about the Health Center and decided to consult managing director Fred S. Hirsch. She was given a series of treatments, including Danish rays and our Colonic Hydra Lavage. A strict diet was also adhered to and whenever possible she ate at one of the Health Cafeterias.

Within a month her eczema was relieved and now her skin is almost as clear and free from blemishes as it was before she became afflicted with the disease.

The Health Center has also been successful in treating a variety of other diseases. Consultation is free to those who mention this magazine. Hours: Weekdays from 8:30 A.M. to 6 P.M.

CARE OF THE BODY

My better judgment protested, but I awaited the outcome.

Nearly a week passed. The babe was nursed mainly artificially. But the mother was still as determined as ever. She took her baby home from the hospital.

The story is now over two months old. Her baby gained by leaps and bounds. Within one week after she was home she was nursing her baby almost entirely. Today her breasts, and only her breasts, are supplying a beautiful, healthy, flourishing child with all the nutrition it needs. She is experiencing the thrill of having her dearly beloved child at her bosom.

There was every reason why she should not have nursed the baby. Yet her will dominated her body.

She is a happy, contented mother.

I am giving you this experience for what it is worth, and it should be worth much to many mothers who follow the course of least resistance and relegate to the cow, the can or the formula the function which should be the most sacred privilege of motherhood.

Perhaps it will act as an inspiration to other mothers faced with the same difficulty.

Get emotional control of yourself! Use the power of your will! Know that you will nurse your own baby! Be calm! Have faith! Faith, as the Bible says, moves mountains. The faith of the mind can govern the laws of the body.

Tuberculosis

Today, more people than ever before are recovering from tuberculosis. The incidence is less—the cure being represented by a higher and higher percentage.

When we speak of tuberculosis being cured, what we really mean is that the disease process is stopped from developing further. The "cure" which has already occurred will usually develop into what we term an "encystment." That is, the affected portion will become enveloped by scar tissue. It will, thereafter, become functionless as lung tissue.

Nevertheless, the rest of the lung can function quite adequately without that portion of the lung. If we needed the entire lung space and the entire respiratory capacity for normal breathing, then most of us would either have tuberculosis or be dead a long time!

If we observe the average individual in his respiratory movement, we see that he uses only a fraction of his respiratory coefficient.

Therefore, if we are able to arrest a tuberculosis infection in the lung, there is no reason, whatsoever, why we cannot continue to live on to a ripe old age. Of course, we must use care. We must avoid extremes. But we can go on satisfactorily to a good old age in an arrested case of tuberculosis even if most of the lung has already been destroyed.

I have a specially prepared leaflet on the subject of tuberculosis. If you are interested in procuring it, please send me a self-addressed, stamped envelope and I shall be glad to mail it to you.

Sun Baths

Q.: What are some of the contra-indications for sun baths? That is, under what conditions should sun baths not be taken?

A.: There is no disputing the wonderful therapeutic value that is derived from sun baths. In the treatment of tuberculosis, anemia, low nervous tone, depression, skin diseases, etc., sun baths are of inestimable value. They give the body new life and strength.

However, to answer the question—under what conditions sun baths should not be taken:

For instance, a new-born babe should not be exposed to the sunshine until it is several weeks old.

A woman just up from the childbirth bed should not subject herself to the sun until at least from two to four weeks after delivery.

Where the blood pressure is exceedingly high, sun baths should not be taken.

Where there is a dropsical state—where the limbs are swollen—sun baths should not be taken except under the advice of a physician.

Where there is a very high, tense, emotional strain, of a type almost bordering

I Invite Men Past 40 to Send for These Amazing Facts

About Old Age—the Truth About Rejuvenation—Prostate Trouble —a New Home Treatment

EVERY man approaching or past middle age owes it to himself to read this astonishing book, "Why Many Men Are Old at 40." Written and prepared for Free distribution by a well-known American scientist, it contains facts that will enable any man to face his declining years with new courage. It explains the much-misunderstood subject of rejuvenation in simplest terms—tells why numerous distressing "symptoms of old age" may be traced directly to failure of the vital prostate gland . . . and outlines a simple home treatment that has already restored new health and vigor to thousands of former sufferers.

No Medicine

Just as certain diseases, like measles and whooping cough, are common to childhood, so there are certain symptoms of debility and breakdown that are liable to occur at or past the prime of life. Weakness . . . pains in legs, back and feet . . . loss of mental and physical vigor . . . loss of sleep through frequent nightly risings . . . these are but a few of the danger signals often set by Nature to warn men of prostate trouble. The symptoms are many times falsely attributed to bladder or kidney trouble. If neglected, they may lead to serious conditions, often requiring surgery. This fact is substantiated by reputable medical men everywhere.

Swift, Permanent Results

But now, through an amazing scientific discovery, it is often possible to stimulate and restore the prostate gland to normal size and activity in a safe, natural way. This method employs no drugs, diet, exercises or violet rays. It is fully as harmless and easy to use as a hot water bottle. Often just a few days' treatment shows pronounced results. One grateful effect is usually the immediate disappearance of chronic constipation. The most frequently reported result is complete freedom from so-called bladder weakness. Other astonishing effects dealing with increased physical vigor are explained in the Free book now offered.

Free Book Explains Method

If you are a victim of prostate gland disorder—if you have tried medicines or old, disappointing treatments without relief, this is the message you have long wanted to hear. Or if you are one of those men, who, although getting along in years, have not realized how the tiny prostate gland brings about unpleasant changes and health faults, you likewise will want to hear of this vitally important discovery. Without cost, without obligation, either type of man may learn full details of this scientific achievement by simply mailing the coupon printed herewith for the convenience of the readers of this publication.

The book mentioned will come to you directly from one of the offices of the International Institute sponsoring the method. Mailed in a plain wrapper marked "Personal." If you live in Los Angeles or vicinity, call if possible in person, otherwise mail coupon to nearest office.

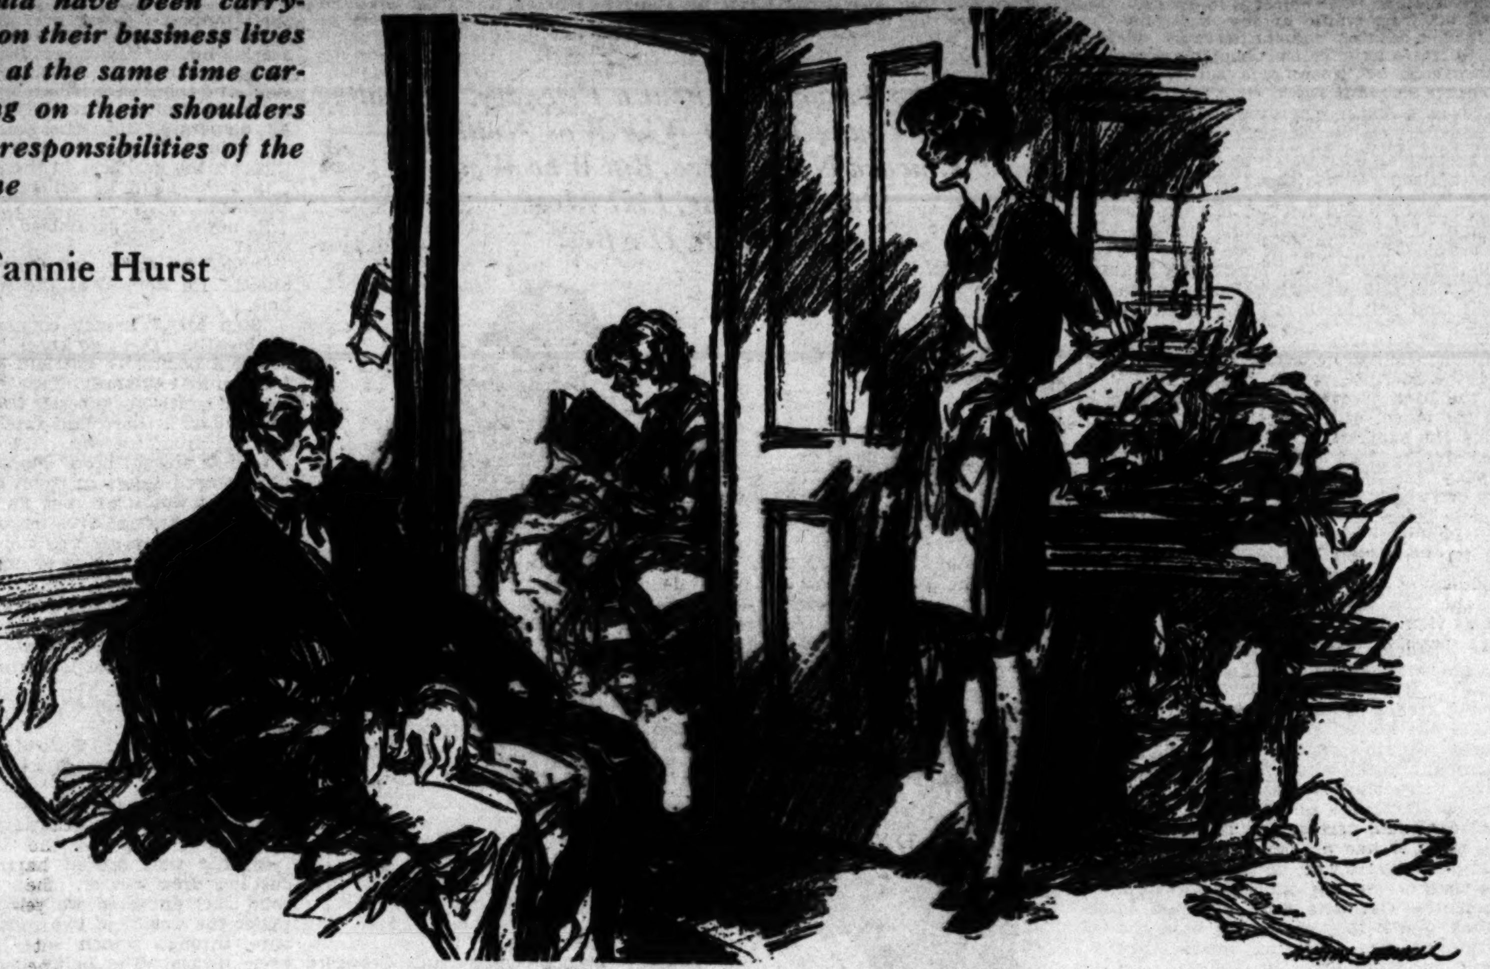
NOT A DRAB STORY

THERE was no reason why Ella and her father should have been carrying on their business lives and at the same time carrying on their shoulders the responsibilities of the home

By Fannie Hurst



THIS may seem a drab story. Certainly it is not a gilded romance of life lived in the gayer moods of things-as-they-ought-to-be. But since the heart is the source from which life drains its happiness and the heart of Ella was in its own way to find its own fulfillment, what may seem drab to the outsider was not that to this slim, sometimes grim girl.

There is no doubt that she was one of those persons born to carry more than her share of the world's responsibility. At seventeen, she was earning half the upkeep and expense of her home, which consisted of a five-room flat in a two-family house on a presentable street. This she shared with her mother, a gay, rather childish woman who had never caught up with her years, and with her father, a building contractor, who was, even then, beginning to lose his sight.

From the point of view of many of her friends, Ella's mother was a trial sufficient to tax her endurance beyond limit. She was an airy person of rather good Eastern family connections who had never become reconciled to what she regarded as the cruder aspects of Middle-West life. The city in which she lived bored her. There was an air of patronage about the little lady.

Her habit was to lie abed mornings, leaving her daughter and husband, both of whom she adored, to scuttle about the kitchen for breakfast before they hurried away to work. More than often she waited for them to prepare the evening meal when they came from their work. She was the sort of woman who willfully creates within herself inefficiency, thereby at the same time forcing those about her to acquire skill at chores which would naturally be outside their realm.

There was no reason why Ella and her father should have been carrying on their business lives and at the same time carrying on their shoulders the responsibilities of the home. But that was the case. It had been, ever since Mrs. Lee was married to her husband, and ever since Ella was tall enough to stand shoulder-high to a kitchen sink.

John Lee, long ago reconciled to this unequal balance of power in his home, and devoted in spite of himself to this airy little woman, his wife, carried on stodgily, relentless in his routine, even when the grim fear of impending blindness began to descend upon him.

At seventeen, Ella Lee, too old for her years, was assistant in a dentist's office. She was a quiet girl, far too slender, with a mouse-like face, taupe-colored hair which in a bobbed-hair age she wore into two mats against her ears. In Mrs. Lee's eyes, Ella, in her thin, pallid way, bore the imprints of the aristocracy of the world "back East," a semi-mythical world by now, which Mrs. Lee's imagination had embroidered as the years marched on. She was fond of visualizing grandeurs of her girlhood back East that had never existed. In all sincerity, she cherished the belief that she had made the supreme social sacrifice in marrying John Lee and migrating to this Middle-Western city.

Meanwhile, endowed with the sometimes surprising vitality of the slender in body, Ella began to assume more and more the affairs of that household. Inevitably, there came the day when her father, blind, parsimoniously pensioned by the corporation that had employed him for the forty middle years of his life, was obliged to surrender his activities. It meant a severe kind of pinching for the household. Only the facts that Ella, through a stroke of incredible good fortune, obtained a better-paying position in the office of a nose-and-throat specialist, and that a newspaper advertisement had brought in a lodger for the best room in the flat, were the Lees able to make both ends meet.

It was hard, rutty sledding for a while, and it looked as if Ella's frail shoulders could scarcely bear the load. First, her father, along with the collapse of his eyesight, suffered a nervous breakdown. Then, for one reason or another, the lodger they had been able to obtain left almost without warning for reasons that had no bearing upon satisfaction or dissatisfaction at the Lee's.

Mrs. Lee, ineffectual as ever, tried to put her shoulder to the wheel; tried her hand at making fancy candies for the Woman's Exchange and even attempted to do a bit of sewing for the neighbors. But it was no use; she was a futile spoiled woman. And much of this condition was due to Ella herself. She babied her mother, catered to her inefficiencies and willingly assumed a load that might have staggered a far more robust person.

The pathos of this gaunt old man, empty-eyed, empty-handed, was almost more than she could bear. No labor of love was too much. She got up at dawn because he was sleepless then, and she could give him the few precious hours before her departure from the house. Her return from the physician's office where she was employed was made in breathless, hurried fashion so that she might give to him a few extra moments before the preparation of dinner. Throughout all this, Mrs. Lee, well-meaning, bleeding sympathy for her husband, agonizing for her daughter, succeeded only in making herself more and more of an impediment.

Her cooking was so bad. Time and time again the luncheons which she served to her husband while Ella was at her work came scorched and tasteless to the table, irritating the nervous old man almost beyond endurance. Finally, it became Ella's chore before she left the house in the morning to prepare her father's lunch, place it in the icebox and leave written instructions to her little scatter-brained mother precisely how the food should be warmed.

"Poor Ella," said the neighbors, "I don't see how she stands it."

The days were all too short for what she had to accomplish during them; the nights all too brief for the amount of sleep her tired body required.

The matter of lodgers, one of their major sources of income by now, was a troublesome and nerve-racking one. It was not that they did not seem satisfied, but almost invariably, once they obtained one, he or she would be called out of the city on the death of a relative or a change of position or some incident over which they had no control.

A young man named Nestus Nevins was to be the ultimate lodger who remained. He was a shell-shocked fellow of about thirty-two who found himself, because of physical disabilities, forced to live on an income which amounted to about ninety dollars a month. The capital representing this money had been left him by his parents, in trust, when he was only nineteen. It required care and discretion, in this day and age, to live on it.

He was a pale-eyed, timid fellow, by no means unintelligent, but a boy whose delicate health, both in childhood and later, owing to shell shock, had developed certain inhibitions and a lack of aggressiveness. He liked books and was capable of lying five or six hours of the day and reading. He was not averse to puttering about his room, trying his hand at composition and writing or doing a bit of carpentry for Mrs. Lee, throughout the long bright days, without so much as leaving the house.

He was the first young man who had ever cast a second glance at Ella. Over night, as it were, her life had taken on a turbulence. Excitement for this pale, lustreless girl that was without precedent in her entire experience. The days had come flamingly alive. Everything had taken on a significance that it had never claimed before. It was one thing to be just alive. It was another thing to waken to days that suddenly were tipped with the strange beauty of a strange meaning.

Mrs. Lee saw it happening. She saw the young Nestus begin to cast the magnetized eye of attraction upon her child. Strange tumults beat in her. She was the mother ambitious for her offspring. Romance had come even for Ella who, somehow, up to now, had seemed immune.

It was a strange enough courtship. The pallid youth, lying around the house all day, only perking up enough strength to put on his collar and smooth his hair as the hour of Ella's homecoming approached. Evenings, they sat in the stuffy little parlor, Ella reading to her father, or the four of them, aided and abetted by a system which Ella had worked out for the blind man, playing bridge.

The moments of the young people alone together were so rare and sporadic that when the engagement of their troth finally came, Mrs. Lee, for the life of her, could not figure out where and how the words of tryst could have taken place. But they had.

Ella and Nestus were married in the little parlor one Sunday afternoon so that the occasion need not interfere with her office work.

The household goes on as before, only there is the addition of Nestus Nevins now, who, in his way, is as much to be babied as Mrs. Lee or her husband.

But this is not a drab story. Ella, in her squirrel cage of service, is happy.

The Will to Nurse

A comparison of the nursing ability of the nations of the world shows American women the poorest of civilized mothers.

The function of nursing is relegated to the cow, the can, the patent food or the doctor's formula more than to any other groups of people the wide world over.

Even those nations periodically bordering on starvation do better in this function than does the American mother—undoubtedly the most expensively nourished woman in the world.

We are long since past that stage of poverty where a woman will starve for lack of food.

We are a starving nation—malnourished, undernourished, wrongly nourished—yet supplied with ample food.

Other nations commit diet crimes, as well. Many consume foods that are too heating, too highly seasoned or spiced. Others consume far more meat than is necessary. Others are guilty of alcoholic excesses far greater than the American mother.

In spite of all this, the American mother is the poorest child nurse in the world.

Why?

The nutritional factors are of distinctly secondary importance for this function. The emotional, nervous and mental aspects play a much greater role than the limited nutritional.

The American mother is keyed up higher than any other. Her nerves are on edge. Her sensitivities are attuned to a higher pitch. She lives more in a day than the mothers of the backwoods countries live in a year. Her nursing function has paid the price for it.

The mind and its reactions, the emotions and their stability, govern both the quality and the quantity of milk secreted.

I had a splendid illustration of this principle several weeks ago. I delivered a patient whose age was nearer to forty than to thirty. If I had known her before her pregnancy, I would have strongly advised against it.

Her physical condition was bad. She had all the bad complications which make a labor fearsome and laden with dire potentialities. Fortunately, she was a good soldier and obeyed orders well.

In spite of a bad kidney condition and many other obstretrical difficulties, she lived on her diet well.

After a series of complications, she gave birth to a normal small child—less than five pounds.

According to all the standard rules, she should not have nursed her baby. She was too old. Her milk was bad. She had gone through a terrible experience.

My common sense told me that at this period the milk of the cow was superior to hers.

She had breast difficulties.

Yet she willed it that she was going to have her baby at her breast, and willed it with all the power at her disposal. There was a look in her eyes which showed the determination of her own soul. She was going to nurse her baby! She insisted! She was positive!

I explained the difficulties—the handicaps. None of them would she brook. It was her baby and she was the mother!

She had every obstacle against her.

SOUNDS OUT OF DARKNESS

By Thomas Boyd

A Story of the Trenches, About a Friendly, Appealing Sort of Young Fellow Who Was Neither a Coward Nor a Hero, But Who Was Simply Trying, Like Most of Us, to Do His Best

FROM somewhere among the blue-green hills beyond the German side of No Man's Land came a popping noise, like a cork blown out of a bottle.

Young Sergeant David Crawford, who had been dismally regarding the new set of chevrons on the sleeves of his olive-drab coat, looked up warily. His outfit, after long months of training, had come into the front line only two days before and he had not yet learned the ways of actual warfare. While he speculated on the meaning of the sound the chill spring air became vibrant with a shrill whistling that grew louder, more shrill, and still louder. There was fury behind it.

Young Crawford squatted down close to the side of the wet trench. Into his ears came a gigantic roaring. He cringed. The flesh on his back and shoulders seemed to crawl. Slam bang! Even after the noise of the exploded shell had echoed into silence he still crouched there.

The smoke from the bursted shell rolled down into the trench. It was sharp and stinging. Crawford gasped. Immediately his lungs burned as if he had swallowed a flame. Gas, he thought, and reached quickly for his mask. But if it were gas, it came to him, his duty was to shout the alarm. His hands paused at the flap of his respirator. If he shouted "Gas!" the men in the trench would all clap on their masks, the klaxon signal up on the hill by the captain's dugout would honk its warning, and the whole front line would stand there blind as bats.

Bang! Beramm! Another shell struck and exploded, the smoke rolling over the parapet like an ominous cloud.

And if there was no gas! It was the time of evening, thought Crawford, when the Germans were expected to attack, and if they came over while the doughboys were wearing masks they would probably take the trench. He didn't know what to do; yet there seemed imperative need to do something. He was a sergeant and men were depending on him.

Crawford rose up and stared into the drifting mass of black smoke. His streaming eyes could see nothing. He looked to the left, where the machine-gun crew was hidden at the end of the trench. Another shell—he winced at its swift whining, but stood erect—hurtled over and crashed in the wire in front of him. Bits of mud and steel flew past him. Again he stared into the dark.

Around the shoulder of the trench to Crawford's right somebody was sloshing over the duckboards. He turned quickly, his bayonet held grimly before him. If it was a German—if they had broken through unseen— The noise came nearer. He heard a violent sneeze. Then somebody spluttered, "Serg-eant!" It was Lieutenant Archer, his platoon commander.

Crawford lowered his rifle and answered shakily, "Yes, sir."

"S-see"— The lieutenant, dark and slender, the end of his thin nose wriggling excitedly beneath his steel helmet, sneezed again. "This confounded high explosive! See anything?" He wiped his nose and eyes.

"No, sir," answered Crawford. "Is that what it is?" He had been a sergeant only since morning and disliked to show too much ignorance, but his relief to find there was no gas in the dark smoke was so great that he would willingly have shown himself to be a jackass in order to find it out.

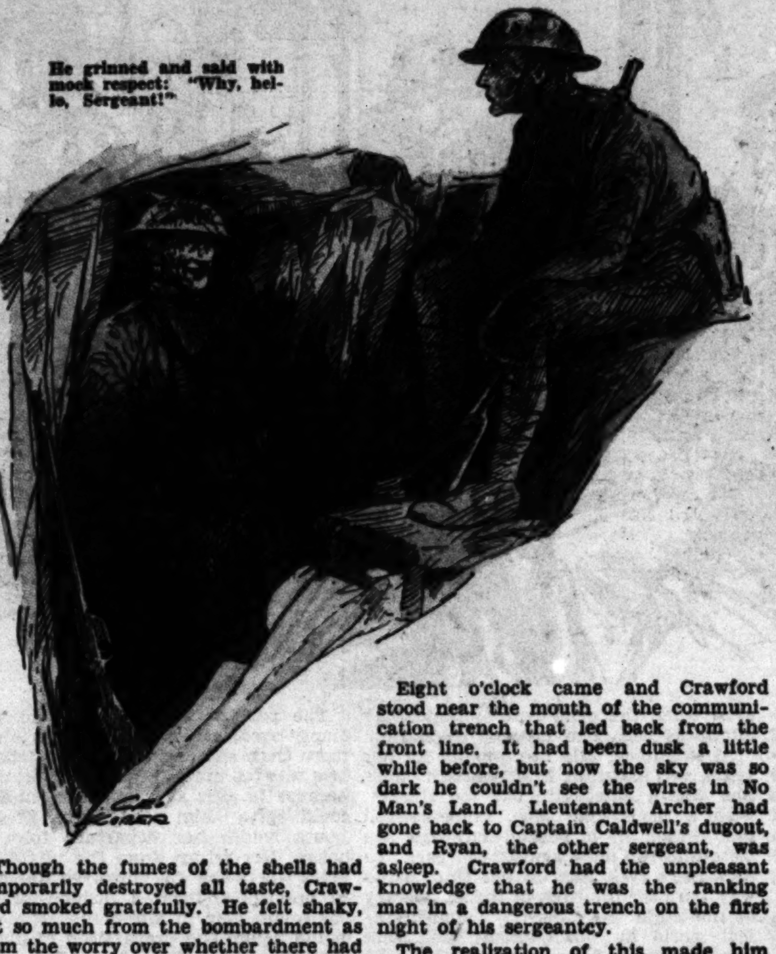
"Wh—" The lieutenant sneezed again. "What—what is?"

Crawford also sneezed. "This stuff that smells like gas."

"High explosive, yeah." Lieutenant Archer stretched his neck and looked sharply over the edge of the trench. "Those shells certainly played hell with our wire. Ripped it wide enough to drive a truck through." He took out a pack of cigarettes and his new pocket lighter. "Here, have a smoke," he said, and grinned bleakly.

Crawford's thumb and forefinger pinched respectfully into the package.

Lieutenant Archer clicked the steel against the flint. A spark ignited the colored cord, which glowed more brightly as he blew upon it. He held it out to Crawford, then, lighting his own cigarette, he returned it to his pocket.



He grinned and said with mock respect: "Why, hello, Sergeant!"

Though the fumes of the shells had temporarily destroyed all taste, Crawford smoked gratefully. He felt shaky, not so much from the bombardment as from the worry over whether there had been gas in the shells, and the uncertainty of what he should have done if there had been gas. The job of sergeant at the front was not to be taken lightly by a man new to the trenches.

Lieutenant Archer looked at his wristwatch. "Almost time to stand down. We'll have some slum and coffee if the chow detail got through all right." He turned and started to walk down the slippery duckboard toward the dugouts, but faced about. "You catch the eight-to-twelve watch tonight, sergeant; and I want you to keep a sharp eye on this end down here. We'll have Rainey and another man posted in that shell hole at our end of the trench, but I want you to spend as much time there as you can. Got it?"

"Yes, sir," answered Crawford.

"Because that's where any Boche raiding parties would make for if they came over. We may have a wiring detail out; if we do I'll let you know. Password's 'Verdun and Marne.' Got it?"

"Yes, sir," repeated Crawford. Boche raiding parties. Wiring detail. Verdun and Marne. He could remember that, he supposed. It would be his first night in authority and he would have to remember it, he thought sharply.

"Very well." Lieutenant Archer went down the trench.

And shortly afterward Crawford followed, waddling cautiously past the backs of the sentries to the middle of the trench, where most of the platoons, with their mess kits out, were gathered around two large galvanized cans and a pile of bread. One of the cans was half-filled with a thin, reddish stew made of potatoes, beef and tomatoes, and the other contained black coffee. Being dinner and supper combined, both containers were quickly emptied. Then Crawford and all of the others save those of the first watch went down into the dugouts to wait until they were called for detail or relief duty.

Eight o'clock came and Crawford stood near the mouth of the communication trench that led back from the front line. It had been dusk a little while before, but now the sky was so dark he couldn't see the wires in No Man's Land. Lieutenant Archer had gone back to Captain Caldwell's dugout, and Ryan, the other sergeant, was asleep. Crawford had the unpleasant knowledge that he was the ranking man in a dangerous trench on the first night of his sergeantcy.

The realization of this made him start. And taking his rifle down to his bunk in the dugout, he began a tour of inspection of the platoon front. He pushed warily along in the darkness, his muscles tense and his hand on the butt of his automatic pistol. At every other firing bay the voice of a sentry would mutter, "Halt! Who's there?" and he felt the sharp tip of a bayonet brought close to his breast. "Gosh," he said, "it's only Crawford." Then he would give the countersign and walk carefully on.

He went up the trench to where it was held by the joining platoon, and then turned back. Everywhere about him lay the heavy night, black and silent. But for all the stillness he had a feeling that in that unending gloom were monsters crouching, ready to spring. Even his own trench was mysterious and strange. The duckboards were so loose and slippery underfoot they seemed alive and treacherous. The cavernous mouths of the shafts leading down to the dugouts gaped ominously. The whole night, however silent, was alive.

Near the machine-gun pit at the farther end of the trench the last sentry challenged in a hoarse whisper, "Halt! Who's there?"

"It's Crawford. How—how's everything, Williams?"

Williams stepped back and lowered his bayonet. "I may be wrong, but I sure did think I heard somep'n out there. Sounded like it was movin' around that wire."

"Jeez! Did you?" Crawford moved forward as stealthily as his rubber boots would allow and stared excitedly into the darkness. But he saw nothing and heard nothing. Finally he turned away and tried to give his departure a professional air by saying, "Well, keep a sharp lookout."

He went on past the machine-gun pit and out of the trench toward the shell hole in which Rainey and Jenkins had their outpost. Going over the spongy earth he had a feeling that he was presenting himself as a target for the whole German Army. If Williams had been right and there were Squarehead soldiers out in front of the wire—he shivered and bit desperately into the chin strap of his helmet, then bent over and crept through the darkness to the hole.

Into the night he whispered sharply, "Rainey!"

Rainey's voice grumbled, "Whatcha want?"

Guided by the sound Crawford went ahead. He stopped at the edge of the hole.

"Step easy," Rainey counseled under his breath. "Don't go knockin' over any of them bombs we got laid out there."

Crawford cautiously lifted his feet and stepped gently down beside the two men, who sat on a board laid across the hole halfway from the top. "You guys got a regular arsenal here," he said. "Ain't heard anything out in front, have you?"

Jenkins was silent, but Rainey mumbled, "No; and we'd better by a damn sight not. We hear any noises around here and we don't stop to argue—we go to heavin' bombs."

"We sure do," agreed Jenkins heartily.

"Lucky I didn't come around in front of you guys," said Crawford. "Bill Williams said he heard something out in front."

"That guy's full of dope," was Rainey's verdict.

They were silent. Back of them could be heard rubber boots swishing through the wet grass.

"Lieutenant's goin' out with the wiring party," explained Crawford.

Silently they waited as the sibilant rustling drew nearer. Four figures of solid black appeared, walking awkwardly under the weight of two rolls of barbed wire through which long poles had been thrust. The bulky burdens that they carried and the necessity for quietness of movements made their progress slow. Near the shell hole the procession stopped and Lieutenant Archer called softly:

"Sergeant Crawford!"

"Yes, sir." Crawford waited. It was the first time any of the men had heard him called sergeant, and it made his ears tingle.

Lieutenant Archer approached cautiously and said in a low tone, "We'll be out in front and to the right of you men, working on the wire." He stepped nearer.

Crawford warned him, "Look out, sir; that edge where you're standing is lined with hand grenades."

The lieutenant retreated hastily, then bent down. "I'll just take a pocketful. Forgot to bring any along."

Crawford could hear the bombs clicking gently together as the lieutenant put one after the other in his capacious pocket. Then the wiring party went slowly forward and soon had completely disappeared in the darkness.

Time passed. Crawford left the shell hole and made another trench tour.

"Remember the lieutenant's out in front with a wiring detail," he told the sentries in the firing bays. For some reason his nerves felt strung up, as if he were bent on a desperate enterprise. The newness of war to him, the fact that his officer was out in front, that Sergeant Ryan was asleep in his dugout, and that he alone was in charge of the trench—these things, together with his very recent rise to a place of authority, were responsible for the feeling.

And he was sure he was not entirely up to his job. There was so much to be prepared for; a spy who might have sneaked into the trench, a gas attack, a stealthy raid—anything. And all of it—the smell of gas, the normal sounds in a trench at night—was unfamiliar.

After awhile he went back to the shell hole, stepped over the hand grenades, and sat down beside Rainey and Jenkins. The three men were silent, staring out into the black night, where Lieutenant Archer, unheard, was stringing wire. Opposite to where they sat was the mouth of a muddy ditch that the French had dug to drain the shell hole. But it was unsuccessful; there was water in the bottom of the hole, and it chilled their feet and legs.

Rainey muttered, "Jeez, it's cold," and drew his breath in sharply.

that dim, sleek, vacant slate-colored water—that was rolling the old man somewhere down underneath it. Seeing every minute more what he had done—and was! And starting on now after the three murderers—the only thing left to him to do. Drawing himself now, up from one pile top to another, the way he used to do there when he was a kid swimming. And starting after them down the dock.

He could see them then, on ahead—just getting through the factory fence; delayed it seems, by not finding the hole there in the dark. But then hurrying on!

And he followed after them—wet and sore, and the fresh blood from his scalp trickling down over his face—soaked and black and dripping. And saying to himself: "The old man's drowned. I killed him!"—over and over again. And blubbering out loud, like a child; and cursing like a highjacker. And following the murderers—with a gun that might not fire—to kill them with his hands, if necessary;

Up he raced across the railroad track—in back of the station, where the drowsing taxi driver sat waiting for the late train. "Gimme that!" he said. And pushed him out.

And just then, around the other side of the block on Main street, two shots rang out—and then a whistle. And he chased around there.

"What's this!" called the cop's son.

For Strut Regan, the force's hero was standing flat against the block wall, with his pistol out and smoking.

"Look out. There's burglars in that gown shop!" yelled Regan. "They took a shot at me from the doorway when I was starting by—and ran back in there!"

And the cop's son's heart sank down again—thinking who else was most likely in there with them. And by this time a crowd was there—including two other cops, Devlin, the politician, and one more. And some citizens—in cars and out.

"Hey!" yelled the cop's son to the last two cops. "Go around there. Watch the alley door!" And then he snatched another car down the road and pushed its driver out; and swung it around so the headlights lighted up the inside of the dark black gown shop—like the one behind did the alley. Expecting again—as he had before—to get a shot or two from the inside. But no one fired.

And looking in, past the dresses hanging in the windows, they saw one reason, anyhow, why they didn't. For there was nobody there. And those who crawled up nearer, by the edge of the wall, confirmed this.

Then all at once the loud sound of a woman crying and moaning came out from in back—behind the closed door upon the further wall.

"I'm going in there!" said the cop's son, starting.

But Regan grabbed him. "Wait," he said. "You can't go in there—and start a shooting."

"I'm going!" said the cop's son again.

"Listen!" called a bystander beyond him. And he heard it, standing stiff and rigid, with all the rest: the sudden sound of loud, cursing crying voices of men—from inside. But nothing to be seen, as yet. Only the sharp cut lights and shadows of the empty front room—full of hanging things—under the bright, brilliant headlight.

And then "Look!" somebody yelled from across the street.

For, all at once, the door into the blind back room banged back and two men tumbled out into the clear lighted empty room. And all held their breath some more, as they came out. For it was a strange and curious sight to see. For they came staggering, clutching, weaving out through the sharp-lighted room—like figures fleeing from a ghost. And what was after them no one could imagine yet.

"Don't shoot. For God's sake!" said Izzy the Goose—with his hands high in the air. "We've got enough." And he pitched forward out the street door.

"You got us," said Murphy, doing the same. And they grabbed them.

And then a cry went up from the staring crowd—and another silence. For in the further doorway, to the blind back room, were two other figures standing. The form of Duke Wingate—and beside him a girl—that Coralie, the owner of the gown shop—starting to push by, but without success. For as she did so the murderer in the doorway grabbed and held her. And yelled out something and after a minute more dragged her back. And the door of the blank back room closed. And a groan went up from the crowd around.

Coralie Vivesco had been sitting there, it seemed, waiting for nine o'clock and Old Man Riley. And he didn't come. And after some year or more of waiting she saw something must have happened. And she didn't know what to do. She might have gone out for another cop, of course; but that she could not do, and still work her plan—to get the others, and still let her lover out. So she sat and waited. And in the meantime, going out into the alley, she looked over the murderers' car outside; and took the added precaution then of locking it—both ignition and transmission—thinking it twould do no harm to have that card in her hands, anyway, against them.

"Where's Riley?" she said to Izzy the Goose, who stopped in and stood in the backdoor of the gown shop; while the others slipped back into the car—all evidently in a great hurry.

But he didn't answer her—having other matters on his mind, apparently. And now she heard the voices of the two in the car coming; and then right away they tore out of there, and into the gown shop, where the third one stood keeping the doorway open. And just after that, she saw the headlights of an automobile swoop and flash into the alley.

"Lock that door. Shoot on through! We're trapped!" said the Duke, cursing.

So they all crowded into the black, back room, peering out a crack in the door—seeing the crowd gathering.

"Who locked that car?" asked Wingate now—through the darkness.

"Where's Mick Riley?" asked Coralie Vivesco, instead of answering.

"So it was you, huh? I thought so!" said the head murderer, turning his flashlight on her face.

"I didn't say so."

"You didn't have to."

"Where's Riley?" she asked again—her first question.

"He's where you'll be in a short time—with all the rest of the double crossers!" said Duke Wingate. And told her briefly what had happened at the dock—to add to her pleasure. And it was at that time that those outside heard her cry out.

"For don't ever think I've had my eyes closed on the chance of you two double crossing me, with that old flatfoot cop—that's resting now on the bottom of the river. Together with that other fellow conspirator of yours, the son," he told her. "With you next on the list. You double-crossing so and so!"

"You should give lectures on double crossing," she came back, cool and bitter now—knowing how the land lay. "You could make me drag him into this—as your decoy—by your dirty blackmail hold upon me and my sister; and you could double cross her and kill him—from the back. And you'll kill me now, no doubt—between you. But you can't cheat me—of what I'm going to do to you. You red-handed assassin!"

"Hey! Grab her! Quick!" he called out to the other two, with his light upon her. And they got her gun—just in time!

And it was standing there, by the wall, that the girl felt her heel strike something hard, beside the baseboard. She knew at once what it was.

It was a gas jet put in down near the floor for a gas heater—one of those makeshifts for heat they use in cheap old stores at times. She groped and found a little basket used for dressmaking waste, and pulled it before it. And then she turned on the gas!

"What's this?" whispered Izzy the Goose, sniffling—after a minute.

"It's gas!" cried the Coralie girl, starting to her feet—seeing the game was starting. "Do you know what they're doing here?" said Izzy, after a minute more. "They're feeding some kind of gas in here by some way!"

"He's right," said Murphy, finally. "We can't stand this. They've got us!"

"All right. Run on—you cockroaches!" said Wingate, finally. "But not me. I can't afford to!"

And the two started. But when the girl went, too, Wingate stopped her in the doorway. Oh, no! You're stopping here—with me—for company!" he said, grabbing her—and holding her.

Then, after holding her there, so all could get a good long look, he dragged her back into the choking dark. And the swinging door swung closed behind them.

"Where are you going? You can't go in there!" said Regan, grabbing the cop's son's arm, as he started.

"Like hell I can't. Let go!"

"Stand back. Every one!" yelled Regan—seeing him go. "There's gas in there that would rip open the world!"

And he walked in then. And they waited once again. And nothing came. Not yet!

And then all at once the blind swinging door in the strong yellow light twitched—once, twice! And opened! And the form of the murderer came out—pitched headlong! Like a loose sack of mail.

"Take him, Regan," the cop's son yelled. "He won't hurt you now!"

And the crowd yelled, seeing it was over.

And then the watchers all went silent once again—as Riley's son came out a second time, with the girl. All mud and blood and tousled hair, himself—and the girl in her fine light dress beside him—like a painted picture, in the bright, brilliant headlight.

"Look," said Coralie Vivesco, whose right name was Carney, sitting up all at once, when they had brought her to, finally, at the police station. "What about your father?"

And she had hardly said it when outside in the street they heard a noise and commotion.

"What's this?" said Coralie, hurrying, in spite of her dizziness, to look out. And crying out—a great, sudden cry. For it was the old man, getting out of a taxicab—all sleek and dripping, like something cast up by the sea. And in ten seconds the cop's son was out, feeling him all over and crying like a kid.

"What'd I tell you? You can't kill a Riley!" said the Old Battleship—back to the old song again, at once. "I swum three miles in that current." And, laughing and crying, they started him back, at length, to the old flat once more. But the Coralie girl hung back.

And there was silence for a few long seconds. And after it the girl's voice spoke up first, sharp and lively: "Well then," she said. "I must be going!"

And the cop's son lifted up his face out of his big hands at this—and saw her starting.

"Going? Where to? What for?" he asked, in a sharp voice himself—recalling now how cold and still she'd acted toward him, ever since she'd had her wits, and they had come away from the police station.

"I trapped you into this," she said. "And now I've set you free!"

But he put her chin up with his big forefinger—forcing her eyes up to his. "Tell me, now—that you'll be going!" he said to her slowly.

And she struggled now to get away. But he still held her firm.

"You can't," he told her then. And his voice was hoarse, for what he'd seen there—in her eyes. "You'll stay."

And she started fighting him once more—now he'd set her eyes free. But he held her still.

"Didn't I save you also some? From that last trap that you yourself were in?" he asked her.

"You did."

"Well, then. I'm different from you!"

"In what?" she said.

"In this," he told her. "That what I trap, I keep!"

"It can't be done!" she answered, struggling still.

"Why not?"

"I'd make a great addition to a cop's family!"

"They'll make you head detective," he told her, joshing now—"on the police force. In place of old Mysterious Mike. Your work entitles you to it!"

And they turned their eyes about—listening to the old man—tuning up once more upon his favorite song. "It does—and more!" he shouted out—having his own joke. "It entitles you to be a Riley and the best one of the lot!"

"Not yet," said Coralie Carney, starting smiling back at last.

"But soon," the cop's son said.

And just then, it seems, there was a knock at the flat door, and he was forced to let her loose, and go and open it. And then he shut it and came back again.

"What is it?" the old man asked him.

"It's several of the Rileys," said the cop's son. "They're come to say that they, and the whole village with them, are strong and crazy for you—as chief of police! Do you want to see them now?" he asked—and stopped there.

For this Coralie Vivesco—the bait of that cop trap—who was now soon going to be a Riley, and a cop's son's wife—all at once broke down, finally. Crying and laughing, and laughing and crying—when she got this!

And it took them a good half hour to control her.

TWENTY YEARS OF TRAP-SHOOTING

eye, with the field of vision remaining undiminished through having the other eye open. And a wide range of vision is very essential in most forms of trapshooting and in all forms of hunting.

There are today several forms of trapshooting. The one described already, is the common kind, and is the form used in the Grand American Handicaps, with some variations. Sometimes two targets are released at once and it is the business of the shooter to hit them both while they are in the air. "Bang! Bang!" like that. Too, events are varied. Competition ranges from twenty-five targets to a thousand, the principle being the same as in track, where events from the 50-yard dash to the mile are run. There is also the handicap shoot, with the better marksmen standing further from the target release.

The present-day trapshooting is the result of evolution from the days of "Merrie Old England" when it was the custom of the landed aristocracy to have pigeon hunts on their estates. The fowls then were bred especially that the host might hospitably entertain his guests who so thoroughly enjoyed killing the little birds. Traps were concealed along a devious path through brush and forest, and when the hunters were within range of the trap a bird was released, which immediately winged its way to a supposed freedom. The trap may have been ahead of the hunter, behind him, on one side, or on the other. It was necessary for him to be constantly on the alert for he never knew from where the quarry might spring. It was indeed a sport in those days of landed rights, poachers, pigeon pies, and the like. Then there came a wave of humanitarianism. But the men, though becoming more tender of heart, retained their fundamental instincts; they still wanted their shooting. So the various forms of trapshooting at inanimate objects developed.

Trapshooting today is controlled centrally by the Associated Trapshooters of America, the office of which is located at Vandalia, Ohio. All shell numbers are registered with them; all shooters record the numbers of their shells. An accurate check is made and an account is kept for each person. In this way authentic records are established both here and in Canada where trapshooting is controlled by the same organization, and each year a record book is published. As a matter of fact, United States and Canada are about the only two countries in the world containing real enthusiasts in great numbers, for although the wave of humanitarianism in England was most commendable and profitable for the birds, men who were accustomed to live targets could get no thrill from shooting at bits of clay, and interest waned.

Even on this continent the number of active trapshooters is relatively small—perhaps not more than ten thousand men and three hundred women in the entire United States. In Los Angeles, men and women combined do not outnumber five hundred. But the few devotees make up in enthusiasm what they lack in numbers, for shooting requires quite as much skill as golf or tennis. It is great for steadying the nerves, training the eye and making the body react instantly to cerebral impulses. But of course in it one does not find the thrill of physical activity that most persons inclined to sports seem to prefer.

In No Man's Land sounded a muffled pop! Momentarily a great glowing arc appeared in the sky and shed a harsh, brilliant light between the German and American wires. A staccato stuttering broke out from the enemy trench as a Maxim opened up. The posts, the stumps, and the ridges of earth showed clearly, but the lieutenant and his party were not to be seen. Crawford crouched tensely, his hand on one of the bombs at the edge of the pit. Slowly the light floated downward and crumpled into nothingness on the wet ground.

Soon afterward there was the tramp of boots on the grass. The wiring party was returning. They came nearer. Lieutenant Archer called in an undertone and laid his course by the sound of Crawford's answer.

"Guess that's all for tonight," Lieutenant Archer muttered softly.

He and the three men who had accompanied him stood around the shell hole. Everybody was strung to a high pitch of excitement. It was as if the whole darkness were alive with destructive forces. The lieutenant was breathing heavily.

"Well," he said, "I suppose I might as well put these bombs back. You men might need them." He reached in his pocket and stooped down, then reached again. Suddenly there was a clicking noise. A red spark flickered above the row of hand grenades.

That dancing point of red held Crawford's eye. It was close enough for him to be able to touch it. He gave one look, sprang up, leaped through the water and plunged head first into the muddy ditch. His action started the others. The wiring party scattered in every direction and flung themselves on the ground. Rainey threw himself down beside Crawford, and Jenkins sprawled on top of both of them.

The silence continued. Crawford lay with his left cheek in the mud and his right against Rainey's shoulder, counting the seconds until the bombs should burst. One, two, three, four, five. Still silence.

"What the hell—" muttered Rainey, after a moment.

From somewhere in the darkness Lieutenant Archer rose up off the ground and came back to the shell hole. He chuckled softly. "It's all right, you men. That wasn't a bomb; it was only my cigarette lighter dropped out of my pocket."

Jenkins stood up and cursed disgustedly. Rainey also scrambled free and began to grumble, "What the hell. I'd sooner be shot than scared to death."

One of the wiring party breathed out, "Golly, lieutenant, I'll never be the same after this."

But Crawford kept still. Wet and bedraggled, tasting grit, his coat cuffs clammy about his wrists, he sat in speechless anger and mortification. He had scurried like a rabbit! From a false alarm like that! He had shown himself up before the whole bunch; had made a confession of incompetence that he could not afford, that no sergeant whose stripes were new could afford, least of all one so young and inexperienced. And Rainey and the rest, he knew, would never forget it.

"All right, let's get back," said Lieutenant Archer; and led his detail toward the trench. "Remember to pick out two men for the chow detail in the morning, sergeant."

"Yes, sir," gulped Crawford. Sergeant! Stranger than ever was the personal application of that familiar word. It made him feel incredibly woebegone and lonely.

The sixth of a series of sixteen best short stories---the outstanding fiction feature of the year

Beside him Rainey whispered mockingly, "Sargint! You may not be smart, but you sure kin dive!"

Private Jenkins snickered.

"Didn't dive any better'n you guys," said Crawford defensively.

"Is that a fact?" asked Rainey scornfully. "Is that a fact?" He paused impressively. "Well, lemme tell you somepin, sargint, old kid. If you hadn't dove off like you were scared half to death ain't nobody else would've made a move. We ain't runnin' from no cigarette lighters, are we, Jenkins? I'll tell the cock-eyed world we ain't."

Under the blast of Rainey's sarcasm Crawford was silent. The other continued, "Besides, we ain't sargints. We're jist ordinary, low-down, dollar-a-day soldiers."

Crawford muttered, "I hope to tell you that's what you are."

"Oh, we admit it," answered Rainy. "We don't claim to be up in society. Not ay-tall; we ain't sargints."

"Shhh!" chided Crawford, "you're makin' too much noise."

"Oh, that's all right, murmured Rainey sweetly. "You needn't be ascaired of any Germans sneakin' up on you. You can dive."

Crawford did not answer. Let Rainey kid him, he thought; he had it coming to him. Furthermore, he was so miserable on his own account that Rainey's sarcasm scarcely mattered. Soon afterward he left the shell hole and made a final inspection of the trench before Sergeant Ryan came on with the new relief. Then he dispiritedly clumped down to his bunk in the dugout and went to sleep.

The tension of front-line duty continued as before. In the dugouts men slept; in the trench they waited with weary, anxious eyes for the night to pass. Half an hour before dawn the firing bays were filled with sleepy-eyed soldiers in tallow-stained helmets, which they had used for candle holders. Against their chests were shapeless gas masks which had served as pillows, and in their cold and grimy hands were still colder rifles. The time for stand-to passed without sign of an attack. Later, with the rising sun, the trench was half-deserted again. Another day reached its height and began to lower.

That afternoon found Crawford sitting on the wet clay edge of the trench—above which the tip of his steel helmet would be visible to an alert German sniper who might be hiding in No Man's Land—and looking gloomily down the sleeve of his muddy olive-drab coat to the new chevrons that had been sewed upon it. Those three stripes were bright, unwrinkled, and stitched on straight; no officer could find fault with them. Almost any private would have been delighted to wear them. Also, they stood for a considerable increase in monthly pay.

Nevertheless, Crawford had about decided to ask Lieutenant Archer to give the sergeantcy to somebody else; he was willing to be a corporal again, or even a buck private. He scowled and muttered, "Thunderation!"

Glumly he looked about—down the dark, rolling banks of the trench on the bottom of which wooded slats floated on the viscous mud and water; at the cavernous mouths of the dugouts, at the top strand of wire showing over the edge of the firing bay. It was all as new and strange and menacing as it had been the night before. Beyond the wire was that patch of pitted ground, then another barbed network, with the German trenches directly behind it. At any time during the night or day German soldiers might suddenly appear with their rifles, bombs, and flame throwers.

And Crawford was a sergeant; he would have to tell men like Rainey and Jenkins and Kirkland what to do! When he wouldn't have the least idea of what to do himself. Worse, he might have to take men across No Man's Land into the enemy wire. Well, they wouldn't go, that was certain. They wouldn't pay any attention to a sergeant who had disgraced himself as he had done last night. Despite the warmth of the April sun, he shivered.

From one of the dugouts of the seemingly deserted trench stepped Rainey, holding his rifle in one hand and steadying himself with the other. His eyes, accustomed to the darkness of the deep hole in which he had been lying since breakfast, blinked at the brightness of the day. He rubbed them with a muddy fist, then stared exaggeratedly at Crawford's sleeve. He grinned and said with mock respect:

"Why, hello, sargint!"

Crawford made a wry effort to return his grin. Realizing he had achieved only its shadow, he tried another expression of good will; he stiffened his right hand, touched the brim of his helmet, then sharply dropped his arm. "Carry on, corporal," he said, embarrassed.

Rainey clambered up beside him on the ledge. "Wonder how's chances of chow before my relief goes on."

Young Sergeant Crawford peered at him suspiciously. "What're you trying to do; kid me or something?"

Rainey's face stiffened. "Funny how a guy thinks he's got to be hard-boiled when he gets three stripes on his arm."

Crawford raised up and indignantly demanded, "Who's hard-boiled? You come here askin' me how's chances for chow! How'd I know how's chances for chow? I ain't no mess sergeant. You got sense enough to know that three stripes don't make a guy an information bureau."

Rainey eyed him critically. "I hope to tell you they don't," he said at last. "If you think I thought they did, you're crazy, that's all."

"That's all right, then," answered Crawford. "On'y I don't want any of you guys to go thinkin' I'm a wizard."

"I ain't likely to."

Both men were silent. Above them the sky was filled with something swift and trembling; and further back, a thousand yards or more, two French seventy-fives rapped out sharp reports. The soaring shells crossed shrilly overhead and broke beyond the enemy front line—crash bang!

Sergeant Crawford gave an admiring whistle through clenched teeth. "Hot damn! Give 'em hell, artillery!"

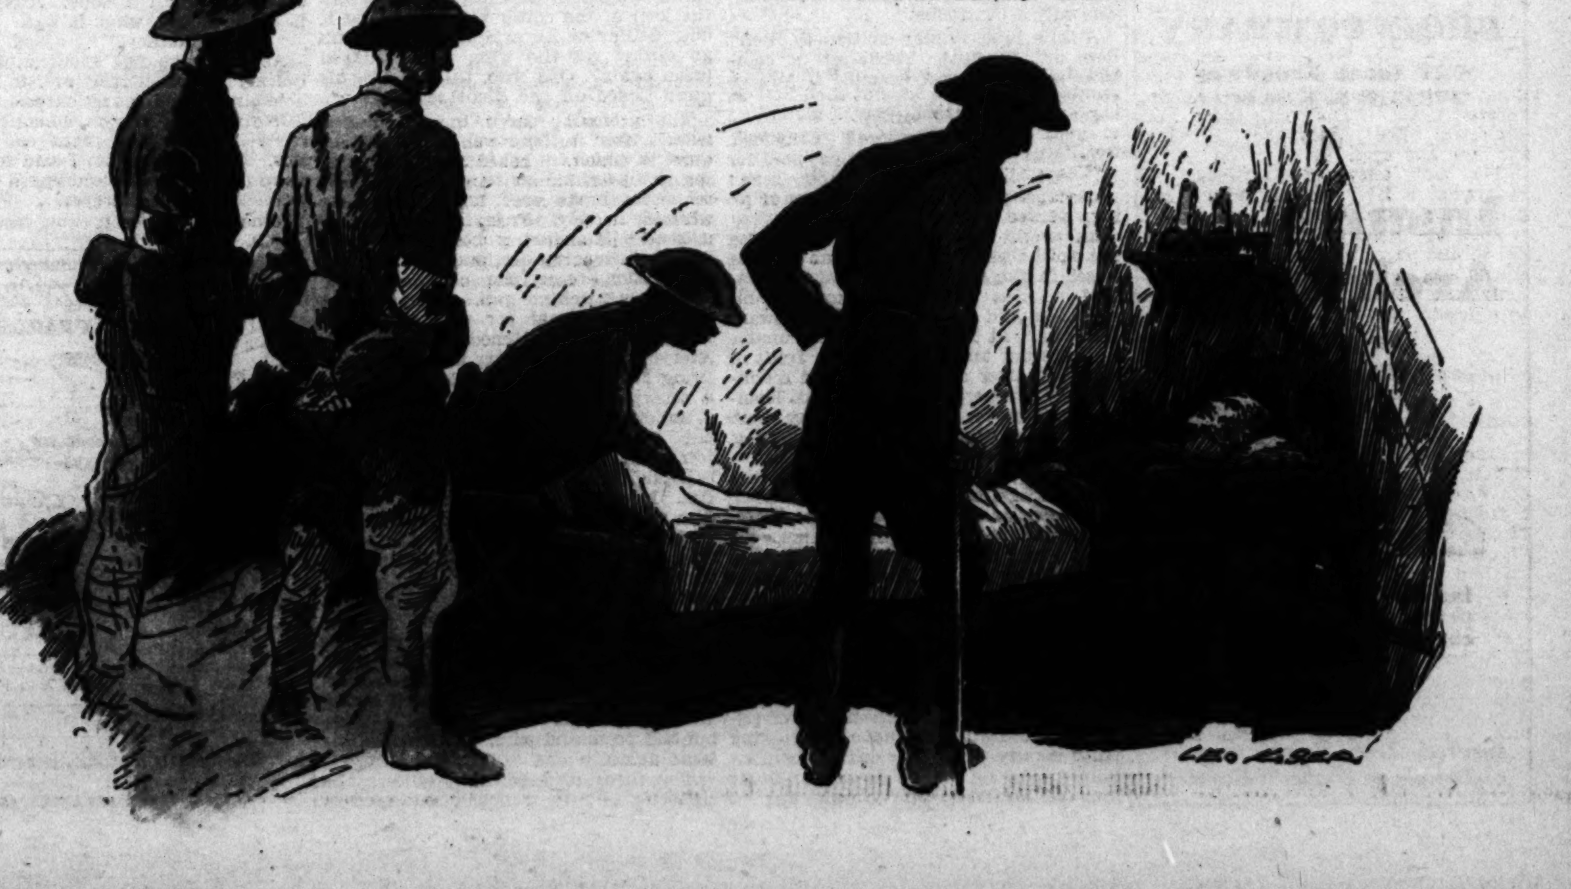
But Rainey cocked a wary eye. "Better duck while you can see where you're goin'," he advised; and slid expertly across the duckboards to the dugout steps.

Whoosh—beram! Whoo-oosh—beram—ramm! In the trench near where the two men had sat a gathering of black, pungent smoke rolled slowly outward and seemed to give forth chunks of mud and viciously flying steel.

"Jeez!" a private nervously called out from the dugout's depths, "I thought the lieutenant said this was a quiet sector."

Crawford and Kirkland reached the bottom of the slippery steps at about the same time. Crawford stumbled over the water-covered floor and sprawled on one of the bunks, which were in two double tiers.

Kirkland took up the matter of



"Where's Rainey?" he asked.

"Arbroath building is on fire. It's a block of old flats."

Wade looked in the direction the man was pointing. Now he could see clouds of smoke, and occasionally a tongue of flame.

"Two women in there—a young girl and another one," said the pedestrian. "I saw 'em waving their hands, and went to ring the fire-alarm."

"What?" John Wade went cold with horror. Something told him that one of those women was Lila.

And Lila, while he was distracted by fears for her safety, was praying that he would come to her rescue.

Things had happened very unexpectedly that evening. Golly had made his appearance and taken a rather prolonged farewell. He was, by turns, fatherly and majestic.

"Don't forget that I'll be seeing you in an hour's time. No sly tricks, you." He pointed at Anna. "I'm relying on you to keep her sensible, Lila."

The girl nodded.

Golly Oaks sniffed fastidiously.

"Don't like the smell of your petrol. But you can't have the windows open. You've brought it on yourself. You'll go with Aikness, Lila—you understand?"

She noddd again.

"Aikness an' a couple of friends. You can trust the friends."

He was scarcely out of the room and the door locked before Lila was struggling through the opening. They'll be leaving any minute now."

"I'll turn out the light now, but, if he comes back again, I'll switch it on," said Anna. "You'll be able to see the light shinthrough the open trapdoor.

The girl crept along the concrete roof and peered cautiously over the parapet. She waited, with many backward glances for the signal, until she saw the first of the cars emerge from the garage; it was followed by a second, and then she heard the gates close. She came back and whispered the news through the trapdoor.

In the meantime, Anna had collected some papers, a towel-rail, and a blanket. These she handed up to Lila.

"Now take the bottle, and be careful," she said.

Lila reached down and grasped the bottle, which was half-filled with pertol; her hand was trembling so that she could hardly hold it. When she had carried these articles to the edge of the roof, she came back to help Anna through the trapdoor.

"There's somebody knocking," Anna whispered. "It must be Aikness."

The knocks were repeated, grew louder, more peremptory. Anna clutched at Lila's hands, and managed to gain the roof, kicking away the chair on which she had been standing. Then both women lifted the trapdoor and dropped it back into place.

"I don't think Aikness will be able to open that," gasped Lila. "If he tries, we'll stand on it."

She gathered the blankets and furniture into a heap on one corner of the parapet and peered over. There were several people walking about in the street. Not far away she thought she saw a policeman. Stooping, she uncorked the bottle and poured its contents on the heap. She struck two matches, and then a third, but the wind blew them out. The fourth light held, and she dropped it on the petrol-soaked blanket. Instantly a tongue of flame leaped up, illuminating the roof and the houses around. She heard a police-whistle and saw men rushing toward the building.

She was clearly visible now in the light of the flames, and she waved her arms. Suddenly she heard a sound behind her, and, turning, saw the trapdoor slowly moving up. With a scream, she sprang upon it. It fell into place, and she heard a crash and a roar below.

And then Anna caught the sound for which she had been waiting—the distant clang of fire-bells, and, regardless of danger, she stood up on the parapet and waved her arms.

A roar of warning came up from the street, and she saw a third car speed from the garage, scattering the crowd, left and right, as it appeared round a corner.

"They've gone," she called hoarsely. "Thank Heaven, they've gone!"

Fire-engines were coming from all directions. Suddenly a red ladder-head came over the parapet, and a brass-helmeted man, followed by another, leaped upon the roof. Then Lila saw a man in civilian clothes at the top of the ladder, and as he stepped from it, she flew into John Wade's arms.

CHAPTER XXX

A BALL was in progress that night at Greenwich Hospital, and every officer, with the exception of the watch on His Majesty's torpedo-destroyer, Meridian, had gone ashore to join in the festivities. The destroyer, one of the fastest of her type, had just been assigned to special duty, and it was reported that the crew was to be increased.

On this particular night, the sentry on the gangway saw a boat approaching the ship and challenged it. Upon being told that the boat carried an urgent message for the commander, the sailor went to call the officer of the watch. At the latter's order, he told the messenger to come aboard with the letter.

"The Master Mystery"

WHO stole the famous Gairlie rubbies, that priceless collection of 811 blood-red bits of flame that had cost Lord Gairlie three-quarters of a million dollars? They vanished from Gairlie Castle as mysteriously as if they had gone up in smoke. And who was the thief who always stole red objects and who left a trail of death behind him? Scotland Yard and Tommy Delayn were hard put to it to solve the mystery, but solve it they did and in absorbing fashion, too. Read how they did it in the next two Sunday Magazines.

A Complete Novel

There were two muffled reports, and the officer and man died at their posts.

Almost instantly the destroyer was boarded by twenty yellow-faced little men, and the crew, taken by surprise, many of them sleeping, was summarily disposed of. Although there were ships anchored all about, none of them saw a thing that would lead them to believe that there was anything wrong aboard the Meridian. An officer of a tramp steamer that was lying nearby said the next day that he had heard noises coming from the ship that sounded like shots, and that he had thought it rather strange that sailors should indulge in rifle-practice at that time of night, but he had said nothing to any one of what he had heard.

Of the entire crew only one man escaped the attack of the India Rubber gang. He leaped overboard and swam to the nearest vessel, but, by the time he had made himself heard and had been hauled over the side, a black launch had approached the destroyer, and Golly Oaks and his band of gunmen had gone aboard.

Already the signal-lamp had flashed a summons to Capt. Aikness, and, in a few minutes, a swift motor-launch had brought the captain to the ship. He had with him the two guards whom Golly had assigned to accompany him, but Anna and Lila were missing.

Golly tried to question him, but the captain was so terror-stricken that he could hardly speak. He managed to whimper something about a fire.

"We'll talk about this later, and I'll settle with you when I have more time," yelled Golly. "Now get up to the bridge."

The mooring was already slipped. The Meridian was due to leave that night, and the engineer had steam up. The possibility that she might not have a full head of steam had not occurred to Golly, although Aikness had drawn his attention to that chance.

Already the firemen were below, stoking frantically. A quartermaster took the wheel, and the destroyer went down-stream, gathering speed rapidly.

Later on Golly, in the officers' cabin, interviewed Capt. Aikness.

"Now let's hear your story," he said violently. "And he sure it's a good one."

Aikness told Golly what he could of the escape of Lila and Anna from the apartment in the Arbroath building.

"Got out on the roof through a trapdoor, did they?" growled Golly, scowling. "I never knew that there was a trapdoor there. And I've been over the place half a dozen times."

"It was under the plaster," said Aikness, "In the little hall off the living-room. I saw a notice on the wall—under some torn wall-paper. They must have found that. It was a fire-notice, and it said that there was a trapdoor in the roof."

"And they started a fire!" mourned Golly. "To think that I was the one who gave 'em the petrol. The deceivin' little animal! She said she wanted to clean her coat, and I believed her! Well, I'll go back and get her, one of these days. I don't usually miss what I go after." He showed his teeth in a grin, but he was not amused.

"We'd better make speed while we can," urged Aikness. "They'll be after us in no time. We must crowd on every pound of steam."

"Be after us, will they?" snarled Golly. "Haven't I told you that I've taken care of all that? We're picking up the first L. and M. boat and lying alongside of her. There's one due out of port this afternoon. And, if they send cruisers to catch me, I'm sinking that L. and M. boat, passengers and all. D'ye hear? I'm blowing the whole outfit to smithereens. And with no danger to us. Those boats don't carry guns in peace time."

So that was the plan to which Golly had referred so darkly on another occasion! Capt. Aikness gasped at the wickedness of it. To wipe out an entire shipload of human beings!

The destroyer continued at full speed, ran risks that would have turned a responsible skipper's hair white, and came, at last, to the open sea.

"There she goes!" Golly stood by the side of Capt. Aikness on the bridge, focusing a pair of night glasses upon a ship that was rapidly approaching. "I can pick her up. I've got a man on her. Give him a signal."

The signal-lamp flickered twice, and a light winked from the stern of the other ship. For a moment the signals flew back and forth, and Golly chuckled to himself.

"It's just as I planned it—just as I wanted it to be," he murmured, rubbing his hands. "Now we'll have some fun. Watch me now."

At that moment a great beam of blinding light swept out from the land and moved slowly across the water until it picked up the destroyer. So powerful was it that both Golly and Capt. Aikness covered their faces and shrank away as it swept over them.

"Whack her up," shouted Golly. "Every ounce of steam—every ounce. We've got to overtake that packet ahead."

Flames flew from the destroyer's funnels. She shivered and shook under the throbbing of her engines, but the great beam of light followed her relentlessly, no matter how fast she moved.

And then Golly, staring landward, saw a red pencil of light flashing toward the destroyer, and a moment later the roar of an explosion was heard. They could not see the shell strike the water, for it fell outside the focus of the light.

Again came that long red flash, and something screamed overhead.

"They're straddling us," whispered Aikness. "They'll get us. They'll get us. If only we could—"

A shell struck the destroyer amidships, and a terrific explosion followed. Hundreds of tons of water were thrown high into the air, and the sea was strewn with wreckage.

The boats from a sister destroyer remained for hours over the spot where the Meridian had gone down, but they could find only one survivor—a little man who was strapped to a huge life-buoy.

"My name's Oaks," he said, when they hauled him aboard. "Golly Oaks. I'm giving no trouble—I'm not that kind of a man. I'm all for peace and quiet and getting on well with everybody. Why, I saved a little baby once. The other fellows was for leaving her, but I couldn't bear the thought of it. Name of Lila Smith—she's a beautiful young lady now."

He became hysterical while he was being taken back to London, and, when he found himself facing a group of stern-faced police officials in Scotland Yard, he feigned insanity. Not a word could be gotten out of him, but a confession was not necessary to the Crown's case.

There was the testimony of Raggit Lane and Anna. Their stories were all that were necessary to end the evil course of the leader of the India Rubber men.

And Golly Oaks, in the prisoners' dock, heard the little old woman, whom for years he had regarded as mildly insane, speak the words that were his doom. His eyes blazed as she recounted the things that she had seen, as she revealed the plot that had resulted in the burning of the old Pattison mansion and the kidnaping of the baby, Delia Pattison.

But it was against Raggit Lane that Golly's hatred seemed strongest. Lane escaped death by turning King's evidence, and the pleasure that he took in making things as bad as possible for his old chief was most apparent.

The deeds of the India Rubber men were enough to make the most hardened person shudder. Crime after crime, a tremendous game played for huge stakes—and all planned by little Golly Oaks and executed under his direction.

John Wade and his colleagues uncovered the South American cache to which, for years, the plunder of the gang had been sent, to await the time of final division, and this cleared away the mystery that had surrounded a long list of unsolved crimes for a period of more than twenty years.

But of the human beings who had been the victims of Golly's almost unbelievable cruelty and greed only Lila and Anna had escaped.

After he had been sentenced to death, Golly tried to console himself with music, and took to singing in his cell. The other prisoners and the warders who watched him made bitter complaints. But condemned men have their privileges. He sang on the morning of his execution, in his reedy falsetto, and, when the trap dropped with a clang, the warders were not half so sorry for him as they had been for a number of other men who had passed out by that same route.

yard. And the three others, coming out across it, finally.

"Did you get the stuff?" he asked them.

"You said it," said Monkey Murphy.

"And you go ahead—and show us the way!" Wingate ordered.

And he scarcely said it before there was this sound like somebody stumbling. And then in a second or two they were at the corner where the passageway turned at right angles toward the shore.

"What's this?" said Wingate, whispering.

For straight ahead, with a light on shore in back of it, like a white crystal halo, was a black thick form coming slowly on. And the dope fiend got busy, right away, with his ready firearm—aiming.

"Don't. For God's sake!" the cop's son whispered, seeing who it was.

And they stopped for a second or two, watching the thing—a curious thing to see and hear: The old man coming stealing on, still and erect. And stopping every now and then, to whisper: "Mick! Micky! Come out here. To your father!"

And all the time the light behind marking him out like the black bull's eye on a target. And the dope fiend straining to let him have it. And Wingate beside him whispering: "What's the idea? Why is he whispering for you?"

All at once the goose flesh rose up all over the cop's son—the sense of the thing he was at rushing over him. "Wait!" he whispered—and grabbed the murderer's pistol.

"What's this—a double cross—you two are working?" Wingate whispered in his ear.

"Here. Let me take him!" The son was begging Wingate. "I'll handle him. Or if I don't, you can handle me."

He got him—but not right—the blow glancing off his jaw; in the excitement and dark—and the attempt to swing in around and not knock him headlong into the river.

Now the son was grappling with the father—and the old man was fighting back.

"Wait. This should be good," said Wingate—and stopped and lighted up a cigarette that had been hanging in his lips.

For they were up and down now, the father and son, pushing and fighting; and working around now to the river's side, behind the factory from the land.

"Now!" said the voice of Wingate.

And Monkey Murphy, who had been standing in front, apparently pushing back the overexcitable dope fiend, tapped the cop's son back of the ear with his heavy pistol butt; and the old man pushing all his might—against nothing now—the two went whirling out over into the black dimpling water underneath.

But the tide, it seems, fooled them.

He was holding there, like grim death, on the further side in the dark. The three overhead gone along. Out beyond him the gray black water. And no old man!

He listened—there was nothing! He saw some time must have passed. And suddenly the thing rushed over him all at once!

"Pop!" he called, soft at first, and then louder—as he saw what had happened—watching the black gurgling tide slip north by the corner.

"Pop!" he called again. And stopped—watching out over the empty slate colored water, with the black horizon, and the one far light upon the other shore.

No answer—now, either!

"God!" he said, going crazy—realizing now without a doubt, where he stood. His old man's murderer—as if he had done it with his own hands! Watching whether or not the sector was a quiet one. "Be all right if the Frogs was still behind them guns, but them American artillerymen crave action. They don't care how peeved it makes the Squareheads. Now, the Squareheads and the Frogs, they got along all right. Across from each other up here almost four years, and never had any trouble to speak of. Jist shoot enough at each other to keep their barrels from growing rusty. Then we come along—"

Whee-ee-ee! The roof of the dugout shook; there was an angry roar; then smoke drifted down the dark diagonal shaft from the trench.

"Then we come along," continued Rainey imperturbably, "and the artillery shells hell out of them and they shell hell out of us. And it ain't no quiet sector no more. Ain't that right, sergeant?" he appealed jocosely to Crawford.

The young sergeant contented himself with caustic query: "Don't sound like a quiet sector, does it?"

From the top of the shaft the precise voice of Lieutenant Archer shouted:

"Out you come, you men. Time for stand-to."

Rubber boots splashed through the water that covered the dugout floor, and a private muttered nervously, "Long about this time of day the Germans come over, ain't it?"

If there was any answer it was lost in the sound of shuffling boots and the explosion of a shell farther along the trench. Each man went up into the light with the muscles of his face drawn tight and his helmet feeling wabbly. Sergeant Crawford was no exception. Twice before the sun had clearly broken, and twice as it was about to set he had come up those slippery stairs to the trench with the feeling that when he turned toward the barbed wire he would see No Man's Land bristling with Germans, who were ready to strike with bombs, flame throwers and bayoneted rifles. He had that same anticipation on this, the third evening. But he hid his fear and hesitancy as a soldier will—particularly one who has just been made a sergeant.

At the top of the shaft stood Lieutenant Archer, his shouders hunched and his thin nose twitching, watching the men come up. He saw Crawford.

"Sergeant, any more men down there?"

"No, sir." Even as the words popped out, young Crawford wanted to recall them. Unofficious by nature and inexperienced at his job, he had not looked to see whether the dugout had been completely emptied of men. Yet the words had been spoken and it would be foolish to explain. This sergeant business! he thought bitterly. Now if anybody else was down there the sergeant would get the blame. He walked on past his officer.

Lieutenant Archer said as he went by, "Clear down to the end of the second section, Crawford. By the Hotchkiss emplacement."

"Yes, sir."

The Hotchkiss machine-gun emplacement was to the extreme left of the platoon, which was also the extreme left of the trench at that point. For there the line bent in sharply and was unguarded until it straightened out again three hundred yards further on. Crawford slid carefully along the duckboards past the backs of the soldiers who stood in the firing bays looking dazedly over the parapet at the rusty wire of No Man's Land. Near the Hotchkiss crew—they and their gun were camouflaged by intricately woven branches—he stopped, rested the butt of his rifle on the toe of his rubber boot, and looked over the edge of the trench.

It appeared quiet, almost peaceful. But on the uneven ground beyond the wire lay an old leather boot. Crawford wondered uneasily what had become of the man who had worn it.

After awhile the shelling ceased. A gray-green dusk fell over the rolling, wooded country. Darkness came, and all of the men except those of the first relief shuffled back to their dugouts. Crawford remained near the end of the trench. He would be on duty, as on the night before. Shortly after stand-down, Rainey and Jenkins passed him, bound for the shell hole which they guarded. He could barely discern them in the enveloping night.

The routine of the trench went on. Crawford began a stealthy tour, going first down to the right and then doubling back again. Except for the sound of his steps and the challenges of the alert sentries in the firing bays the sector was still, though farther to the east the rattle of a distant machine gun could be heard. He walked slowly, dreading the moment when he would have to go out and sit with Rainey and Jenkins in the shell hole. Already he could hear Rainey's sarcastic remarks that showed up his shortcomings as a sergeant.

By the radium dial of his wrist watch—worn high enough to be concealed beneath his coat sleeve—it was nine o'clock when he went past the machine-gun emplacement and stepped from the trench out into the open field. Three more hours before Sergt. Ryan was to relieve him. Well, he thought; and bracing himself as if for a shock, he crept out to the outpost.

"Well, well," whispered Rainey as Crawford sat down, "if here ain't the Sargint! How goes it, old-timer?"

Crawford gave no answer. If only there was some way, he thought, in which he could make Rainey acknowledge the weight of his authority without bringing in the fact that he was a sergeant. But that, he admitted ruefully, was only a daydream.

A little later Rainey cautioned, "Don't doze off, Sargint! You'll set us common soldiers a bad example if you go to sleep."

Jenkins chuckled softly.

"Pipe down," muttered Crawford. "You talk as much as if you got paid for it." He leaned forward and began thoughtfully to scan the darkness of No Man's Land.

The night wore on. With its passing the April chill seemed to deepen and the water in the bottom of the outpost was cold as ice. Crawford hunched his shoulders and continued to stare toward the wire. At first he had been unable to make out anything at all in front of him, but after a while he could distinguish short perpendicular marks looming against the blackness. They were the posts on which the wire was strung. On these he kept his gaze.

Once he turned his head. Beside him Rainey and Jenkins were slumped down motionless on the wide board seat. Their heads were bent as if their chins were resting on their chests, and they were breathing evenly. It came to him with a kind of shock they were sleeping; dozing, at any rate. He lifted his hand toward Rainey's shoulder, then withdrew it. Why should he waken him, he thought. Let him go ahead and sleep; let both of them sleep. He got a slightly malicious sort of satisfaction out of sitting there in the night and knowing that at any time he could confuse Rainey. All he had to do was to shake him and mutter to him to wake up!

He looked toward the wire again and settled himself to pass the next half hour or so before making another tour of the trench. The night was as quiet as he had ever known one to be anywhere. Through the whole width and breadth of the sector he could not hear the sound of a shot. And not since he came into the outpost had an illuminating rocket cast its harsh brilliance from the sky. This silence was so pure he could almost feel it in the air. It was also strange and eerie. He waited with watchful eyes on the wire out in front.

A sharp click, every minute, came from somewhere out in front. It was like the sound of a squirrel's teeth champing through the shell of a nut. Crawford listened so intently that the nerves about his ears felt strained and knotted. The sound was repeated, and he saw, or thought he saw, a shadowy movement among the posts. Stealthily he fitted a bomb into the palm of his right hand. He wanted to throw it, to make sure whether anything was stirring in the wire. He would have thrown it if it hadn't been for what had happened the night before, when he made a fool of himself by running from Lieut. Archer's cigarette lighter. Steadied by that remembrance he waited tensely.

Again he heard the dry, clicking noise. This time he was nearly certain that something moved. Still, there was a doubt. So many men strange to the trenches had heard and seen things in the wire. On the first night the outfit arrived each of the three reliefs had taken its turn at flinging bombs out into No Man's Land, thinking they were throwing them at Germans, when they were merely wasting them on the posts and stumps. Crawford determined to make sure of what he was about before he brought any more scorn on his head.

Cautiously he swung over the edge of the shell hole and began crawling forward. A few yards, at most, he thought, would be enough for him to go in order to see more accurately what was taking place. On hands and knees he pushed quietly through the wet grass. And now, away from the shell hole, he felt the night surrounding him. His knees were weak and wabbly and his eyes blinked rapidly with excitement. If Rainey woke up and heard him he might take him for a German and fire. Or those Hotchkiss gunners might hear him. To his ears the rustling of a leaf had become loud as the loudest shout.

Perhaps twenty yards from the wire he stopped. Holding his breath, he listened. From in front of him came the hiss of a whisper, then silence, then the clicking noise. That sound was sharper and more metallic now. And it was made by clippers. Whoever was out there was cutting the barbed strands, he was sure. They were going about it in a businesslike manner, those bulky figures crouching among the posts.

His eyes blinking, his teeth clenched, he rose to one knee and leaned back to throw the bomb. His finger slipped into the loop of the cotter pin and pulled it out. Stiffening his arm, he let the bomb go sailing for the wire, then dropped down again. One, two, three, four—his mind ticked off the silent seconds.

The grenade roared in the barbed wire. After it there was a moment of quiet in which he heard somebody cursing in an unfamiliar tongue. Then pistol shots broke over him, the bullets whining fiercely. From his own trench a sentry launched a bomb. It burst with a furious uproar, and into this reverberation came the clatter of the Hotchkiss machine gun. It was like a prearranged signal for general pandemonium. He flattened himself out. Everybody was throwing hand grenades, firing rifles and pistols. In the trench a sentry gave an excited shout.

Bullets criss-crossed above him. Even the German machine gunners had joined in. Rat-tat-tat-t-t-t. Bzzt-zip!

Suddenly he felt a blow on his shoulder. It was as if some one had struck him with a club. But there was nobody about. After a while the bruise began to ache and burn; and, putting his fingers against it, he discovered that it wasn't a bruise at all, but a dripping wound made by jacketed steel.

Illuminating rockets popped up from the trench behind him. In the glare they made, the wire could be seen. Crawford gritted his teeth and stared in front of him. He could see nothing but the posts and wire. He dropped his head again.

The firing died down as officers and noncoms in both trenches, reassured by the rockets that they were not being attacked, calmed the sentries and the men who had been called up from the dugouts to stand by. A little later the night was once more silent. Crawford lay there with his throbbing arm, trying desperately to decide whether he should try to crawl back to the shell hole or call out to Rainey to send after him. He was pretty sure he could walk; but if he started to go back they might think he was a German and fire on him.

He called, "Rainey!" and lay stretched out flat as the cry left his trembling lips.

Not Rainey's but the voice of Lieut. Archer answered, "Who's that?"

Crawford's relief that he had been answered by words rather than by bullets was so great that he nearly blubbered. "It's Crawford," he said at last. "I'm hit."

The Lieutenant spoke to some one else. Then he called, "All right; wait a minute."

Crawford lay back and waited with shut eyes. After what seemed an interminable stretch he heard a voice. But it came not from his trench but from the wire. And it said, "Ach!—Gott!"

Crawford lifted his head and tried to answer, but he had suddenly become weak and it was so enervatingly blissful to hear the stolid tramp of the stretcher bearers—his own stretcher bearers—that he relaxed and was still, until one of them whispered, "Crawford." He answered and felt their arms around his legs and waist. "I can walk all right," he told them. But they paid no attention. On the stretched canvas they carried him close to the shell hole. Then they paused, and Crawford was conscious of Lieut. Archer standing over him.

"They get you badly, Sergeant?" asked the Lieutenant quickly.

"No, sir," answered Crawford. "I ain't hit bad. But there's a German out there in the wire."

"The devil there is! Ryan!"—the Lieutenant's voice shook with eagerness—"get a couple more stretcher bearers and send my runner for the intelligence officer." He left the shell hole and began walking toward the wire as Crawford was carried down into the trench.

Crawford lay in the Lieutenant's dugout. Above him, in the light of two burning candles, he saw the round, red-mustached face of the regimental surgeon, who bent over him and said with childlike satisfaction.

"Well, well; our first casualty, eh? We'll have you fixed up in short order."

Nearby was another stretcher on which a moaning German lay; and beside him sat the sharp-faced intelligence officer. He, too, was pleased. And so was Lieut. Archer, to whom he was saying:

"That's not bad, Archer, not bad at all; to take the first prisoner in the regiment!"

Crawford heard and saw these things, but vaguely. He alone was dissatisfied. There was something he had meant to do, but had left undone. After a while it came to him what it was.

"Where's Rainey?" he asked.

As he spoke the Lieutenant crossed quickly and solicitously over to him.

"Rainey's still out on outpost," he said. "Do you want him very much?"

"Well," Crawford managed, "I guess not. But you tell him I said for him to snap into it." And he dropped back and peacefuly closed his eyes.

they let me out of my room to have my food. Because they thought I was mad, they took no notice of me. The captain jeered at me. But Golly never jeered. He was looking at me as if he were wondering whether it would be a good idea to put me out of the way, then and there."

"Oh, don't, don't!" shuddered Lila. "Anna, you make my blood run cold."

The woman's arm went around her.

"You'll think I must still be a little crazy, to frighten you so, my pet. But I'll be sensible. He told me to be! Now let us see if we can get the rest of that wallpaper off."

"I've bolted the door," said Lila. "If he comes back, we'll hear him."

It was Lila who had discovered, behind a strip of torn wallpaper, a small section of a printed notice over which the paper had been hung. At some period there had been pasted on the walls of every floor of the building certain notices that set forth the county council regulations for the safeguarding of workmen. Lila, of course, did not know that the building had been used as a munitions factory, but, when she drew Anna's attention to the little scrap of printing, the old woman saw its significance.

The fear of interruption had made her defer the uncovering of the notice until later in the evening. But now they dabbed water on the wallpaper until it was soaked, and then, with the greatest care, they scraped it away until the notice was fully revealed. Lila read it aloud:

> "In case of fires, emergency squad will stand by hydrants, and all other employes will pass in an orderly manner to the lower floor. In case of fire on the lower floor or in the basement, pull down ladder above and trap will open automatically. Move to the end of the roof and throw out rope ladders placed in lockers at regular intervals along the parapet. Keep calm. The greatest danger in a fire is panic."

"There's a trap-door somewhere in the ceiling," said Anna.

Lila went out into the dining-room, brought in a chair, mounted it, and felt gingerly along the ceiling. She pressed a surface in the center, and it bulged upward; cracks appeared in the plaster.

"It's here," she whispered.

Just then there was a gentle rapping on the outer door of the flat. Lila gave a cry of alarm, for the floor of the room was specked with bits of white plaster. One had only to take a look at the ceiling to realize that there was something wrong.

"Lock the door, and don't come out," said Anna quickly, and then she went in to the hall. Golly was impatiently rattling the knob, and she hastened to admit him.

"What are you up to?" He looked at her suspiciously. "Where's Lila? Why was the door bolted from the inside?"

"Lila's having a bath," said Anna, "and I was looking for the towels." The reply seemed to satisfy him.

"I want to have a chat with you," he said. "I suppose, miss, you've never been to South America?"

"No," said Anna.

"Fine country. I made a trip there once. Flowers. Warm in winter. Nothing to do but just live! Plenty of money—or you will have; books, motor-cars, best of food. How does that strike you?"

"It sounds wonderful," she said quietly.

"That's what's coming to you," he said, pointing his finger at her, "if you're a good girl, and don't give me any trouble. Help me with her"—he jerked his thumb in the direction of the adjoining room—"don't make any more scenes, and that's what you'll have. Do you get me? But suppose you're not sensible; suppose you start kicking up a fuss, telling her this, that and the other about me? What do you think's going to happen to you?"

She did not answer.

"You know—I'll bet you know! They'll be picking you out of the river, and people will be saying 'Who's she?' and 'Oh, she's nobody.' That's all the notice they will take of you. You'll be 'an unidentified woman,' and that'll be your finish."

"That will be my finish," she repeated slowly.

"I don't need to say any more to an intelligent lady," said Golly. He patted her shoulder paternally. "We understand each other. Give my love to Lila, and, when you've got nothing better to do, you can say a few words about me. I'd make a good husband. I've sowed me wild oats. Do you want any money?" He put his hand to his breast pocket.

She shook her head.

"I can't spend it now," she said, and Golly smiled.

"Your brain's working," he said, and with a wink he left her.

CHAPTER XXVIII

When Golly Oaks had left the apartment, Anna stood at the door, listening, for several minutes, before she returned to Lila. The girl was alarmed when she saw the strained, frightened look on her old nurse's face.

"No, no—it's nothing, my dear," said Anna, as Lila tried to draw from her the reason for her terror.

She opened a drawer in the table, took out a knife, and without a word, thrust it into the ceiling at the spot where the faint outlines of the trap-door could now be seen. The plaster showered down upon her head, but she worked away until the laths were exposed.

Then she picked up the lamp and thrust it toward the ceiling.

"See!" she cried. "There's the trap-door!"

More plaster and laths had to be torn away, before she could attempt to open the door, and she toiled on. It was a hard, slow task, for she had only the knife with which to work.

At last she had made an opening large enough to admit her head and shoulders. She raised her arms and pushed against the door with all her strength, but it did not budge. Lila found a broom in the pantry, and together they thrust it against the door. Their combined efforts opened it the merest crack. But that was a beginning, at least.

Lila rushed about the apartment, snatching up whatever she could find that could be forced into the opening, to widen it. Anna wedged these in, as fast as she could.

Wider and wider grew the square of sky visible through the opening, till, at three o'clock in the morning, almost exhausted by her efforts, Anna dragged herself through the space and onto the roof above. When she recovered her breath, she summoned all her strength and, pulling the creaking trap-door, wide open, extended her hand to the girl below and drew her up to the roof.

Immediately they began their search for the rope ladders and the lockers, but, if there ever were such appliances, they had been removed. The two women were in despair. In less than an hour the first streaks of dawn would be visible in the sky. To return to the apartment was to risk having their attempt at escape found out in the morning, but it was not safe to remain on the roof.

At last Anna lowered herself into the room below and helped Lila to descend. To close the trapdoor was an impossibility. They must take the risk of somebody's going on the roof during the day and finding it open.

Though she was weary beyond belief, Lila slept restlessly, and she was awake and dressed before breakfast was brought in.

Golly Oaks paid her an early call. But he was not very genial. Evidently something had happened that morning to disturb his equanimity.

"I shall be taking you ladies away tonight," he said, "along about nine o'clock. I shan't be able to go with you myself, but a couple of friends of mine will travel with you. You'll give no trouble—you understand, Lila? I won't be responsible, if you do."

"Where are you taking us?" she asked.

He ignored her question.

"The clothes you've been wearing will do," he went on. "And tell that woman it'll pay her to keep quiet—is she all right now? Not crazy, or anything?"

Lila shook her head. She was nerving herself to make the request that Anna had asked her to make.

"Do you think you can manage her?" Golly insisted.

In spite of her anxiety, Lila smiled.

"I'm perfectly sure I can," she said.

"I suppose she's told you about your grandmother and all that? Well, you had to know, sooner or later."

He walked toward the door and then turned back, as if he had just remembered something that he wanted to say.

"By the way, one of the boys got Johnny Wade last night. Shot him clean through the heart."

He was watching her intently; saw her eyes open in horror and the color leave her face.

"Bad luck, eh? Good fellow, Johnny; not much of a policeman, but a good fellow."

There was something in his tone, in his look, that told her he was lying—that the story of the death of John Wade was a fabrication to sound her out. She had to hold tight to this belief, or she would have collapsed.

"Friend of yours, Lila? Dear, dear! What a loss to the force! An active and intelligent officer, cut off, as it were, in his prime." Golly spoke rapidly, as if the subject did not interest him greatly, but his eyes did not leave her face.

Now she was certain that he lied, and she felt a tremendous sense of relief.

And Golly, when he saw the color come back to her face, thought he knew the reason, but he was wrong.

"Bit of a shock to you, Lila? Well, we all have to bear it. Think of what it must have meant to me when I heard about your poor auntie. By the way, where is Anna?"

"In her room, I think. Do you want her?"

"No, I don't think so. I shan't be seeing much of you today. Now you girls behave."

And then Lila made the request that she had been trying to make throughout the interview.

"Could I have some benzine?"

"What's that?" he asked suspiciously.

"There are some stains on my dress. I want to sponge them out."

Was she clever enough to deceive him? Apparently she was.

"That's right, my girl; you keep yourself tidy. A very excellent habit. But, come to think of it, I don't know whether we've got any benzine. Would petrol do?"

She nodded, not trusting herself to speak. He went out and was gone some minutes. When he returned, he had a pint bottle of petrol.

We wiped his hands on a handkerchief and wrinkled up his nose.

"Let me put it in the bathroom for you."

She was rigid with fear at the thought of his seeing the havoc that opening the trap-door had caused.

"No, I want to use it now."

It had been Anna's suggestion that she have a basin and her coat on the table. Golly put the bottle down and left her. Anna, who was waiting in the next room, heard the door close and the bolt click. She rushed out in great excitement and seized the bottle.

"Why do you want the stuff?" asked Lila. "I don't understand. I nearly died with fright when he said he'd put it in the bathroom. I was so afraid he'd see the hole in the ceiling."

But Anna would not satisfy Lila's curiosity. She poured a portion of the petrol into the basin and went about cleaning the coat. The remainder of the fluid she hid in her room. Golly, who was standing outside the door, sniffed the pungent odor, and smiled to himself. Then he tiptoed away. He had a great many things to attend to.

There was much activity at Arbroath building that day—meetings and telephone conversations. One of the more innocent-looking "tenants" went into the city, despatching telegrams at every postoffice along the way. Aikness was called in for a consultation. He was shaking with fear that he could hardly conceal, for Golly had just revealed his plans, and their very daring was sufficient to shatter stronger nerves than the captain's.

"I've promised the boys a clean-up and a get-away, and they're going to have it," said Golly. "But you needn't be in on it. You'll take the girls to Greenwich and join me when you get back." He pushed a paper across the table. "The car will get you there—" he made a mark on the plan before him— "in exactly two minutes. I'm allowing you three. There'll be a launch to pick you up and—"

"Do you think it will go as smoothly as that?"

"Don't interrupt me," snarled Golly. "Listen! At nine-eleven we open Kinshner's, at one end of Bond street, and the West Diamond Syndicate at the other. We'll have to blow the safe at Kinshner's, but that'll be dead easy; it's old-fashioned, anyway. They're getting a new one in next year. I'm not asking you to stand in on this. There'll be shooting, and you won't like it. We ought to get a hundred and fifty thousand pounds tonight from the two places, and that'll be all we want." He rubbed his hands gleefully. "I'd like to be here to see the papers in the morning."

CHAPTER XXIX

A note, hurriedly scrawled, came from Ricord to Inspector Elk late that afternoon:

> "There's something doing tonight; in the West End, I think. I've had a tip not to go anywhere near Piccadilly."

Such a frank warning from Ricord was not to be ignored. He very seldom went out of his way to communicate with the police, but, when he did, his news was always worth attention. Elk immediately got his superior on the telephone.

"Warn the divisional inspector," said that official. "I'll be with you right away. Where's John Wade?"

"He's up at Brixton, interviewing Raggit Lane," said Elk. "I'm expecting him back at any moment."

John Wade was, as a matter of fact, on the wire at that very time, trying to get Elk, and, soon after the inspector had hung up, Wade's call came through.

"Lane wants to turn King's evidence" he told Elk. "He's given me a lot of incriminating facts. Do you remember Arbroath building?"

For a moment Elk did not recall the place.

"That building may be their headquarters, if they decide that the time is ripe to start big trouble. Lane isn't sure that they think it is because Golly Oaks never takes any one into his confidence. But Lane's pretty certain that they'll operate from Notting Hill. He wasn't able to tell me much of the plan of the building, because he was in it only once, and he doesn't know the neighborhood. He says that a big raid is planned for Friday night."

"Make it tonight," said Elk, "and rush up here as fast as you can. The chief wants to see you.. He's on his way here now."

By the time John Wade arrived, the West End was filled with plain-clothes men; but it seemed as if their vigil was to be undisturbed, until, at about ten minutes past nine, a dull explosion shook Bond street and was followed, within a few seconds, by another. A police whistle blew, and the chase began. An emergency squad car, racing to the scene, was completely wrecked and two of the officers in it were injured when a huge motor-lorry drove from a side street into its path. The driver of the lorry escaped.

While this was happening, and detectives were flying down Bond street, a high-powered motor-car drew up at the curb, before Kinshner's shop, and the chauffeur threw open the door. Four men strolled out of the shop and walked toward the car. A policeman turned to grab them, and the first shot was fired in the amazing battle that followed.

The policeman went down with a broken shoulder, and, as the car moved forward, two plain-clothes men sprang upon the running-board, but they paid for their daring with their lives.

Suddenly the West End was startled to hear the rattle of machine guns. The car sped across Piccadilly, dodged between two swerving vehicles into Jermyn street, turned into St. James's street, traveling against the traffic, and was in the park and lost to sight before the first of the police motor-patrols had swung out of Pall Mall.

But the second party of raiders did not escape so easily. They stepped from the back door of the West Diamond Syndicate into the midst of a group of armed detectives. There was a quick exchange of shots, and one of the burglars fell to the ground, badly wounded. The other three shot their way out, spraying their pursuers with bullets from an automatic rifle that projected over the back of the car to which they fled.

As they turned into Oxford street, a motor-bus driver, realizing what was happening, brought his vehicle across the road to bar their path. They dodged behind it, fired at the conductor, without hitting him, and sped along Oxford street. But their pursuers were on their heels. Oblivious of the hail of bullets that poured from a machine gun, a police car flew after them, until a bullet smashed one of its front wheels, and threw the machine against a lamp-post.

Every outlying station had been notified of the raid. Police reserves were swarming to divisional headquarters, and additional cars had been seized or borrowed to take up the chase.

John Wade heard the staccato rattle of an automatic as he was walking along Piccadilly with Elk. Then he saw the raiders' car dash across the thoroughfare and disappear.

"It's the most daring thing they've done," said a breathless divisional officer, whom they met in Bond street. "Smashed the jeweler's safe, and didn't even attempt to hide themselves. In fact, one of our men saw them at work on the safe and 'phoned for help. If he'd blown his whistle, we might have got them."

Wade did not even trouble to examine the premises. He hurried back to Scotland Yard with Elk, and went into a conference, where the confession made by Raggit Lane was being discussed.

The question of paramount importance was how to find Golly Oaks.

"He may have gone back to the Arbroath building," said the superintendent. "At any rate, there is no harm in cleaning up the place. Pick your men, Wade; you'd better take rifles with you."

It was twenty minutes to ten when the first of the police cars ran into the street leading to Arbroath building. As it did so, there was a clang of gongs and a motor fire-engine came out of a cross-road, swerved, missed the police car by inches, and went on.

John Wade shouted at a pedestrian, who ran toward them:

"What's the trouble?"

FLATTERING MAMMA

By Alma Whitaker

TODAY we mammas will be flattered unto embarrassment. It is very confusing to be flattered to high heaven on Mother's Day and scolded all the rest of the year.

Today we must exude gracious poise, as preachers, radio speakers, editorial writers, politicians—and our own consciously generous families—tell us how good we are. All the week there have been compliments raging around us. Women's club luncheons, school social functions, vaudeville acts, motion pictures galore set apart time in which Mother is proclaimed, flattered, exalted, the while the prehensive amongst us will endeavor to stifle our consciences.

Because—ahem—we know that we are not anywhere near as bad as they tell us we are the other 364 days in the year, nor yet anything like as angelic and superior as they insist on Mother's Day. We are tempted to exchange a wink or two . . . . either way.

On the other hand, we cannot help feeling that most of this fulsome sentiment is meant for great-grandmamma. In every vaudeville act dedicated to us, for instance, mamma is an aged, long-haired, gray-haired, long-skirted and sadly out of date old dear, who sits alone and forlorn, hanging upon the mailman's footsteps, awaiting word from her absent and neglectful boy. We are shocked to discover that boys ever neglect that kind of an approved mamma, who was trained in the days when mothers were mothers and knew their job beyond all criticism of preachers.

If those dears brought their families up so much better than modern mothers do, how comes she is so abdominably neglected? And—er—what inducement is there for us to emulate her methods? We can be just as lugubriously forlorn in our old age—with bobbed hair and a touch of rouge.

I attended a school function during this hectic week. Two nice boys about fourteen years of age, recited yum-yummy speeches about the infinite superiority of mothers and a little girl elocuted a poem about us. What crowns of glory, virtue, nobility and supreme self-sacrifice they showered us with! Phew!

There wasn't a mother among us who could have ever lived up to that all-encompassing ideal which those young orators so bravely proclaimed.

For that matter few of those virtues so generously itemized as belonging to our superior characters would have been good for the family at all. If we really were such saintly, mushy darlings, our young folks would have a high old time twiddling us 'round their little fingers and committing all their modern fancy sins in the easy assurance that mother could be hoodwinked any old time. We rather gathered that the ideal mamma reeks of forgiving innocence, tearful generosity, sweet martyrdom, tender humility and enslaving industry. She gives all and accepts nothing (unless, of course, she approves of these exhortations to give her presents on Mother's Day) and is a trifle sweeter when sonny boy or lovely girl does something unpleasant and gets into trouble.

Whereas there is quite a lot to be said for a dash of Spartan in mamma—quite a noticeable dash that makes itself felt on occasion. In fact, between Mother's Days, we are exhorted to be much stronger disciplinarians. Quite nice Christian preachers accuse us of being "too easy" and wrecking the American home.

I mean to say, you know, that even the same teacher who trains little Johnny to recite those superlative Mother's Day orations, is quite capable of writing a curt note to mother advising her that she isn't firm and stern enough with Johnny,who, she regrets to report, carved his sinful initials on a school post with the abominable knife his uncle gave him last Christmas. And his fingernails are an outrage . . .

Then again in order to be a mother these days, it is desirable to have children—but never, never to make the mistake of having too many. Good judgment in this matter is most important. The 34-year-old wife of a janitor who has twenty-one children, and the college girl mother who has nine—both needing a little help on the vulgar financial side of their problem, albeit there is nothing the matter with the babies—have each been gently reprimanded by the charity authorities. This mother-stuff, they are wont to explain, can be overdone. It embarrasses the social welfare people . . . even if the sporting chances of mother being wholly neglected in their fond old age are somewhat minimized thereby. It embarrasses landlords, who prefer renting to "adults only." It annoys domestic help, who prefer childless homes. It irritates neighbors alarmingly. It is most annoying to gentlemen who sit on committees.

Most modern mammas do have this form of good "judgment." Whereupon publicists galore deplore the wane of the large family. An average family now consists of two children. Four in a large family. Great-grandmother thought nothing of ten and twelve. The State, we are assured, needs more and better babies. It is wicked to frustrate Nature . . . so wicked that in some States people are sent to prison for offering a little private information on the subject.

Mother certainly cannot complain of not receiving any attention. Everybody is shunting advice upon her all the time. In some circles we are urgently exhorted to cultivate interests outside the home, to keep our intellects bright and up-to-date that we may be fit to associate with our bright offspring; that they may not come to despise us for moldy old back-numbers.

In others, again, we are chided for having any interests outside the home. A woman's whole duty is to her children, to her family. Any mother who joins clubs, dabbles in politics, keeps up with the fashions, current events, modern literature, civic interests is thereby increasing the criminal population, filling our juvenile courts, and bringing the nation to degradation and shame.

But it's all right. They lump us all into these Mother's Day effusions. Even if their descriptive picture of us at our charming best, according to their notions of ideal mothers, is a bit frowsy and unattractive.

Take us all in all, I think we do rather well. With very few exceptions, we don't let the Mother's Day flattery go to our heads, nor yet take the diatribes of the preachers against us too seriously.

We are raising a bunch of children who are, in the main, brighter than ourselves—and probably as moral as grandmamma's children. We know all about grandmamma's children, and we rather suspect that great-grandmamma only just got by . . . as we do. We aren't sure, but we optimistically hope that all these new-fangled schemes for helping us raise our children better—the psychology stuff, the fancy curricula, the child welfare organiations and the expensive universal education will ultimately give us an edge on great-grandma. Especially the baby specialists who encourage us to believe that their methods will aid us in raising Lindberghs and . . . and . . . dear me, what is the most superlative type of modern female? Amelia Earhart wouldn't do . . . or would she?

Oh, I've got it. We must raise our girls to be mothers of Lindberghs. Isn't Mrs. Lindbergh a school teacher? And—er—is or isn't Lindbergh an only child? Surely the star mamma of the nation should have raised more than one . . .

Dear me, isn't it confusing to be a mother? But we are all perfect and superlative darlings today. Including the rabbit and the elephant.

The Pioneer

There's a time in every year
  When I think the pioneer
Was the kind of fellow I would like to be.
So I pack my bus and start
  For the wilderness's heart—
(That's the only way to live—we'll all agree.)

I bounce over chucks and bumps,
  Hills and hollows; ruts and humps,
And worry through macadam, dust and rocks;
Break my axles, crack my springs;
  Wear out tires and all such things;
And the shock absorbers won't absorb the shocks.

The garagemen scatter nails
  On the picnic grounds and trails,
And it always happens that I find a few.
Then I have a tube to fix
  And repair men in the sticks,
Charge a double price for everything they do.

Reaching home at last
  With my pioneering past,
I scan my empty pocketbook and roar
Of repair bills I've paid out,
  And you'll hear my lusty shout,
I'll never leave the pavement any more."

NELL LOUNSBERRY

every successful robbery he had planned and executed. Yet he had spent days in gloating over these clippings. He had grown livid with rage when what he considered some extraordinarily clever move of his had gone unrecorded, and several times he would have written to the press, supplying the omitted detail, if it had not been for the fact that he knew by heart every great crime that had been committed in the past fifty years, and this knowledge had taught him that vanity brings some of the cleverest criminals to punishment. There was once a murderer, a wholesale poisoner, who wrote to the coroner, inquiring into the death of one of his victims, and it was that letter that had brought him to the scaffold. Golly never forgot this.

He had just settled himself for an hour of meditation when there was a knock at the door, and, getting up, he pulled back the bolt and admitted Capt. Aikness. The captain had shown signs of nervousness all afternoon—something very unusual for him. Perhaps it was the little tiff they had had earlier in the day that had upset him. Twice he had asked Golly for some information as to his immediate plans, and that was not like the apathetic Capt. Aikness, who, hitherto, had been content to accept whatever instructions Golly had given him.

Golly bolted the door behind his visitor and waved him to a seat on the bed. He never kept more than one chair in his workroom. He found that the practice kept down the number of visitors.

"I'm going to tell you something that's very important, Golly," said Aikness, but Golly held up his hand.

"You're rattled" he said. "I know all about that." He searched his waistcoat pocket for his cigarettes. "All the afternoon you've been making a noise like a tin can full of peas."

"I'm no use whatever on shore," growled the captain. "I'm a sailor, and I feel like a fish out of water. Why can't you let me go over to Holland and buy that boat? They want sixty thousand for her, but I know very well that they'd take less, if we were to offer cash. She's on the Dutch register—I could sail her under their flag, with a Dutch crew. She does nine knots."

"And destroyers do thirty-five—don't forget that," said Golly calmly. "I'm not going to throw away sixty thousand pounds to give you the pleasure of making me seasick."

"Where have you managed to hide the Chinks?" asked Aikness irritably. "I know nothing of what is going on nowadays."

"They're well-hidden," said Golly. "Don't worry about them. I've barged 'em all down by Blackwall. Nobody's going to search any more barges. They're safe."

"I didn't know you'd bought another barge," said the captain in surprise.

"You don't know what I'm doing," said Golly smoothly. "My mind works better when I'm sound asleep than yours does when you are wide awake. Foresight—that's my long suit."

He waited for the captain to speak. Evidently Aikness was waiting for a lead.

"Well, what are we going to do?" he said at last. "We can't stick here until the police find us. Couldn't I go down to Genoa—"

"The trouble with you is wanderlust," said Golly.

There was a certain deadliness in his pleasantry that made the other man shiver.

"You stay here, Capt. What's-your-name. I've got the biggest idea that ever came out of the brain of Napoleon." He tapped his forehead. "Suppose you had a ship—what chance have you got against a thirty-five-knot destroyer? She'd be able to give you a week's start and still catch up with you. And I plan to get away with the biggest haul that's ever been lifted!"

He had grown suddenly excited and walked up and down the room, gesticulating as he spoke. His increased pallor served to betray the intensity of this newly-awakened emotion.

"Suppose the police catch us this time—the whole crowd of us? What's going to happen then?"

He made a gesture as if he were tugging at a rope around his neck, drawing it tight with a suggestive "click" of his tongue.

"What then?" he demanded. "Can we buy our way out? We can't. Is there any way of getting a free pardon? Yes, by putting the black on 'em."

Once Overs —:— —:— By C. D. Batchelor

"You may not believe it, madame, but I was a prosperous broker in 1920."

"Well, believe it or not, I was Miss Providence that year."

"The black on them?" repeated Aikness. "On whom?"

"The government!" Oaks pounded the table to emphasize his point. "We'll give 'em something at a price, and we'll show 'em what we're capable of doing before we start in on the real thing. There's two real big jewelers' stores in Bond street, where you could lift a hundred an' fifty thousand without any trouble at all. We'll take that to start with. They owe us something for the stuff they took out of the Seal of Troy. Then we'll give 'em a second wallop, and then a third that'll knock 'em out, and there isn't any one in my gang that they'll so much as succeed in laying their fingers on. They'll show us the way to Brazil or the Argentine or any old place we say we want to go, and they'll settle us there and be very glad to settle."

Aikness was thinking that Golly had gone mad, and the little man must have read his thoughts, for suddenly he slapped the captain on the back and burst into a tremendous fit of laughter.

"Think I'm touched, do you? But you don't know me, Aikness. You thought I was touched when I put up that bank job in St. James's street; you thought I was touched when I said we could get the manager to open the bank in Lothbury, without any fuss."

Suddenly his exuberance left him and he looked at the captain glumly.

"I'd like to get Mr. John Wade, though—get him fair and square, in a room like this, only me and him—pegged out on the floor, and hundreds and hundreds of big sheets of blotting paper to catch the blood."

He laughed shrilly, and, frozen with horror, Aikness for the first time really understood this odd little man, who quoted Greek and Latin and occasionally scraps of Arabic.

"What's your scheme for blackmailing the government?" Aikness asked. He was anxious to turn the conversation into more pleasant channels. He knew that the fate designed for John Wade would be his, if Golly Oaks suspected for one moment the scheme at the back of his mind.

It was much more than half-formed. It was complete, except for one important particular—he had yet to decide the moment when he should turn his companion over to the police. What was the moment to strike?

"Perfect timing, eh?" chuckled Golly, and Aikness nearly jumped from the bed at what he thought was a remarkable piece of mind-reading. "That's the secret of our success—timing! You keep your eye on me!"

He jerked a watch from his pocket.

"I wonder what them girls are doing?"

"Are they sleeping in the same flat tonight?" asked Aikness, glad to escape from the nerve-racking subject.

"I had a bed set up for Anna," said Golly. "She's no more dippy than I am. She talks rationally. Now let me see . . . ."

He sat down at his table, took a sheet of paper, and began to write rapidly. He had an extraordinary knowledge of London, and he frequently mentioned places that were unknown to Aikness, but it happened that the captain was well acquainted with the district Golly had in mind on this occasion.

"Here's a pretty good place—lonely, and you can see the river," mused Golly. "Practically in Greenwich, and nobody will notice you've parked a car there. Anyway, you'll see a lamp signal."

He looked thoughtfully at Aikness.

"The question is, when will there be a dance?"

"A what?" asked the astounded captain.

"A dance, or a doing of some kind. But I'll find that out."

He scribbled something on the paper, and studied the pages of a little book that lay on the table.

"If it's Friday, we'll make a wonderful job of it. It will be Friday." He slapped his knee excitedly. "I've got a feeling it'll be Friday—what was you doing in the war, Captain?"

The question took the man's breath away.

"You know what I was doing in the war," he growled. "I served two years with the navy."

"Jennett and Mortimer served with you, didn't they?"

Aikness nodded.

"Jennett and Mortimer are looking after the Chinks now, ain't they? Good sailors. They know how to load a gun, don't they?"

"What are you driving at?" asked Aikness impatiently. "What's all this talk of dances, and Jennett and Mortimer, and guns?"

Golly smiled blandly.

"I must go and have a chat with that girl," he said, nodding his head significantly.

CHAPTER XXVII

GOLLY OAKS strode down the hall to the door of the apartment occupied by Lila Smith and Anna. Lila, who admitted him, was glad to see that he was in good humor.

"You girls enjoying yourselves?" He looked at the scattered playing-cards on the table. "I must come in and learn you a few games. You're sleeping here tonight, miss," he added, addressing Anna.

"Yes, I'm sleeping here tonight." Her voice was steady and calm. She had a look of serenity that so entirely changed her appearance that he would hardly have recognized her as the woman he had brought to Arbroath building.

He strolled carelessly to the door, opened it, and looked at the newly-fixed bolts outside.

"You don't mind me locking you in? There's lots of burglars in this neighborhood. It's disgraceful the way crime is spreading. The police! Fat lot of good they are! 'Quis custodiet ipsos custodes'!"

"How long are we staying here, Mr. Oaks?" asked Lila timidly.

Golly shrugged amiably.

"A couple of days, and then we are off to the country. Nothing like the country to make you feel fine!"

"Mr. Oaks, what has happened to Lord Siniford?"

It was Anna who asked the question.

The question was so unexpected that he found it a little disconcerting. She might know things that he thought she did not know, and she might have seen things that he thought she hadn't had the intelligence to understand.

Golly regarded the woman with a new interest. How much did she remember? How much had she heard? There had been some rather frank talk in her presence, for he and Aikness had regarded her as something of a lunatic. If it had not been for John Wade's warning, Anna might not have lived to hear anything. She was becoming an embarrassment.

"Lord Siniford, I regret to say—" there was a note of irony in his voice—"has passed away."

"He's dead?"

Golly inclined his head, and gave to the gesture a suggestion of sadness.

"We've all got to come to it," he said sententiously. "He was killed by lightning." Golly was inclined to picturesque invention. "De mortuis nil nisi bonum."

There was a silence.

"I'm terribly sorry," said Lila.

She seemed very depressed. He guessed that she was connecting the death of "Mum" Oaks with this new tragedy, and reading into the situation something that was sinister and alarming.

"He was murdered," said Anna, her usually quiet voice vibrant with excitement. "It was in the newspapers."

Golly looked at her keenly. She was a problem. She might be very troublesome. Perhaps it wouldn't do to take her to South America as Lila's companion. Her attitude was an offense, her memory too accurate. She must have heard things . . . He turned to Lila.

"Sleep well, my dear. I'll be seeing you in the morning. Goodnight, miss."

His cold eyes struck terror into Anna's heart.

"Be sensible," he said to her, in an undertone, and went out into the little hall. A moment later the door closed and a bolt clicked into place.

Lila tiptoed into the hall and turned the door. The door had been so fitted that it could not be opened from the inside. She determined, however, that it should not be opened from the outside, and pushed home a little bolt before she returned to the living-room, where Anna was waiting. They stood looking at each other in silence.

"I don't know what to think," said Lila at last. "It seems almost impossible that he should be such a terrible man. I can't even feel afraid of him. Surely he's as helpless as we are."

Anna shook her head.

"No, he isn't. All I've told you is true. There are so many things I remember only dimly, but every word I have heard since they took me from that house by the river is here." She laid her thin hand on her forehead. "And I'm not stupid now, Lila . . . I was looking at myself in the mirror, a moment ago, and it made me feel sick to see what I had become. It is as if I have been turned from a girl into an old woman. All the years between losing and finding you are like a moment. There's a hymn with a line like that—it used to be my lady's favorite—'A thousand ages in Thy sight . . .' I suppose I went off my head when I lost you."

"Don't talk about that, please." Lila took Anna's hand in hers and patted it. "What are we going to do, Anna?"

"You still think I'm a little mad, don't you, darling? You think I made up all this story about your being rich and Lady Pattison and the fire and everything?"

Lila shook her head.

"I don't think you're mad at all. I believe every word you say. It is difficult to realize what happened, but I believe that you are speaking the truth. The hardest thing to understand is about Mr. Oaks, that he's one of the India Rubber men—"

"He is! He is!" said the woman vehemently. "You only think of him as a silly little fool who believes he can sing, but I've seen big men cringe before him. That captain was so humble in his presence that even I was ashamed. One night I heard them talking about marriage, but I didn't realize that it was you they were discussing."

"Me?" gasped Lila.

Anna nodded emphatically.

"They never mentioned your name. They were sitting in the cabin of the barge, and

THE COP TRAP

By George Kibbe Turner

When Crooks Used Coralie Vivesco as Bait to Catch a Riley They Forgot Her Real Name Was Carney

THE cop's son knew which garage the hijackers stopped at going through; and who got theirs from the night-going eight ton trucks of the big national gin makers; and how they got the Fraginard girl out of the roadhouse after the shooting of the local millionaire's son.

He knew the whole hick town, inside out—with all its love stories and birth stories and death stories. As you might expect. For who is the wisest boy in any town? The cop's son, naturally. Why wouldn't he be, getting the real inside history of the things that the cops talk low to one another—both at home and around the police station—from a kid?

He knew, also, that the cops were fools, working and taking the chances they do all their lives for half a good truck driver gets. And all their minds centered on their own funny little world; when all about them the big stuff they know about passes by right under their noses; and the whole air thick as a spiritualists' seance with secret hands that would gladly slip the good big money to them, if they would only see it.

Just at present all they saw was the fact that a new chief was due to be elected by the village board, with all of a hundred and fifty dollars a year more in pay, and the privilege of wearing an extra yellow stripe upon their arm. And you'd think it was the Presidency of the United States at stake.

Strut Regan, the force's self-appointed hero, was out after it, on the ground of personal daring; and Deep Devlin, the force's politician; and Mysterious Duggan, the village detective, who talked low and hoarse and seldom, from the corner of his mouth. And about the only one never mentioned for the honor was the cop's son's old man, old Battleship Riley—so called from his speed, both mental and physical. For he was probably the most hopeless of the lot; a regular old time small town sidewalk pounder that everybody raises the hand to, and smiles after when he's passed by, to see him take his job so seriously. So slow that even the thirty-seven Rileys in the village who voted as one man and had got him his job on the force first off, were now lined up solid behind Devlin, who was a Riley by marriage only.

Old Battleship Riley, the old man, had been on the force twenty-five years next June—and the prospects were none too good. His legs were getting varicose from pounding the walks. They'd have to lay him off before so long now. And what would he have to show for it? Half pay and his old uniform, and that special silver medal he'd got for that shooting and double capture down on the river front, back in his first year on the force, in those days when there were river pirates.

And then again there was the boy, back out of work from the city. Out all night, no better than he should be; and headed all the wrong way. It used to keep him absent-minded on his beat—off down around the river and the railroad, where the chemical instrument works were. And he'd wake up then, very likely, and find himself wandering off into the next man's beat—which was quite a ways. For the beats were plenty long, with the half dozen or so they had on the force.

But there was worse there yet for the cop's son and namesake, himself. For he was back home living on the old man, after his short excursion into the Big Town, a busted welterweight with a bad arm, that they wouldn't have hanging around the athletic clubs any longer. Back feeding himself in the old combination dining-room and kitchen, beneath the old time colored lithograph of the Virgin in a bright blue robe, and the faded crayon picture of his mother, taken from her photograph after she was dead, and the older sister who would have liked to be a nun, if it wasn't for somebody's having to do the old man's housework. And the old man using all of his few wits trying to land the son a job.

And it was just about this time—when he was desperate—that this girl showed up from the Big Town.

Coralie Vivesco she called herself, though they said her real name was Carney.

"I'm starting a little gown shop here next week," she told the cop's son.

"What with?"

"Oh, I've got good backing," she said, laughing that nervous laugh.

"Who from?"

"That's my business," she told him—coming back with her usual pep.

"Oh, excuse me!" said the cop's son, staring back. For he had fallen hard for her in the earlier time—back in the days when he thought he was somebody, and headed along up in the fighting world. And he was more or less touchy now—and especially with her!

But nevertheless, he kept coming back to her—for she was more than friendly. And he took her out evenings when he had the price. And when he didn't they more than likely dropped in to call on Nelda Nova, the little silver blond, the girl friend of Nick, the local bootlegger—to keep themselves from drying up and passing out in that deserted village of the dead.

For the live wires from the Big Town tended to drop in there every now and then, on their travels; going to one particular flat or gathering place, as the wise night travelers do all over, in all the small jay towns across the country, when they have to make them. They and their girls with them—in their bright, shiny cars that maybe don't cost them so much. And among the rest were these three men that it seemed the Coralie girl had known in town. And she introduced him to them. And the names they went under were Monkey Murphy, and Izzy the Goose, and a third one was called the Duke—a dresser and a spender, and a great favorite with the ladies.

And they all three made friends with the cop's son right off; and said they'd heard of him in the fight game in New York.

"Good guys—all three of them!" said the cop's son—taking Coralie Vivesco home. For he had fallen for them hard—after meeting them two or three times. They treated him fine.

"Yeah?" she said; and went silent for the rest of the trip—in one of the queer quiet fits she had lately—for some reason that the cop's son didn't understand. For she had spoken well of them at first; but lately had been turning around the other way. And especially since he had asked her to marry him. For by this time they were practically engaged.

It was about now that Old Battleship Riley got the tip that made him straighten up and polish up the old square shoes again. That anonymous letter with the New York postmark, in a girl's handwriting.

For it was a tip to him personally, asking him if he'd like to assist in the capture of three of the biggest crooks in the country; and if so, all he'd have to do would be to drop in a line, addressed to this name in the General Delivery in uptown New York. And when it was received he would get the information all in good time. But one thing only he must not do—say one word to any one on this. And most especially in the police station or his own family.

It was just after this, it seems, that Old Man Riley got the telephone message at his flat, during his regulation sleeping hours in the morning. And he thought first it might be a special call from the station; but instead it was a woman's voice—the voice of a strange girl—talking in a hoarse, unnatural way.

"Who is it?" said the disguised voice, without answering his question. "You got a letter, didn't you, about some New York crooks, up in your vicinity?"

"I did, yes."

"Well, then, why didn't you answer it?"

"What is this—a joke?" said Old Battleship Riley. For by now he had made up his mind long since it must be.

And at that the voice changed—high and sharp. "It'll be no joke to you—if you're not waking up soon!" it said.

"What's this? Why not?" asked the old man back in a hurry, caught by the voice's strained, harsh sound.

"Have you watched your son lately, who he's playing around with, nights?"

"No. Who is he?" shot the old man back—quick.

"You remember those I wrote you about. Well, it's them," said the mysterious woman's voice.

"Who's that?" he asked and listened hard—as her voice lowered.

"Well, then," said the strange voice, going on, "did you ever hear of Monkey Murphy and Izzy the Goose, and that other one they call Duke Wingate—that recent advices are going to all the police departments to look out for—on that Jersey Express murder?"

And the old man said nothing—struck silent by her inside knowledge of secret police instructions.

"All right, then," said the mysterious

I bring her in to see you tonight," he said at last. "Would you mind? You might be able to calm her down a bit. I could bring her in now, for that matter. She's about gotten over the worst of her tantrum, I guess. She won't hurt anybody now."

"Oh, I'm not afraid of that," smiled Lila. "I'm glad to know that there is another woman in this place."

"Naturally—naturally," murmured Golly, suddenly displaying a sense of delicacy. "Your're sure you don't mind? But you'd better finish your dinner first. She might take your appetite away."

She laughed at the suggestion, and returned to her food. Golly refused to join her, but he stayed and chatted, and she listened politely, all the time wondering what his object was in bringing this mysterious woman to see her.

"It was a great mistake to get Lord Siniford into our undertakings," he said suddenly, apropos of nothing. "I thought that it was a bad idea at the very start. But Capt. Aikness kept after me. He said it would be a good way of keeping him sweet."

Golly stopped talking and looking closely at Lila. She suddenly realized that he was trying to sound her out—trying to learn whether she had overheard any talk at the Mecca. She looked at him innocently and said:

"I don't understand what you are talking about. By the way, where is Lord Siniford now?"

Golly Oaks coughed and looked away.

"He's gone abroad," he said, and quickly brought the conversation back to Anna. "I'd getter go and fetch her now."

He rose, but semed reluctant to leave until he had prepared Lila for the worst.

"She's nothing to look at," he explained. "And maybe she'll go off into one of her fits, but, if she do—does—then, as old Euripides said—"

He rattled off a quotation that Lila had often heard him use, and then rushed from the room. It was half an hour before he returned, and Lila thought he looked more agitated than ever.

"Come in, my dear," she heard him say.

He stepped aside to let pass the woman who followed at his heels.

"I told you that you should see her soon," he was saying, in soothing tones, "and here she is."

Into the little room where Lila sat came a tall, gaunt woman, white-faced, with dark, smoldering eyes. For a moment she stood motionless, staring at the girl, who returned her gaze wonderingly.

"Is this Delia?" The woman's voice was low and very gentle.

Golly Oaks winked at Lila.

"Yes, that's her," he said to the woman. "I've told her you were coming to see her. She said it was all right."

The woman walked slowly toward Lila, her face working pitifully. She held out her thin, work-scarred hands, and touched Lila, very gently, as if she doubted that the girl was real.

"Delia, darling." Her voice was little above a whisper. "You are Delia. You know me, my sweet?"

Lila shook her head.

"My name is Lila," she said.

The effect of her words was amazing. The woman's eyes glowed. Her pale, tired face became animated and eager.

"Lila," she cried. "Of course, you're Lila. That's what you always called yourself. Don't you remember?"

At this point there was a knock on the door and Capt. Aikness thrust his head in.

"Don't let her say too much," he whispered warningly to Golly. "You know what's likely to happen."

He turned to the woman and said roughly:

"Never mind raking up all that stuff about the past. I told you that you could see the young lady, if you would promise that you'd behave. You said that you just wanted to see her—to know that she was all right. Well, I've kept my word, and I want you to keep yours. So don't be telling her a lot of nonsense about what's happened years ago."

The softened look faded from the woman's eyes. She was no longer timid and pleading. when she turned to Aikness, there was something savage in her face. "Yes," she said, "I was afraid that you'd harmed her. I know what you are—the whole lot of you—"

Aikness seized her by the arm and tried to drag her out of the room. "I'll teach you to disobey," he shouted. "I'll—"

Golly stepped forward and drew Aikness aside. Just then the door opened and the Chinese house-boy appeared. "Message just come," he whispered to the captain. "Doctor he say—"

Aikness made for the door. "Why didn't you tell me before?" he snarled, and dashed out of the room, followed by Golly.

The two women stared after them and then looked at each other. Lila's visitor grew calmer and more at ease.

"Don't you remember Anna?" she implored, throwing her arms about the girl. "Oh, my dear, when they told me that you were in this dreadful place, I almost died. And you were on the barge, too. But I didn't hear that until just a little while ago. What a blessing just to know that you are safe for a little while, at least! Now I must find a way of getting you out of here. I must! I must! If I can't save you this time, how will I ever be able to face her ladyship?"

"Why have I been brought here?" asked Lila. "Mr. Oaks told me that 'Mum's' dead. Is that true?"

"Yes, it is," replied Anna. "I heard them talking about it. Oh, I must get you away before something terrible happens to you, too. If I lose you again, I shall go mad. I had thought—"

She was trembling with excitement, and Lila was at her wits' end for fear Aikness might come in and take her away.

"Don't talk so loud," Lila cautioned. "They may hear you."

"I'm not afraid for myself," said Anna desperately. "It's you—it's for your sake that something must be done. I'll watch my chance. I promise you that I will. And this time they'll not be able to fool me. They'll—"

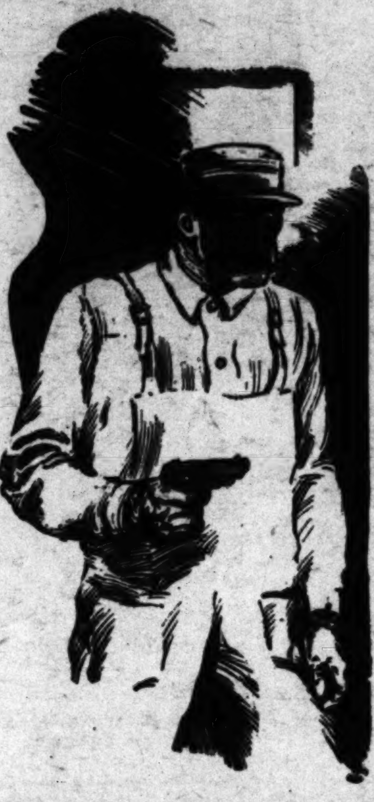
She stopped and made a determined effort to be calm as Golly entered the room again. "Don't be afraid," he said, as he saw the look of alarm on Lila's face. "I won't hurt the old woman. It's Aiknes who would like to see her out of the way. Just go on with your conversation. Nothing will happen to you while I'm here."

CHAPTER XXV

SOMETHING stirred faintly in Lila Smith's memory as she heard Anna's voice. She did recall—something. But the recollection went almost as quickly as it came, leaving her more bewildered than ever. Very gently she disengaged herself from the trembling woman's arms.

"Sit down, won't you?" she urged.

But the woman clung to her tearfully.



"Don't you remember the old house, and that dreadful night of the fire, and her ladyship? Her ladyship's dead, Lila."

The girl strove hard to think, but her memory would not function. She looked appealingly at Mr. Oaks, and he nodded.

"It's quite right, my dear. She did know you, years ago. She was your nurse."

"That's true," sobbed Anna. "God bless you for telling her that. I was her nurse, and they told me that she was dead—that she had died in the awful fire. They showed me the little pieces of her clothing. But I said she was alive, and I told her ladyship so. She believed me. I know I should find you some day. I knew it—was sure of it! But it was dreadful to have to wait. Sometimes I got tired, and then they put me away in that big house, and they wouldn't let me go out."

She fell into a fit of shuddering that was painful to witness. But it did not seem to pain Golly.

"Crool to be kind," he murmured. "That's me, Lila. Nobody can ever say I wasn't gentle with a female. If I had to hurt 'em, it was over in a second, and it was all for the best."

Now something of the past seemed to return to Lila. Anna began to emerge from a haze of memories, to become a reality.

"You'll let me stay with you?" the woman was saying. "I must stay with you. I'll look after you—get your clothes for you, darling. I suppose I mustn't call you 'darling' now, because you aren't a baby. And I must tell her ladyship."

"She's dead," murmured Golly.

"Yes, she's dead. Of course, she'll know . . ."

"I'll leave you two together," said Golly, and went out, after making a polite bow. It was his boast that he knew how to behave.

He locked the door of the little room and went down the uncarpeted passage to a rather cheaply furnished dining-room, where Capt. Aikness sat, a glass of whisky at his elbow, the stub of a cigar between his teeth.

"She's all right," said Oaks.

Capt. Aikness rose and looked into the mirror and dabbed a scratch on his right cheek with his handkerchief.

"Took me by surprise," he grunted.

"You took her by surprise," said Oaks sharply. "I told you these balmy people had long memories."

"She's changed," said Aikness. "She used to be a fairly pretty girl."

Oaks grunted something; poured some whisky into a glass, and turned in the contents of the syphon.

"You used to be a pretty good-looking fellow, too, didn't you, Aikness? If you hadn't been, you wouldn't have been fool enough to make love to nurse-maids. We haven't got a good-looker left."

"She was good-looking," mused the captain. "I got quite soft with her. By the way, what are you going to do about Lane?"

Golly lit a cigarette and smoked for a long time in silence.

"Get him out," he said finally.

"Do you think he'll squeal?" asked Aikness, but Golly did not reply, and, thinking his question had not been heard, Aikness repeated it.

"He won't squeal," said Golly, staring out of the window, "but I know others who might."

Capt. Aikness forced a smile.

"Not me, Golly. L'm too deeply involved in this thing."

"So was 'Mum'," said Oaks briefly; "yet she was ready to squeak."

Another long and painful silence, which the captain finally broke.

"Lila's becoming a bit of a problem," he said.

"Is she?" asked Golly coolly. "There's no problem about Lila. She'll marry and settle down. But she won't marry a sea-faring man. I'll see to that."

He leaned acros the table and looked steadily at Aikness.

"I've humored you, Captain What's-your-name. I'm always willing to humor anybody. I've let you play papa to that kid, give her little outings, dress her up in nice clothes. And you're going to stay papa. 'Mum' thought this idea of letting the girl go out to dinner with you, when you came back from a long sea voyage was silly, but 'Mum' never had foresight—that's why she's dead. I have foresight." He tapped his chest gently. "I never knew that there was any money coming to Lila, but I always knew she was a lady born and bred, and I thought that, sooner or later, she was going to be very useful, and that we couldn't let her start learning swell ways too soon. But she's not going to marry any papa, and that million dollars ain't going to be used to build pallaccios for you at Rio."

For a second the two men looked at each other. There was a glare of hatred in the gaze of Capt. Aikness, and he did not attempt to disguise it. Golly's eyes were cold, emotionless, deadly.

"I don't know how this thing is going to finish up," Golly went on, "but I'm aiming to teach these police birds a lesson that they'll never forget. I could slip out of London easy enough, if I wanted to, and so could you; but that's not my idea of being great, Aikness." He tapped his chest again. "I'm big! I always have been big. I fenced little things for ten years to get the money to start this. I opened up at the Bank of Lyons single-handed to buy your ship. I've organized London like a general would organize it. I know every way out and every way in. I know close to three thousand coppers by sight. I'm going out with a bang, and, when this is over, you and me will settle the question of Lila. And, if you think that it can be settled before, or settled any way that I don't like, I'll give you a word of advice—pull your gun and get me, before I get you!"

Aikness shrank back into his chair, his mouth twitching painfully. There was a streak of yellow in this big man. Nobody knew this better than Golly Oaks, who lived by his knowledge of men.

"That's that, Captain," he said, with a laugh. "We're all set. I can tell you what my organization is like. I could tell you the ship me and Lila are leaving by, and the number of the cabin, and the name of the parson who is going to marry us—"

Aikness came to his feet with an oath.

"Marry you! You!"

Golly nodded.

"I'm nearly ten years younger than you, and me and Lila understand each other. And I've got every document that's needed to prove she's Delia Pattison. Siniford gave me most of 'em, and I got the rest from the bank."

With a tremendous effort, the captain mastered his rage and sat down.

"You're a funny fellow," he said. "The thing I can't understand about you, Golly, is why you allowed that old lady to bully you."

"Speak well of the dead," said Golly evenly. "That was her privilege—I gave her four hours every day when she could roast the life out of me, but the other twenty she walked on tiptoe. I'll tell you something, Aikness—she slept behind a locked door many a time, and she always had a loaded gun under her pillow. Did you know that? And do you know why she had a loaded gun? It was in case she said something that hurt my feelings. She cast reflections on my voice once—and had a servant sleeping in her room for a month afterward. 'Mum' knew me." He smiled, as though he were recalling a pleasant memory. "People who get to know me don't make any mistakes. I hope you know me, Captain."

"Sure I do, Golly," said Aikness, but the geniality in his voice was patently assumed.

There was a great deal of work to be done that night. Every other flat had its telephone, for which the owner of the block had paid for months when no calls came through.

Toward ten o'clock men began to drift in and were shown to their rooms. They were furtive, suspicious-looking men. They spoke in monosyllables and studied time-tables and the shipping-lists of companies that had their port of departure in Italy and the South of France.

There was one man called Ambrose, who was, Aikness knew, a notorious gangster, and it was through him that Golly communicated with his queer crew. The captain was taken around and introduced, and he received the impression late that night of Oaks.

"Of course, they dope," said Golly contemptuously. "Ordinary men couldn't do what these men do."

In the underground garage, behind the steel doors of what had been designed as a petrol store, was a very complete armory. Golly took the captain down and showed him its treasures. Most of them were still wrapped in oiled paper, and a man sitting on a stool in one corner was engaged in unwrapping them.

"Once you decide on doing a thing," said Golly, "do it big. That's my guiding principle in life."

He had paid several visits to Lila's apartment and was gratified to see that the understanding between the girl and her old nurse was growing. This was entirely to his satisfaction. The girl ought to have a woman companion—especially in view of the trip that he had planned. Funny he hadn't thought of that before.

But then he had so many things to think about. He was always planning, planning, planning.

The trouble was in getting fixed ideas—in being bound by old decisions that no longer fitted the situation. For example, he had thought it an excellent idea to marry Lila to Siniford . . . Well, he'd changed his mind. Lord Siniford was dead. And he'd thought it a good idea to humor Aikness—all the time he had a ship. He hadn't a ship any more—but he was distinctly useful.

CHAPTER XXVI

GOLLY OAKS'S own room at Arbroath building was very large and would have been airy, if the windows had been opened and the heavy velvet curtains drawn back. It contained only a bed, a chair, a table, and a strip of old carpet, ludicrously inadequate.

The table was of the type that is to be found in architects' offices—a large, plain unpainted board, supported on two trestles. Neatly stacked upon it were scores of plans, survey maps, books of reference, time-tables, and pages of memoranda compiled in Golly's almost illegible handwriting.

He was now studying one of the three bank-books that it was his invariable custom to carry with him by day, and take to bed with him at night. It was a record of his deposits in one of the greatest of the Brazilian banks, and it showed so satisfactory a total that he could truthfully say that, even if he could not lay hands on Lila Smith's fortune, he could still live in luxury all the rest of his life.

The other bank-books afforded him almost as much comfort. He closed the little blue-covered volume with a sigh of contentment, put it and its companions in an inside pocket of his coat, and gave himself up to consideration of a bothersome problem.

Raggit Lane was in Brixton Prison, daily hoping for a miracle, for he had a great deal of faith in this little schemer; and in Brixton Prison, Golly had determined, he would remain until the law took its usual course.

Lane was happily ignorant of his chief's lack of interest in his misfortune. And yet Golly had planned, and had intended, a spectacular rescue, should any of his lieutenants fall within the reach of the law. On his table was a carefully prepared plan of operation that was as detailed and as exact as any drawn by a staff officer on the eve of battle. But Golly had another scheme, more grandiose, more spectacular. He was never bound by his first program.

Even his late wife had never suspected him of keeping a most elaborate book in which were pasted clippings giving the details of voice, taking his answer for granted. "They're the ones. And you can take a look around and see the boy with them—if you doubt what I say. But if you do, you'll do it very quiet. For this is all on one condition only that you'll say or make no sign to any one that might start a move—and especially to the boy. For a slip might cost us all our lives. And there's just one in the world who can save your boy for you now!"

"Who's that?" asked the old man, moistening his lips.

"That's me"

"And who are you?"

"Never mind who I am. I'm the woman in the case. Only this: Take no chances—do nothing but just one thing only, now!"

"What's that?" asked Old Man Riley, whispering.

"Tell me this—how to get in touch with you at all hours—with an emergency call. To help me when the time comes!"

So he told her, stammering, and she shut off.

And the old man went off in fear and shivering. But looking around he managed to catch sight of this flashy low-brow New York gang with the shiny car around that notorious flat—and the boy with them.

By rights, of course, he should have turned over the stuff he'd got on these notorious criminals to those above him—regardless of his promises to that girl. Yet if he did—and what she said was true—good-by, the boy was gone—for life or worse!

They were working, all right—now they saw the son was being won over. They laid the whole thing out before him, finally.

"Platinum!" said Murphy, wrinkling up the comical eyes. "In that Chemical Instrument works. Do you know what it's worth?"

"What is it?" said Riley, watching him.

So he told him how many times compared to gold. "And do you know how much they've got in there?"

"How much have they?"

So he told him that, too. "And they never more than half lock it up—up here in the country. Not thinking anybody would spot it, in a manufacturing plant."

So the cop's son laid out the police end for them, including the fact that the job would be right in the family, you might say—right on his old man's beat.

"Do you know what you're getting yourself in for here?" Coralie Vivesco asked young Riley, when the three had passed along. "In this bunch of murderers?"

They had adjourned the sessions from the flat to the back room of her dress shop, now they were down to business—not having any too much confidence in the bootlegger and his girl friend. And she had declared herself in on their little talks, in consideration of the fact.

"The next thing, they'll be seating you in the redhot chair—having you shoot the old man—for their evening's entertainment," she warned him.

"What are you trying to do, scare me?" the cop's son asked her. For it looked that way, sometimes.

So the night of the party came on, finally, and they parked their car in the jet black alleyway back of the gown shop, where it wouldn't excite curiosity, and got together to talk it over once more with Riley's son and the girl in the back room of her shop—to be sure there wasn't any change in the picture before going ahead. There wasn't, it seemed.

They parted company and Riley went up a ways—to be sure of the old man; and the rest went down behind some freight cars on a sidetrack—to watch the watchman at the Chemical Instrument plant's gate. And then the son followed on for a couple of blocks, and saw the old man on his way toward the Italian settlement. He rambled along, as innocent as an old goose, apparently; and it was a hundred to one bet that he would be up there his hour—if not longer, with the extra doings there that night. So the boy came back to take up the part they had for him in the proceedings below.

"He's just gone," said Wingate, taking charge of the party, now they were in action. "From the gatehouse!"

"Come on, then," said Riley, and then he took them around the upper edge of the works, above the factory that wasn't being used now; entering through a hole in the fence that the boys had worked there to go in swimming. And they walked around and along the narrow aisle between the black-eyed abandoned factory and the gurgling slate black water six feet beneath. Going one after another, single file, with the cop's son in the lead—listening for the watchman.

And before too long old Walter, the night watchman, came along, as punctual as a clock. And the cop's son reached out from where he stood, round the black corner, and drew him back into the darkness, with his arm around his neck—handling him like a child, on the black edge of the dock.

"Good work," said Wingate, praising him, when they had finished wrapping old Walter up.

And they sent the cop's son out to watch outside the fence along the railroad tracks, while they three went in and got the platinum.

So he went out and watched—and saw nothing. But one reason for that was that he was being watched himself—toward the last of it.

The calculation that the Italian celebration would hold the old man's attention longer than usual was all to the bad, it seemed. For no sooner did he take a look around the place, and saw the wops were at peace for the time being, than he was headed back again on his own personal business and anxiety.

He had been worried plenty the past week or so—between the boy and his duty; unable to keep from poking around, or keep his eye off his son, and that gang he was trailing out with at nights—in spite of what he had promised this girl upon the wire. For now a new suspicion was growing dimly in his mind. For all the time now he was seeing the boy with this fine expensive-dressed girl with the fancy name, that kept that Coralie Gown Shop.

So, finally, he dropped into the gown shop one morning—to look her over. "I was searching for my son," he told her, when she met him, in her fine, neat, black and white costume, with the shiny stockings and shoes. "Did you see him?"

"I did not. No," she answered—shutting her red lips close and straight.

And he drew back now—the flames of his suspicions shooting high. For it was the voice of the mysterious woman on the telephone that was answering him.

"Who are you—in all this?" he asked her, swallowing.

So she told him this tale, staring hard ahead. "He had my sister with him, threatening her—this damn devil, Wingate," she said—"along the first of it! And it was then he blackmailed me into this; and made me get him to your son—through my hope of straightening the sister out, and getting him to marry her."

"And did he?" asked Old Man Riley, studying her still.

"He did not," she said, her voice harder. "He kept stalling me—as I well realized later. So then I kept right on with him—planning my revenge and come back—when the time arrived!"

"What is he to you—the boy?"

"What is he to me!" she answered, harsh and bitter. "What is he to you? Well, he's all that to me now—and more. Since I fell for him—like a great fool—God help me!"

"He's a good boy, at heart," said Riley. Riley.

"He is," she said.

"And how long before all this is coming to a head?" he asked her.

"Give me one week more, that's all," she promised him. "And if I don't deliver these three murderers to you—and still save the boy—why anything you say! Arrest me. I'll be ready," she said in a low weary tone.

"Well, then—all right," he told her, finally.

The further off from her he got, the more suspicious of a trap he became. And yet how could he act—in that fear of death or ruin for the son. But now, at least, he'd have relief from doubt!

For just an hour or so before, that night, he'd had the long expected emergency call, from that sharp quick voice upon the phone: "Come over to the gown shop, as soon after nine as possible. And let nothing in this living world prevent you."

So Battleship Riley was starting back at a quarter to nine from the Italian district for his appointment—taking the railroad track to get a glance at the factories in passing.

And going crunching down the cinders in the blue darkness, he passed between the dark freight cars on one side, standing like big unknown waiting animals on the side tracks; himself a little moving piece of clotted darkness—in the loneliest spot on earth. But feeling nothing of that now—going muttering to himself—his mind half upset with his worries and suspicions. And then, all at once, the big main suspicion shot across him—for the hundredth time. He had been trapped. He knew it now!

For looking ahead from the dark shadowy side of the freight cars, he saw this figure where no figure was due to be; and looking closer, what it was. And watched it disappear then right away, back through that unmended fence into the Chemical Instrument factory. And it was come at last—the thing he'd feared the most on earth—the final ruin and destruction of his boy—by his own hand.

So it was small wonder that his head was muddled and his voice was hoarse, as he went in through the fence, following the boy—whispering his name to get his attention. For if he was the lookout for a band of thieves, as it seemed, his voice might even yet get to him before the others—in that passageway, and separate him from them.

Going back, meanwhile, through the dark narrow way, past the tied-up watchman, the cop's son looked out into the bare black and white spotted factory

"I didn't like her much to start with, because you could tell by her soft cooin' voice that she was bringin' light into dark places an' we was the dark places.

"An' I liked her a heap less when she got to talkin' about duty an' explained that duty meant givin' her the seventy-four dollars we was savin' to buy a new bedroom suite for the parsonage.

"I let her unwind an' then I up an' says we didn't need no outsider showin' us how to run our business, an' I was goin' on to give her a piece o' my mind when she took a sneakin' advantage of me an' says: 'Let us pray.'

"Well, there wasn't nothin' else to do only shut up when she got started, an' I listened with my head bowed like ever'-body else until I seed she was prayin' at me.

"'Help these poor benighted stubborn ones,' she says, 'to overcome their narrow selfishness.'

"That was more'n I could stand. I wasn't goin' to let no stranger outpray me in my own society, an' I busted right into the middle o' one o' her sentences an' says good an' loud: 'An' help these slick-tongued meddlers that tries to run other folks' affairs,' I says; 'because if she says one more insultin' thing at me, I'm goin' to make her wish she was in the Fiji Islands right now.'

"That busted up the meetin' an' she stomped out spittin' fire about hicks and heathen.

"I know I'm a hick, an' I'm carnal-minded an' sinful. Just last Sunday I couldn't keep my mind on the sermon for thinkin' how good it felt to have a new hat an' a new corset on at the same time. But I do my duty as I see it, an' I don't thank nobody to tell me how big-hearted I ought to be while they donate lip.

"One o' these days when I've been doin' a hard week's washin' an' my back is achin' an' some inspired prophet representin' a noble cause says 'duty' to me, it's goin' to be my duty to haul off an' slap him so hard it will jar his ancestors.

"I ain't never yet seen sweat poppin' out on anybody that talked about other folks's duty, an' if anybody wants to urge me to labor in the vineyard, he better show me the blisters on his hands."

CALLOUSES?

Sufferers know only too well how callouses that form on the sole of the foot sap energy, strength and pleasure. Such callouses become frightfully and severely painful. But they can be eliminated! . . . The famous Dr. A. Reed has designed the MOVABLE-ARCH shoe along new scientific principles to overcome just such foot ills. An auxiliary support for the delicate metatarsal arch, removable and adjustable to every condition, is the exclusive feature of these shoes—and the secret to riddance from agonizing foot pains . . . Let us show them to you—in the many smart models of the season.

house. Don't allow anybody on the station premises unless he can prove he has business there."

Then Wade called up his chief at Scotland Yard.

"I think I've located the barge. It's full of dummy packing-cases that form a false roof for an inside cabin. Camouflaged packing-cases. I shall want fifty men, sir, and they had better be armed. The second barge may give us some trouble."

He sent the detective along the tow-path to watch the barges—a difficult task, for the mist, which had cleared, was thickening again. A road ran through the meadow to the place where the barges were moored. With the forces available, this road could not, for the moment, be watched, and the detective on the bank needed reinforcements. He was a long way from the nearest telephone, and his position, as Wade knew, was extremely hazardous.

The mist was a part of a heavy fog that had descended on the suburbs of London. It delayed the arrival of the police tenders, and they came crawling through Great Marlow an hour later.

By this time the Berkshire police had been notified, but county police reserves are not easy to reach and concentrate, and they were barely in their places when the London reinforcements crossed the meadow and stormed the first of the two barges.

As he was rushing through the brushwood, John Wade detected a smell of smoke. It came from the second barge. A moment later flames were darting from the forecastle and through the interstices of the hatches. Apparently no one was on board. So fierce was the blaze that the police were driven back to the deck when they tried to go below.

The first barge, was also burning when Wade boarded it, but the police were able to extinguish the flames. From the forecastle a small door led to comfortable sleeping-quarters, apparently for half a dozen men. The occupants apparently had departed in such a hurry that they had left most of their belongings behind, but Wade had no time to examine these. He passed into a second room and halted, amazed at the luxury of it. This had been Lila's prison! He would have guessed that, even if he had not seen her coat thrown over a chair near her bed.

Climbing up the ladder to the deck, he joined Elk on the bank of the river.

"How could they have made such a quick getaway?" he asked.

"They had half a dozen cars parked in a shed on this farm," said Elk quickly. "They must have scattered in all directions, before the Berkshire police arrived. I'm sending a message to headquarters suggesting that all the ports be watched."

Wade smiled grimly.

"Don't watch the ports—watch London," he said, and he spoke prophetically.

CHAPTER XXIII

LILA had been up since seven o'clock that morning and was trying to interest herself in a book when she heard a scraping noise overhead. It was the noise attendant upon the lifting of the hatch-cover for John Wade's inspection. She listened intently, but, though she heard the sound of voices, they did not seem familiar. She heard the hatch-cover being put on again, and immediately after that the door of the cabin opened and Golly came in. He put his finger to his lips and closed the door softly.

"What is wrong?" she asked, in a low voice.

"Nothing, my dear," he whispered. "It's somebody who doesn't like you very much, and I don't want him to know you're here. Bless my life, he'd give thousands of pounds to do you a bad turn!"

Golly came in. He put his finger to his crude, but effective. She had such faith in him that she believed him to be the only friend she had on board.

He went out, and, when he returned, he was wearing a hat and an overcoat. He beckoned her to him.

"I'm going to get you away from here—there is danger," he said, in a low voice. "Come!"

She reached for her coat, but he stopped her.

"Don't touch that," he said impatiently.

He went into the outer cabin, and returned with a man's mackintosh.

"Put that on."

The sleeves were too long, and he helped her turn them up.

"Will this cap fit you?"

It was a man's golf-cap.

"No, I can't wear that—" she began.

"Try it, my dear, try it!"

The cap fitted rather well. Before she could look at herself in the mirror, he had seized her by the arm and hurried her into the outer room. Here she saw Alkness and two other men, whom she did not recognize. In a corner of this room was a small cupboard. Golly beckoned Capt. Alkness.

"What about 'er?" he asked, in a low voice, and jerked his thumb towards the cupboard. "I don't want the girl to see her. Bring her along in the second car."

Golly had left Lila at the foot of the companion-ladder, and, going back, took her hand and led her up to the deck. She stared around in astonishment. The mist had thickened, but she could see the trees and a hint of green meadows. The scent of the morning air was glorious; she stood for a moment, breathing it in ecstatically.

"The air is lovely—" she began.

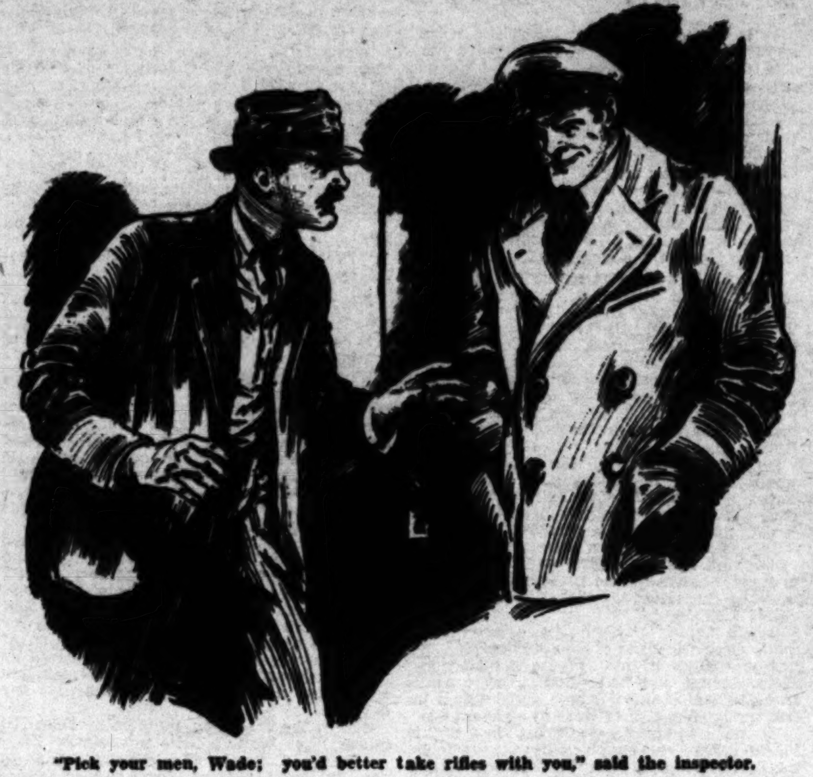
"There's plenty of it," said Golly, and half-pushed, half-led her across the gangway.

It was glorious to feel the wet grasses under her feet. She did not trouble to wonder why Golly had lied to her, or why and how the Rikitiki had turned out to be a very commonplace barge.

The mist was so thick that the man walking ahead was barely visible, though he was no more than a dozen feet away. Presently they struck a hard road. They turned sharply to the left, and, after a minute's walk, there loomed out of the fog the gable of a large shed. A car was already waiting on the road. The man who had preceded her opened the door, took out a chauffeur's coat, slipped into it quickly, and pulled on a cap. From somewhere in the mist another man appeared. Lila saw him fixing a white dickey round his throat and wondered why, until he too slipped on a coat, and then she saw that he was to be a footman.

The car that awaited them was a handsome limousine. On the door was a crest. It would be a bold policeman who would dare to hold up this imposing equipage.

Lila was barely in the car before it was moving along the bumpy road. It passed through a gateway, turned sharply to the right, and moving cautiously through the fog, came at the end of ten minutes to what was evidently a main road. Here it turned left again, and Golly, who was her only companion in the tonneau, took up a small microphonic attachment by his side, and she heard a distant buzz.



"Pick your men, Wade; you'd better take rifles with you," said the inspector.

"Windsor, Staines, Hampton, Esher, and the by-pass," he said sharply.

He leaned back in the cushioned seat and chuckled, rubbing his hands.

"You've got to think of everything, Lila—can't trust nobody!" Then, suddenly: "Heard about poor 'Mum', Lila?"

"Mrs. Oaks?"

He nodded, and his wizened little face took on an expression of the deepest sadness.

"Dead," he said simply.

She looked at him, horrified, hardly believing her ears.

"Mrs. Oaks is dead—surely you don't mean that? How dreadful!"

"She's passed," said Golly.

"Was it an accident?"

"Suicide," said Golly, with surprising briefness. "She was a wonderful woman—in a way. She knew nothing about art, and she had a bit of a temper."

"But I don't understand. Mrs. Oaks committed suicide? Why?"

"Persecution," said Golly.

He took from his pocket a package of cigarettes, selected one with the care of a connoisseur, and lit it.

"She was driven, as it were, into the grave by the police—especially Inspector Wade."

Lila was stunned at the news. She wanted to be more sorry than she was, but somehow she couldn't manage it.

"She took poison," said Golly, puffing a smoke-ring to the roof and watching it break. "Good job I wasn't there, or they'd have said I gave it to her."

"When did this happen?'

"Yesterday," said Golly. "Look!"

He pointed to his tie. It was brand-new and black.

"I thought you might have noticed I was in mourning," he said. "Look!"

He took off his overcoat and showed her a wide band of crepe around his left arm.

"Mourning," he said, and added: "That shows."

"Shows what?' she was curious enough to ask.

He was taken aback by the question.

"It shows I'm doing the right thing by her. I'm thinking of putting up a monument—an angel pointing to the sky. It's not art, as I understand it, but it's the best you can get in England."

They were following a secondary road and met no obstruction or challenge. Lila was trying to accustom herself to the thought of life without Mrs. Oaks, when Golly said:

"Naturally I shan't remain single, Lila. I'm what you might term in the prime of life. I'd like to settle down, say, in South America—flowers, blue lakes, white marble buildings, roses everywhere—you know."

She was too staggered to reply.

"I'm forty-three—or forty-four—I'm not sure which," said Golly carelessly. "A girl might go further than me and miss something."

"But how terrible!" she cried. "Auntie Oaks dead! Weren't you awfully upset about it?"

"Awfully," said Golly, and began to whistle softly. "Between her and me there was no what you might call silly lovemaking. It was a business arrangement, and it worked. She forgot herself sometimes—what woman doesn't? Was I a good husband or wasn't I?"

Lila could only reply that he was the most meek and obedient of husbands.

"I don't like that word 'meek'," he said, bridling. "I was gentle. But that's my nature. I've always been kind to women—treated 'em as pets. That's the only way," he added.

Lila wanted to change the subject.

"Where are we going?" she asked.

"To London," he said. "I've got some flats there—Arbroath building—ever heard of it? Quite a nice place. I might have gone there first, but who'd have thought they'd have tumbled to the barges? I've been twelve months getting them ready. They were fitted up in Holland and came across under their own sail. Twenty-six hundred pounds each—that's a lot of money for a barge. But what foresight! That's always been my strong point, foresight. I knew they'd tumble to the Seal of Troy, sooner or later; I knew we'd have to get the 'ole crew off at a minute's notice."

"Were there men in the other barge?' she asked.

She remembered now seeing a squat little figure moving through the mist and keeping at a respectful distance when she and Golly had entered the car.

"Twenty good fellows."

"But what is the Seal of Troy? Why are we running away? Have you done anything wrong?"

Mr. Oaks lit another cigarette.

"Secret service," he said, and glanced sideways at her. "We're doing certain things for a certain government. Naturally, the English government doesn't want any trouble with—with Italy."

Again they struck a main road, turned off, and, skirting Windsor, came along the Thames bank by Runnymede. Presently they had left Staines behind and had entered the long section of the Great West road. The mist was denser now, and, by the time they reached Shepherd's Bush, there was a steady drizzle of rain.

Golly had one shock—he saw two cars held up on the West Road and a cordon of police formed around them. His own was unchallenged. The correct footman, sitting beside the chauffeur, and possibly the crest, saved him from an experience that might have been either humiliating or fatal.

Arbroath building was a structure originally erected as a munitions factory in the latter days of the war. The lower portion had been rebuilt into a garage and a number of shops. The garage had failed; the shops lost their tenants; the property had been in the market three times when a syndicate had acquired it. The two upper floors had been occupied by tenants, 75 per cent of whom had steadfastly refused to pay any rent, and the syndicate had immediately evicted them. The garage was reconverted, though it never seemed to be used, and the flats had never been let. Probably exorbitant rents were the explanation. The syndicate did not seem to mind losing money. No effort was made to obtain tenants.

It was no easier to rent space in the garage. There were scores of taxi owners who would have been glad to utilize the spacious yard and lock-ups, but they received no encouragement when they made inquiries. One or two private cars were kept there, but Notting Hill regarded the building as a white elephant, and it was generally believed that the new proprietors were also booked for a visit to the bankruptcy court. Which was far from the truth.

The speculator who had reconstructed this factory had designed a series of service flats, and to this end had put in a kitchen and considerable storage room in the basement.

"Foresight again, my dear," Golly told Lila, when they had passed through the gates into the garage. He led her in a small electric lift that took them to the top floor. Here he ushered her into a small flat that was, if not handsomely, at least well furnished, though it smelled a little musty from disuse.

"I got this property for eight thousand pounds. If I'd planned it myself, it couldn't have been better for me."

"But you hadn't eight thousand pounds, Mr. Oaks."

"A friend of mine put up the money," said Golly glibly. "This is my idea of quiet. You can come and go, and nobody cares who you are or what you are, and you could stay here ten years and nobody would be any the wiser."

CHAPTER XXIV

LILA was very tired, although the journey from the barge to Notting Hill had been a short one, and she was anxious to be alone, to try to puzzle out the meaning of her experiences since she had followed "Mum" Oaks from the hiding-place to which Inspector Wade had taken her.

But Golly Oaks seemed to be in a chatty mood, and he stayed on. "You can have all the life you want here," he said. "But I think you'd better keep the curtains drawn. I'll have your supper sent in presently." He nosed about the little apartment until Lila's yawns made it evident that she was paying no attention to what he was saying.

"I'll be back after you've had a chance to rest a bit," he said. "I want to talk to you about something that's very important."

As soon as he had gone, Lila examined her new quarters. The flat was at the back of the building and looked down upon a small, dingy courtyard. Lila opened the window and peered out. She saw several cars drive up to the rear of the building and disappear down a steep incline that led, she supposed, to the underground garage that she and Golly had seen when they arrived.

A gentle tap at the door sent her scurrying from the window. She remembered Golly's admonition about keeping the shades drawn. The door opened slowly, and a Chinese house-boy entered. Lila gave a gasp of relief. The boy smiled and said: "Supper?" She nodded, and he brought in a tray laden with her favorite dishes.

She had hardly begun to eat when Golly burst in. "That boy gone?" he said excitedly.

She nodded.

Golly paced up and down the little room. "Did you hear a woman scream, just now?" he asked, in a worried tone. "Just before I came into the room?"

Lila shook her head. "I heard nothing—I was looking out of the window," she faltered. She expected a scolding to follow this admission, but Golly did not seem to notice it. His face was paler than usual, and the nonchalant manner that he had affected lately had disappeared.

"We've got a lady here who isn't quite right in the head," he said finally. "Not exactly a lady, either, you understand. Dippy, that's what she is." He tapped his forehead and winked. "If I wasn't so gentle with women—" he shook his head, as if he were regretting his humanitarianism. "Now Capt. Alkness, he ain't very much that way."

"Does she live here?" asked Lila.

He looked at her oddly.

"No," she doesn't live here," he answered. "She was with us on the barge, but she didn't give us any trouble there—thank goodness!"

"Who is she?" Lila queried.

"A woman," said Golly vaguely. "She's been a servant. She was all right until she saw Capt. Alkness. Then she acted like a lunatic. Took on something awful."

"Is Capt. Alkness here, too?"

"Yes. They're all here. This is the second time that woman saw Alkness in about twenty years, I guess. It seems that she used to be sweet on him. But that's all over now. The names she called him! Murderer and everything! I told him that he'd do well to keep out of her way for a bit. These mad people have funny memories. She might do him a lot of harm."

"Capt. Alkness used to know her, you say?"

"They met," said Golly wearily, "twenty years ago, or thereabouts. He made [illegible] to her, it seems. He's that kind of a man. Anybody's good enough for him—servants, anybody. And Anna seems to have taken him very seriously."

He watched Lila closely as he said this, but the name "Anna" seemed to have no special significance for her.

"Can I do anything?" she asked.

Golly rubbed his nose perplexedly, took off his glasses, wiped them violently, and jammed them on again.

"That's just what I've been wondering," he told her. "I don't see why she shouldn't meet you. But the captain made an awful row when I said that. She's got an idea from somewhere that she knew you a long time ago, when you were just a kid. Anna—you don't remember any one by that name, do you?"

Lila shook her head.

Golly hesitated for a moment. "Suppose

Twenty Years of Trap-Shooting

The Story of a Square Shooter

By Virginia Barry

Fred H. Teeple

A LITTLE more than twenty years ago a man in Chicago was stricken with an illness. For months he was confined to his home, and when finally he was well enough to venture out it was to find himself without his business—without anything—except a great, heavy burden of debts. Nothing new about that. A great many men have experienced the same thing, and many have accepted the experience as the final judgment.

But this man was different. Although small in stature he had the pluck of a Napoleon; he was unwilling to permit defeat to corner him. So he sat down one day, and one by one ran through his list of liabilities and assets—through his list of likes and dislikes—and he found an answer. It concerned a gun, but not in the way you might suppose. And out of that day of reckoning has emerged one of the greatest authorities on trapshooting in all America—United States and Canada combined.

Fred Teeple, the present manager and secretary of the Los Angeles Gun Club was that man. Up to twenty years ago he was only another unknown cog in the great wheel of civilization. Today his name is recognized throughout America as standing for all that is best in the world of trapshooters and hunters.

His second career—for that is what it amounts to—has been somewhat varied though always centered about shooting, and enviably colorful. Starting with the day of reckoning, he hurried to the Chicago Gun Club which he understood from friends was doing none too well. After a brief conference he convinced the directors of his qualifications and his ability with a gun, and was installed as manager, given a home on the grounds, a few chickens, and a salary, which constituted at the time his entire estate. He was also to get a commission on the shells he sold. In four years he not only put the club in its feet, but himself as well, and at the end of that period friends were influential in obtaining for him an offer from Southern California. He accepted it immediately and for the past sixteen years has been here.

But in trapshooting, as in anything else, one thing very often leads to another. For a time Mr. Teeple conducted a trapshooting concession on the end of the Venice pier. Nothing new about that either, except that he conducted his business at night. It was his ideal to have night shooting out over the ocean, but to do that there must be some means of illumination. He experimented with automobile lights which at that time were none too illuminating in any event. Set up on the pier, they pierced little foggy holes of light in the great darkness, and were of assistance only when the target crossed the slender beams. For a brief moment did the target flash into view to be lost immediately in the void. Good marksmanship under these conditions took superhuman skill.

So Fred Teeple got some mirrors and some tin, and did a little more experimenting. Although he didn't know it at the time, he was building even then the foundation of the present day flood lights. His experiment improved conditions considerably, and although the lights were still far from what he hoped for, the little venture prospered—so much so that frequently two poice officers were employed to hold back the crowds. In one summer a quarter of a million targets were thrown out over the ocean. Then came the San Francisco fair of 1915, and Fred closed out at Venice, took his paraphernalia north, and opened a trapshooting concession there.

One evening a man happened along, and in a casual manner inquired about the lighting system, even as so many others had done. Teeple, thinking nothing of it, explained carefully what he had accomplished with the aid of mirrors and tin, and what he would like to do. About a month later, this man came back and brought with him a most remarkable light—one that flooded the entire field, transforming a considerable patch of night into sheer daylight. He had the grace to confess that he had based his invention on the early findings of Teeple, and he gave Teeple a couple of the contraptions. Later the man patented his flood lights which were the forerunners of the present day affairs, and made a fortune.

"But to my putterings, he added his genius and developed a real thing. I guess it's as it should be," says Fred, showing himself to be something of a philosopher as well.

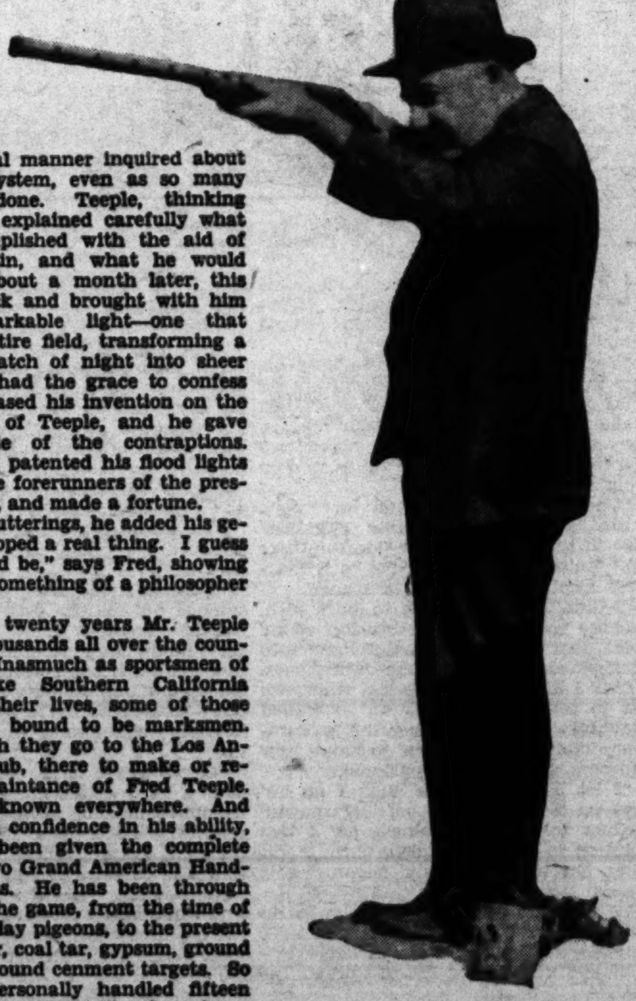
In the past twenty years Mr. Teeple had taught thousands all over the country to shoot. Inasmuch as sportsmen of America strike Southern California sometime in their lives, some of those who come are bound to be marksmen. And being such they go to the Los Angeles Gun Club, there to make or renew the acquaintance of Fred Teeple. His name is known everywhere. And so great is the confidence in his ability, that he has been given the complete handling of two Grand American Handicap trapshoots. He has been through all phases of the game, from the time of live, tin, and clay pigeons, to the present day of pine tar, coal tar, gypsum, ground plaster, and ground cenment targets. So far he has personally handled fifteen million targets which with five to a pound, represent a total weight of fifteen hundred tons. In one year alone at the gun club seventeen tons of lead shot were retrieved from the open field beyond the range.

In case your knowledge of trapshooting is hazy a brief explanation might not be amiss. A mound of earth about three feet high and ten feet long, conceals, in a dugout on its far side, an apparatus for throwing out into the air the targets, which are concave, black discs weighing about three and a quarter ounces each. In some clubs the discs are striped with colors for greater visibility, depending on the background. A great arm working on a lever is controlled by a boy who stands far to the rear at a gear. The shooter stands usually sixteen feet from the blind side of the mound, between it and the boy at the control. At the shooter's signal the boy pulls the gear which has been holding the target-bearing arm "cocked." His pull releases the arm which snaps to position, throwing and at the same time spinning the target, which sails from its concealment out and away over the field. It is the goal of the marksman to shatter it to bits before it has traveled far. Way at the far end of the field is a net into which the unhit targets fall, and last year 35,700 perfectly good ones were rescued in this manner. Most clubs have from six to twenty-four traps, depending on the amount of interest shown locally in the sport.

Men learn to shoot more easily than women, not because their aim is any better, but because most women have an instinctive fear of firearms which has to be overcome. Most men can, after three lessons get about 85 out of 100 targets. After that they slow up, but today, due to improved conditions, it is the usual thing for a good shooter to make 98 or 99 out of 100. The record for men is held by Mr. A. J. Stauber of this city, with an average of 99.12 out of 1250 registered targets.

Nevertheless there are a good many women versed in the art of trapshooting. Two Los Angeles women, Mrs. Gus Knight and Mrs. C. E. Groat are leaders among their sex in America. Mrs. Groat averaged 94 for her registered shots in 1928, and Mrs. Knight's average was 93 out of 100 for 4000 shots, which stands as a record number of shots for the year. Women do not give the time to the sport that men do. For this reason alone, Mr. Teeple believes, do the men stand out as superior marksmen. Annie Oakley and Mrs. Ad Topperwine are the only two women so far who have consistently equaled the men, but they were both professional shooters who devoted a greater part of their lives to trapshooting. In a contest some years ago with Alex Mermod of St. Louis, then the champion, Mrs. Topperwine stood shoulder to shoulder with him through two thousand consecutive shots, and won the contest on the last hundred, when he faltered and she had the stamina to aim accurately at 98 of the remaining targets. But such women are rare. Today there is none to equal their records, though only because there is no woman who will devote to the sport the time and energy these two did.

Mrs. Gus Knight, woman champion trapshooter of the United States and Canada.



Harry Cline, Los Angeles trap-shooter.

Faults of shooting, Mr. Teeple argues, do not exist. According to him, after a couple of lessons a person can shoot or he can't shoot. If his reflexes are quick, if his eye is accurate, if his gauge of distance and speed is dependable, he will very shortly be a good shot. Instances of persons being devoid of such rhythmic sense are few and far between. Men particuary are trained, if not born, to a gun. But with women it is a different story. To confront them with a gun is to frighten them; to hand them one is to almost paralyze them. In order to shoot they must overcome all this instinctive distaste. It is an uphill fight for almost every woman who wishes to become a good marksman.

Very few men ever come to shoot who are totally unfamiliar with guns, and even so the instinct to destroy is there. They make apt pupils. Yet beginners, men and women alike, have one thing in common. They take a gun, and immediately squint one eye shut to aim. Some shooters do shut one eye aways, and manage to become good shots in spite of it. But the ideal way is with both eyes open, the aim being concentrated in one they had found their man. Wade went at once to question the informer, both of whom had police records.

"There's no doubt that it was Mr. Oaks, sir," said one of the men. "I saw him just outside the Arbroath building."

"What's the Arbroath building?"

Elk, who knew the neighborhood thoroughly, explained that it was a block of shops and flats, chiefly remarkable for its ugliness, and that it had been untenanted for a considerable time.

"I recognized him and turned back," the man went on. "I said: 'Hullo, Mr. Oaks!'"

"What did he say?" asked Wade.

'He didn't say anything. He pulled up his coat collar and walked on. I thought I'd make a mistake, but now I'm sure I didn't, because Jimmy here saw him about ten minutes later."

"I did, mister," said the second man huskily. "It must have been him. He was turning the corner of the block when I lamped him—saw him as plain as I see you. I know him very well; I worked in Wapping when Oaks used to buy ships' timbers and sell 'em to the hawkers."

"Did you speak to him?"

"No, sir, I didn't speak to him. But it was Oaks all right. And a few nights ago old Sorbey saw him and told a cop—a policeman—and he saw him near the Arbroath building, too."

The Notting Hill police had nothing to add to this information. They had combed the neighborhood thoroughly, without finding Golly. They were, in truth, rather bored with Golly.

"Perhaps he's living in the Arbroath building," suggested Elk.

"That's unlikely," said the divisional inspector, who had arrived during the interrogation. "The place is shut up, and I'm told it's in the hands of the court, though I'm not certain about this. If you like, we'll go round and see the caretaker."

The Arbroath building proved to be almost as bad as its description—a squat mass of stucco-faced concrete. After much knocking on a gate leading to a garage located in the basement, the officers succeeded in bringing the caretaker to the wicket.

He was an army pensioner, well-known to the police of the neighborhood as a man of the highest integrity.

"Nobody's been here," he said. "I wish somebody would come. I've seen the lawyers this morning. They think they've got a purchaser. I'll be glad to get away to the seaside. I've got a holiday due."

John Wade gave a short, but vivid, description of Golly Oaks.

"That's funny," said the man, when Wade had finished. "I've seen a fellow like that—saw him last night when I was standing at the wicket, having a smoke. He was wearing a long brown ulster and a cap that looked too big for him. I said: 'Good night' to him, and he said: 'Bon soir,' sort of absent-mindedly, but he wasn't French, I'll swear."

"Did he wear glasses?"

The caretaker nodded.

"Yes, and he was smoking a cigarette and sort of singing to himself—horrible voice it was, too."

"That hounds like Golly," frowned Wade. "What is he doing in this neighborhood?"

The inspectors went back to Scotland Yard, not much wiser than they had been when they left. Elk was very thoughtful during the journey.

"I don't like this business," he said. "Ever heard of master criminals, Johnny?"

"In books—yes."

"I've read about 'em, too," said Elk. "I think I smell one here."

"Aikness or Golly?"

"Golly?" There was astonishment in Elk's voice.

"Golly," repeated Wade. "No, I'm not joking. I'm getting a wholesome respect for that fellow. He's thorough. I shan't forget the pansies he was for planting over my tomb, and he has a sense of humor. A criminal who has a sense of humor is the most dangerous type of criminal."

As they took their evening meal together, Elk was reading a newspaper.

"There's an idea, Johnny. The Admiralty are sending a destroyer up to Greenwich to take part in some naval cent—what's the word?"

"Centenary?" suggested Wade.

Elk folded the paper and put it down.

"Why not keep a destroyer permanently on duty in the mouth of the river? Sooner or later that's the way these fellows are going to get away. They've lost the Seal of Troy, but how do we know they haven't got another boat? They've been making millions. Golly or Aikness, or whoever's the man, has got money to burn and can pick up ships at three a penny."

That night, by the light of an electric reading-lamp, Golly Oaks read the same item, and the same thought struck him; but it was the thought that followed upon the first that set this little man aglow. So elated was he that he forgot he was, at the moment, waiting for news from Raggit Lane, to whom he had given a very definite commission.

That Lane did not carry out his orders to the letter was due to a brick that had fallen from the cart of a builder's lorry. It lay in the roadway of the Strand, and the wheel of a certain taxicab bumped over it at a critical moment.

John Wade was in the Strand at that instant. He had stopped to look at the brightly lighted window of a novelty store. Scarcely was his gaze concentrated upon the display within, when the plate glass window was shattered into a thousand fragments. But he did not hear the report of the pistol.

"That man's born lucky," said Raggit Lane, sinking back into the taxicab in which he had, for three hours, been following the inspector.

He removed the silencer from the muzzle of his long-barreled pistol and devoted himself to making up a good excuse for his bad markmanship. He had a scribbed note that afternoon, telling him to remove Wade "at all corst." Golly always put an 'r' in 'cost,' though he wrote the Greek equivalent without an error.

A police whistle sounded, almost the second after the glass was broken. The officer on duty in the Trafalgar Square end of the Strand immediately stopped all traffic. At this point, Mr. Raggit Lane stepped from the cab and closed the door carefully.

"Sorry, boss—the tire hit a brick or somep'n'," said the driver.

"That's all right, Harry—I've put the gun in the locker under the seat," said Lane, and, in another second, was threading his way carefully between buses and cabs.

A narrow squeak that, he thought, when he reached the safety of the Square and Pall Mall beyond. This new traffic-stopping method might have unpleasant consequences. He was glad that he had seen it in operation.

He was also glad that that little adventure was over. He had accepted his task with some misgiving, for he had never before gone gunning for a police official in a public street, and it was not a pleasant experience.

Things were getting a little too dangerous—he didn't like the idea of so many gunmen in London, although he himself had brought some of them there, and had helped to organize them.

Raggit Lane's part in the game was to make clear the lines of communication. He had only once been in on an actual "job." Bank-robbing and safe-blowing were tasks for experts. His own labors ended when he had made secure three lines of escape.

He was becoming more than tired of his lot, and was rich enough, if he felt the inclination, to quit the game; but there was a big share of plunder coming from the central fund, and that was worth waiting for. In South America he could have a pleasant house with a deep veranda, a jolly little yacht that would carry him over blue, sunlit seas, and a wife, perhaps.

He had liked Lila Smith, even before the information had come to him that she was an heiress. There was a girl full of possibilities. There was nothing thick-witted about her.

But the old man wanted her, he supposed. It was curious how nonchalantly the old chap had taken the news that the Seal of Troy had given up its mystery. That meant the loss of hundreds of thousands of pounds, and, if he could afford to treat that with indifference, the share that was coming must be a pretty big one.

The old man was keen about Lila, or he wouldn't have had Siniford put out of the way. That was a dangerous trick, if you like. Raggit Lane shivered at the thought. A member of the House of Lords, heir to a large fortune! Phew!

The old man took risks. He had held up the Westshire Bank in broad daylight, but there was nothing to that, because two of the clerks were in on the deal.

"It is time to quit," said an inner voice. And then Lane thought of his share in the spoils, and of Lila Smith. It was not impossible that he should win her. The old man was getting on in years, and who knew what impression a good-looking man of thirty-five had made upon the susceptible mind of youth?

A hand took his right arm, almost affectionately. As he turned, another caught his left. He stared aghast into the face of John Wade.

CHAPTER XXII

"I WANT you, Lane," said John Wade. "We don't care for a discussion in public, do we?"

A taxicab, crawling along the edge of the curb, moved up. Wade opened the door and went in ahead of the prisoner, gripping his wrist. The detective, who had kept in the background up to now, followed.

"I don't suppose you've got a gun?" said Wade. "By the way, we picked up your taxi friend and found your artillery parked under the seat."

"I don't know what you're talking about—" began Lane.

"So few people do," said Wade. "I've never arrested a man yet who wasn't as innocent as a babe. You were seen getting out of the cab and trailed up the Haymarket. I did a little work in the Strand myself and picked you up across the square. Your little soldiers will cry for their colonel tonight."

"You're talking Greek to me."

"I've been taking lessons from Golly," said Wade cheerfully.

He was exhilarated by the extraordinary good fortune that had placed in his hands one of the most dangerous of his enemies. For once, luck was on his side.

At Cannon Row police station Lane was searched. Nothing was found on him—not so much as a spent cartridge.

"You'll have a little difficulty in proving your case, won't you?" said Lane triumphantly.

For answer, Wade caught him by the sleeve and jerked up his arm.

"Look at his hand, sergeant—powder-blackened at the base of the thumb. These old guns throw back. Where are your rubber gloves, Lane—gone to the wash?"

Lane smiled.

"I suppose you're going to frame me. What do you want me for?"

"Accessory to murder," said Wade. "One of your little friends from Montmartre has told the whole truth and nothing but the truth."

Lane did not flinch.

"You got them, did you? I heard that the police were looking for two men—"

"You heard nothing of the sort. Our plans have been most closely guarded."

When Lane had been taken to a cell, a thought struck Wade that made him decide to have another word with his prisoner.

"I'm suggesting to you for your own good, Lane, that you don't have your meals sent in," he said.

Lane looked up with a smile.

"Am I a fool?" he asked.

Elk had come into the station while the prisoner was being charged.

"Took it very well, that fellow—a little bit too well to please me."

"What do you mean?" asked Wade, in surprise.

Elk rubbed his chin thoughtfully.

"You'd think, by the way he went on, that he never expected to be charged with murder, and certainly wasn't looking forward to taking the nine o'clock walk."

Wade waited until the formal charge was made in the morning, and, when the inevitable remand was granted, he drove down to Oxford. Somewhere on that river Lila Smith was a prisoner, and he had a feeling that he was destined to rescue her. He found a motor-launch, a local detective, and an official of the Thames conservancy waiting for him, and without delay the down-river trip began.

It was a laborious business. They stopped four "tows" of barges between Henley and Hurley, and each barge had to be searched. The work was all the more tedious, because Wade was almost positive, in every case, that the craft he searched was not the one for which he was looking, and the irritation of certain of the bargemen was accentuated by the fact that several of them had already received two police visitations in the past few days.

One of the bargemen, more polite than the others, gave Wade a little information.

"There's a couple of big boats lying up near Marlow," said the man. "They've been I don't know how long coming up the river. I passed 'em twice. The Betsy Jane and Bertha Brown."

"Are they tied to the towing-path?" asked Wade, interested.

The man shook his head.

"No—to some private land on the right bank. I think they're all right—they've been in the river some time."

It was late in the evening when the police had worked through the town, but Wade determined to push down the river. As they cleared Hurley lock, he saw the two craft lying stem to prow. They were close to the bank, overshadowed by the trees that stood at the water's edge. He saw lights burning on both and decided to wait till the morning before he made a closer inspection.

He motored to town that night, and early in the morning was picked up at Marlow and went slowly up the stream. A thin mist lay on the river and on the meadows along both banks. He made his approach under the stern of the rearmost barge and landed, despite the printed warning that he would be prosecuted for trespassing.

The approach was difficult. There was a strip of thick underbrush between the meadow and the water's edge, but presently he found a narrow path that led him to where a gangway spanned the space between barge and bank.

On the poop of the barge a man had been performing his morning ablutions. He dried his face when Wade crossed the gangway, and greeted his visitor with apparent unconcern.

"Capt. James," he reported, when Wade showed his credentials. "Police, are you? You're the third lot of police who've searched this barge today."

He spoke with great deliberation.

"Are you the master?" asked Wade. Something in the man's manner was very familiar.

"That's me, mister."

"Been promoted, haven't you? We met, not so long ago, and then you were a watchman."

For a moment the man was taken aback; then he chuckled.

"Bless my life! It's the gentleman who came aboard the barge after the flood. Yes, sir, I'm the watchman, but I always like to swank a little bit. The skipper's gone ashore to get some food for breakfast."

He had slipped on his coat as Wade approached and had dropped his hand in his pocket. It was this little trick that made Wade ask:

"What have you got in your pocket? A gun?"

The man laughed hoarsely.

"Not me, mister. What do I want a gun for?"

Wade saw a piece of bandage on the man's wrist.

"Hurt your hand, have you?"

The watchman withdrew his hand from his pocket. It was heavily bandaged.

"Dropped a hatch on it the other day," he said. "What can I do for you, mister? Do you want to look at the hold?"

"I thought I might," said Wade.

The watchman walked slowly to the open hatchway and shouted to some one below. A slovenly-looking man appeared.

"Give me a hand to take off these hatches. Good thing we haven't got bad weather."

They pulled two hatch-covers loose, and Wade looked down upon a number of packing-cases. On the tops of these were stenciled the name of an engineering firm in Austria.

"Take off the hatch-covers, aft," said Wade, and they obeyed. "She's riding rather light."

"We're on the bottom," said one of the men easily. "We're going to be lucky to get off, unless they let more flood water down."

Wade waited while the hatch-covers were replaced, and then he drew his automatic from his pocket and regarded it carelessly.

"That's a nice gun," he said.

The watchman was eying him closely, but said nothing.

"Come with me on a little trip to Marlow, will you?" said Wade.

"Why?" asked the other.

"You might meet your skipper," smiled Wade.

He backed to the gangway, then sidled along to the bank, never taking his gaze from the watchman. The second bargeman had disappeared.

"I can't leave this barge—" the watchman began.

He saw the police whistle go up to Wade's lips.

"All right," he growled. "Some of you policemen are mighty mysterious."

He followed Wade to the bank, passed him, and walked ahead. They made a wide detour, and now Wade's gaze was on the underbrush that partially hid the second barge. There was no sign of life on it, no sound of any kind.

The watchman was put aboard the waiting police launch without difficulty. While a detective kept his eye upon the prisoner, Wade sat facing the barge, knowing that many unfriendly eyes were watching him.

But the fusillade that he expected did not come, and he reached the shelter of Marlow and hurried his prisoner into the police station.

"I want you for bank robbery," said Wade, when the man had been searched and the contents of his pockets laid on the inspector's desk. "It seems hardly worth while mentioning the minor charge of impersonating a sergeant of the city police."

"Good night," said the man sarcastically. "You're getting to be a regular Sherlock Holmes, Wade."

"Quite a lot of people have told me that," said Wade.

Cardlin—he was charged in that name—made no statement, no excuse, offered no defense, did not even protest his innocence. When he had been removed to a cell, John Wade offered a few words of advice to the inspector.

"Bring out your reserves for station duty. I'll have this fellow shifted in a couple of

The WOLVES of the WATER-FRONT

By Edgar Wallace

SYNOPSIS: Inspector John Wade, of the London police, while tracking a criminal gang known as the India Rubber men, sees Lila Smith, a slavey in a lodging-house, gorgeously dressed and in the company of an elderly man. Afterward she goes to a deserted house and resumes her Cinderella garb. A Chinaman, seen by Wade in the same house, is murdered. The India Rubber men descend on Wade and seize a ring found on the dead man. A minor matter takes Wade to a ship, the captain of which was attacked by a mysterious woman named Anna. He recognizes the captain as the man who was Lila's escort, and is satisfied that there is a connection between the ship and the India Rubber men. By chance, he meets in London a river-front idler, Golly Oaks, who, according to his wife, had gone to sea. That night Wade barely escapes death when the gang raids his home. The police plan a raid on the Mecca, a river hang-out. Wade is trapped in a cellar and is nearly drowned as the tide rises.

Lila Smith is believed by Inspector John Wade to be Delia Pattison, an heiress, and the object of a conspiracy, of which Lord Siniford, the next heir, is the prime mover. She is taken from the place of safety in which Wade has hidden her. He is convinced that her former employer, Mrs. Oaks, and Siniford are responsible. He also suspects that they are in league with the India Rubber men.

CONCLUSION

CHAPTER XV

THE bearded man, whose masquerade, as a police sergeant had completely fooled both Wade and Elk, went up the stairs, reached the top, and backed slowly into the adjoining room. Still covering them with his pistol, he stooped and felt along the flange of the door.

"He's shutting the door on us!"

It was the bank manager's voice, shrill with terror.

"He's feeling for the safety-bolt. We shall be smothered!"

It was at that moment that John Wade jerked out his pistol and fired. He heard a cry of pain and the clatter of the bearded man's automatic as it hit the floor. The great steel door was closing slowly. In a moment Wade was up the steps and had wedged his shoulder between door and lintel. At his first move toward the stairs, the bearded man had fled.

"The alarm bell!" gasped the manager.

He pushed past Elk, sprawled over the desk, and groped underneath. Instantly the quiet street echoed with the clang of the alarm.

A city policeman was the first to appear. In his hurry, the thief had left the outer doors of the bank wide open. The policeman reported that a car had passed him, just as he turned the corner. By the time Wade left the building, the street was filled with uniformed men, and, a few minutes later, the chief of the division rushed in.

"Cardlin? No, I don't know any such person," he said. "What did he look like?"

Wade described the bearded man, and the police chief shook his head.

"There isn't such a man—not in this division at any rate, and, if he were a sergeant, I should know him."

Half-an-hour later two very depressed police officers drove along the Embankment.

"The laugh is on us," said Elk gloomily. "At the same time, it would all have happened, if we hadn't turned up. He didn't expect us, but he was pretty quick on the uptake. I'd give a month's salary—almost anybody's salary—to lay my right hand, or even my left, on Mr. Whiskers."

Wade said nothing; to him that adventure had one redeeming feature. The bearded man had unconsciously offered him the one clew that he needed.

Wade and Elk went at once to Mr. Brude's flat, and found him waiting up for them. Wade told him of the theft of the deed-box and asked him what it had contained.

"Birth and marriage certificates, a number of letters written by Lady Pattison's daughter, a few photographs, mainly of the child, Delia," Mr. Brude said. Then he added, "and a statement made by the servant, Anna, concerning the—um—conflagration. There was nothing more. Lady Pattison was most anxious that these things should be kept separate from her other papers. That is why I put them in a safe-deposit box."

"Who knew they were at the bank?" asked Wade.

"Nobody," replied the lawyer promptly. "I did not even tell Lord Siniford—"

"Yes, you did," said Wade quietly. "You were telling me when he was in the room last night. You remember he came in and bolted out again?" "He knew before that," said Elk. "Didn't the young lady hear that talk about the engraver's shop some days ago?"

From the lawyer's flat Wade put through a call to his lordship, but there was no reply. He called up the hall porter, who said:

"His lordship came in and went out again."

"Did he come in alone?" asked Wade.

The man did not reply, and Wade repeated the question.

"No, sir. He came in with a small gentleman—I don't know his name. They went out together."

Wade called in person at the flat in St. James's street, but the hall porter could give no further details.

"Was the little man white or Chinese?"

"White, sir. Rather a common-looking man—he came here once before. His lordship had run out of whisky, and the man took up a fresh bottle. I think he must have something to do with the sea; he was telling Lord Siniford how cold the river was. I suppose that's no use to you, Mr. Wade?"

"Just that, eh?" said Wade interested. "That the river was cold?"

"Well, not exactly in those words. What he said was: 'I've never known the river so cold.' And then I came in, and he stopped."

Wade nodded. So Golly was the visitor! And he had been to the flat before. That was a kink in the chain.

Weary as he was, Wade had to return to duty, to formulate his charge against Mrs. Oaks. When she was brought in from her cell, she was in a most conciliatory mood.

"I don't know why you should persecute me, Wade," she said. "I've always been polite to you, and I certainly have done you no harm. The charge is ridiculous—administering drugs! And as for Lila, I haven't seen her since yesterday. That girl's more trouble than she's worth—I wish somebody would take her off my hands."

She was looking steadily at Wade as she spoke.

"She's not a bad-looking girl, and there's a bit of money goes with her. My poor dear sister left nearly a thousand pounds. She's very young, but she'd make some man a good wife—"

"Me, for example?" said Wade brusquely. "Is that the bait you're holding out? Well, I don't rise to it. And as for your poor dear sister, if you ever had one, I'm quite sure she was neither poor nor dear. That story doesn't wash. Lila Smith is Delia Pattison."

He saw her blink at this, and the color left her face.

"I—I don't know what you mean, Mr. Wade," she stammered. "It's all a mystery to me."

Wade nodded to the sergeant and briefly stated the charge.

"You'll give me bail, won't you, Mr. Wade?" She was almost tearful. "You wouldn't keep a woman of my age and respectable character in a dirty police cell all night?"

"The cells here are very clean," said Wade coldly. "And besides, Mrs. Oaks, who would bail you?" And then, suddenly: "Yes, my good friend, I'll accept your husband's bail, if he'll put in an appearance. You had better send for him."

She was taken aback at this.

"I don't know where Golly is—you know that. I haven't seen him—"

"You spend your life not seeing people," said Wade wearily. "You ought to have met him tonight. I found him in your wood-cellar. The last view I had of him, he was swimming toward London Bridge. I hope he doesn't suffer from rheumatism."

Her face was set. She shot one venomous look at Wade, and opened her lips, as if to speak. Then, turning on her heel, she followed the matron down the passage that led to the cells.

Wade returned home that night so tired that he was asleep almost before he knew he was in bed. He woke, after five hours, to find the lank form of Inspector Elk by his bedside.

"No, I never sleep," said Elk. "It's a great waste of time."

"What do you want now?" grumbled Wade, as he sat up, yawned, and stretched. "I suppose you've brought a first-class kick from the Yard?"

Elk sat on the edge of the bed and deliberately lit a stub of cigar before he replied.

"No, that will come in due course. I thought you'd like to know that your river coppers took the body of a man from the water at daybreak—found him floating close to the Middlesex shore."

Wade stared at him.

"Who was it?" he asked.

Elk blew a cloud of smoke to the ceiling.

"The late Lord Siniford," he said.

"Siniford—dead! Drowned?"

Elk shook his head.

"Knifed," he said. "A very neat job. The doctor says he never knew what killed him."

CHAPTER XVI

THE contents of the pockets of the dead man lay neatly arrayed on a plain deal table at police headquarters. A gold cigarette-case, a watch and guard, a tiny gold box containing a powder that John Wade knew was cocaine, a small silver knife, a platinum ring, keys, and a packet of medicine universally known as a specific against seasickness comprised the lot. There was no pocketbook, no document by which the body might have been identified, although it was fairly certain, as Elk pointed out, that the keys and the cigarette-case would have been sufficient to establish an identity.

The fatal wound was hardly visible, as Wade had seen when he examined the body. Lord Siniford had been stabbed in the back of the neck. Death had been instantaneous.

"I've seen one or two murders like that," said Elk. "Original fellows, these Chinese. What do you make of this stuff?" He indicated the articles on the table.

"Nothing much. Evidently he was a bad sailor and was going to sea. The murder took place between midnight and six o'clock, the hour when he was found; therefore, it occurred somewhere in the region of Westminster."

He took down from a peg the heavy-looking waistcoat the dead man had worn.

"This is proof that he expected to go to sea. It is padded with fibre, and is the sort of thing worn by nervous passengers; it would serve as a life-belt. His murderers didn't realize that it would cause the body to float. The watch stopped at one seventeen—five minutes before the tide began to ebb. That means the murder occurred six hours from Greenwich. The tide had turned just as the body was found."

"What's this?" asked Elk. He picked up the ring from the table and looked at it curiously. "Bit small for his finger, wasn't it?"

"It was in his waistcoat pocket," said Wade. "It was never intended for his finger—it is a wedding-ring."

Elk whistled.

"He was going to be married, eh?"

He put the ring down on the table, and then he caught a glimpse of Wade's haggard face.

"You're getting rattled, Johnny," he said kindly.

Wade nodded.

"I am," he said. "All my ideas and pet theories are knocked sideways. I thought the scheme was to marry Lila to this fellow, and I've been counting on this as a respite for her. It lessened the danger, but now—" He made a despairing gesture.

He left soon after, and had only been gone an hour when Elk telephoned, asking him to come to Scotland Yard. Weary of mind and body, sick at heart, Wade obeyed the summons.

Elk was in the superintendent's room, and the burly chief was studying a radio message when Wade came in. He pushed the paper across the table.

"Here's the end of the Seal of Troy," he said. "Acting on instructions from the Admiralty, one of our cruisers picked her up as she was nearing the Brazilian coast—here's the report."

It was a long message covering four sheets of paper.

"Acting on your XF.43/C/9A1/95142, I intercepted Seal of Troy latitude X longitude X and made search. Ship carries cargo agricultural machinery and motor-cars. Manifests in order. Master Silvini, Chief Officer Thomas Treat of Sunderland. Neither Capt. Aikness nor Chief Officer Raggit Lane on ship. In cabins 75, 76, and 79 on fourth deck below water-line I found three men, two English and one American, who stated they had been detained on the ship six years and were employed in the melting down of the settings of stolen jewelry. Each man made an independent statement to the effect that the ship was mainly utilized for the reception of stolen property. In the cabin behind the paneling I found a small room that contained 1250 carats cut diamonds, 750 carats emeralds, many of a considerable size, seventeen small ingots of platinum, fifty-five ingots of fine gold. The ship has three refrigerating-chambers, one of which was found to contain negotiable bonds to the value of £83,000, and as far as can be ascertained £184,000 in bullion and currency notes. One of the jewelers stated that these represented the proceeds of six robberies, including a bank robbery. Am proceeding . . ."

The two lines after this were in code and unintelligible. Then the message went on:

"Statements from the men have been taken and will be verified before magistrates and forwarded you. Seal of Troy proceeding in charge of her own officers."

"This will be sad news for Capt. Aikness, not to say Mr. Raggit Lane," said Elk.

Wade shook his head.

"Not so sad as you imagine. My own opinion is that Aikness knew the game was up and allowed the ship to go to sea, expecting it would be held up. Somewhere in South America he has a pretty large sum cached. This won't hurt him—if he can follow up, but I hardly think he can."

Elk looked a little dubious.

"Aikness? Humph! What is Golly doing in that galley? He's roped in with the rest of the crowd. I rather like Golly—even though he did buy pansies! But he's a tool."

"A double-edged one, I think," said Wade.

He had an appointment at the police court and found an unusually large number of Mrs. Oaks's friends there.

The loungers stood with their hands thrust in their pockets, cigarettes drooping from their mouths, and scowled at John Wade as he passed, or gave him an oily greeting. He saw Sniffy there, and the sight of those unprepossessing features reminded him of something.

"Didn't I see you at the Mecca the other night, Sniffy?" he said.

"Yes, sir."

"What were you doing there? Putting a little money in soak?"

Sniffy was amused.

"I went there on purely a personal and private visit," he said unctuously. "A gentleman calling on a lady, is there anything wrong about that?"

Sniffy sighed. "I've dropped all that low hooking," he said. "I've had the offer of a regular job. A man like me, who knows the river backward—I'll bet there ain't another man in this room that's followed the river to Gloucester—oughtn't to loaf round this hole."

It was perfectly true that Sniffy was one of the few Cockney rivermen who knew the stream in its more pleasant moods—the long, silvery reaches that wound between the wooded hills, the old mill-streams, the green-gray locks, the tiny hamlets that cluster round the banks of the river where it narrows.

"I've jumped across the Thames," said Sniffy complacently. "I'll bet there's few people who can say that—jumped from one bank to another. I know the river better than any pilot; I know the landlord of every pub from here to Oxford."

He stopped suddenly, and then asked:

"What are you going to do with Mrs. Oaks? That's persecution, if you like. A more innocent woman never drew the breath of life. There's a lady!"

Wade was moving on when Sniffy caught his sleeve.

"You'll find a pretty tough lot round here today, Mr. Wade," he said, in a low voice. "I shouldn't wander about alone, if I was you."

The warning was not necessary, however, for Wade knew the danger he was in as he passed men who stared at him with expressionless eyes and glanced quickly at one another, but uttered no word.

He saw Mrs. Oaks in the small waiting-room adjoining the corridor. She had evidently slept very little, but she was calm. She asked if he had been to the Mecca, and, when he replied that he had not, she said:

"I hope you're going to settle this business today, Mr. Wade. I don't see how you can bring any charge against me, much less prove it. I've got the best lawyers that money can hire, and, if they don't tie you in knots, I'll be surprised. I don't want to make you look foolish in court, Mr. Wade. If you'll withdraw the charge, I will say no more about it, and I'll bear no malice."

He shook his head.

"The case has gone forward to the public prosecutor, and I shall ask for a remand," he said.

"All right, you'll see what I can do! I've got some friends, you know, Mr. Wade. Lord Siniford will—"

"Lord Siniford is dead."

John Wade spoke coldly and deliberately, watching the woman. She went scarlet, and then the color faded, leaving her face peaked and gray.

"Dead?" she whispered.

He nodded.

"When—when did he die?"

"He was murdered last night," said Wade. "His body was found in the river."

The Walk-Over Main Spring* Arch shoe was designed for men and women whose duties require them to stand and walk. When feet are normal the Main Spring* Arch acts as a tonic. When tired muscles lag it comes to their assistance with its soothing, helpful support.

Oaks was a healthy woman—the last person in the world to commit suicide—and she had died, because—for the same reason Lord Stafford had died a few days earlier.

It was not difficult to trace the waitress. Wade went in search of her with the jailer and found her in the drab little eating-house that had supplied the breakfast. She had little information to give. In accordance with her instructions, she had carried the tray to the police court cells, which were only fifty yards from the eating-house, and she had taken the tea, haphazard, from several partly filled pots.

"Whom did you meet on the street?" asked Wade.

She could not remember meeting anybody, at first, but, after a while, she said that she had met two men. One had asked her to direct him to High street. She had turned around and indicated, with a jerk of her head, the direction he should follow.

"It was pretty simple," Wade told Elk. "One man held her attention while the other dropped the stuff into the teapot or the milk. I should think it was the milk."

"Have you got a good description of the men?" asked Elk.

"The most she could tell me was that they were rough-looking. I'm getting one of the local constables to make a sketch of the two faces from the woman's description. There's no doubt that Mrs. Oaks was poisoned. They thought she was ready to squeal, and I think that they were right."

Wade was half-dead from want of sleep and anxiety, but he threw himself into the task of trying to find the two strangers who had been seen in the vicinity of the police court that morning.

In the afternoon two men, strolling casually along the Brixton Road, suddenly found themselves surrounded by policemen. They were hustled to Brixton police headquarters and searched. Wade drove down to interview them.

They gave French names, but were undoubtedly Americans, Wade thought. When an interpreter addressed them in French, they replied haltingly.

"We been living in France since last fall," said one.

"Why did you leave the United States?" asked Wade.

They were very vague about this.

Of the poisoning they said they knew nothing. They tried to explain their loaded pistols by pleading ignorance of the law, and they said that they did not know Mrs. Oaks, nor had they heard of the India Rubber men. They had come to London for the purpose of buying old French furniture cheaply, but they could not tell Wade where there was to be a sale of old French furniture.

Imperturbable, thin-lipped, they showed no signs of anxiety until they were handcuffed and en route to Scotland Yard. Then the terror of the unknown descended upon them, and one of them protested, but not in French.

In the meantime a squad of detectives had gone to the address they gave, only to learn that no one with those names lived there. But again fortune favored the police. The men had given as their address the lodging-house in which they intended staying when they reached London. The place, however, was full, when they arrived, and they had been directed elsewhere. Fortunately, the janitor of the lodging-house remembered the three lodgings he had recommended, and to one of these the prisoners were traced.

In their room Wade found three little crystal flasks, one of which was empty. The other two were filled with a liquid that had a slightly bluish tinge. Under the false bottom of a trunk he unearthed a rifle with a short barrel and a particularly long grip—more like a pistol grip. It was an automatic rifle and had never been fired. The cartridges were still wrapped in damp-proof paper.

"We'll take these fellows down to Woolwich station—by river," said Elk. "Don't let them know where they're going. Dig 'em out at two in the morning, tie 'em up, hand and foot, and take 'em to Woolwich."

"What good would that do?" asked Wade.

"Suggestion's everything," said Elk calmly. "I know everything about psychology, except the way to spell it."

The closer questioning at Scotland Yard by the most adept cross-examiners brought no result. The prisoners maintained silence when it was policy to do so, and misunderstood questions when they wished to gain time. They knew nothing of the pistols, nothing of the phials; they suggested that this evidence had been manufactured and planted in their room. They both had, they said, excellent characters—a claim that was not endorsed over the telephone by the Paris police.

Wade interviewed the chief constable and obtained that official's consent to removing the prisoners by boat to Woolwich.

At two o'clock in the morning, when the prisoners were sleeping, ignorant of what was going to happen, they were awakened by two men whose coat collars and soft hats almost covered their faces. The prisoners were ordered to dress quickly and then were handcuffed and hurried into the blackness of the courtyard. The Embankment was a wilderness; they were rushed across the road to a floating pier, where a big police launch was waiting.

There were two other officers on board, and their faces were also covered—a fact that struck terror to the prisoners' souls. A minute later the launch cast off and went rapidly downstream on a falling tide.

London Bridge had been cleared when Elk strapped together the legs of the two men.

"Say, what's the big idea?" asked one, his teeth chattering.

"Shut up!" hissed Elk.

A quarter of an nour passed; the launch sped eastward through the darkness. Not a word was spoken, no threats were made against either man. Their very immunity filled them with panic. Opposite Greenwich Hospital one of them broke down and said he was ready to talk. The party arrived at Woolwich in the early hours of the morning, and John Wade and his companion sat with a trembling wretch who made a statement that was eventually to send his partner and himself to prison for life.

And, when London was having breakfast, two weary inspectors and the chief constable went over the points of the confession.

"This doesn't tell us the name of the man who employed them," said the chief.

Elk shook his head.

"The fellow was invited to come to this country, paid a large sum in cash and a generous wage that reached him by post, and he knew nothing more than that, on a certain date, he would receive detailed information as to what was expected of him."

"He practically admits the murder of Mrs. Oaks," said Wade.

Again the chief shook his head.

"He admits putting the poison in the milk, but he swears that the thought it was dope she wanted to steady her nerves. Both men say that the flasks were supplied to them. One of them says he had previously doped the police sergeant's wife and that he thought this job was no worse than that. The only thing he knows about his employer is that he was tall and dark—"

"And handsome," murmured Elk, and was silenced by a glance from the cold, blue eyes of the chief constable.

"They're starting something—something big. No news of that girl?"

"None, sir."

"Funny! You thought she was on a barge that was being towed up-river, Wade. The police have searched every barge and found nothing. That idea seems a little far-fetchd, doesn't it?"

Wade heaved a sigh.

"All ideas seem far-fetched," he said wearily. "How far has the search extended?"

"As far as Maidenhead. The Buckinghamshire and Berkshire police are looking after the river farther on. Why don't you have a try yourself, if you think you can recognise the two barges that were lying off the Mecca? Have a sleep, leave the Mrs. Oaks case to the divisional inspector, and take a launch down from Henley, or from Oxford, if you like, and see if you can recognise that old tub. You don't think that this girl has dodged off on her own?"

"No, sir," said Wade quietly. "I believe, now that Mrs. Oaks is dead, Lila Smith's danger has increased, to a great extent."

The chief looked at him oddly.

"All right," he said.

Wade was in the corridor, on his way to the street, when the chief came to the door and called him back.

"We've traced Raggit Lane—he's been seen in London, and if there's any organization of gunmen being built up here, he's running it."

"You've found him, sir?" asked Wade quickly.

"When I said we'd traced him, I meant we'd traced his dirty past," replied the chief. "Seven convictions in various parts of the world—ask the clerk of the record bureau to let you take a look at the data."

For the moment John Wade was not interested in Raggit Lane, although there was more reason why he should be apprehensive of that man than of any member of the gang, for Lane and his men were trailing him day and night.

CHAPTER XXI

IN THE afternoon John Wade received a report that Golly had been seen in the Notting Hill district. He might have pursued a perfunctory inquiry, but for the fact that, three times in one week, a report had been received that a man answering to the description of Golly Oaks had been seen in a particular area. This report, however, was supplemented by a note to the effect that several suspicious-looking persons had also been seen.

Now it so happened that in Notting Hill lived a man who, though reputedly honest himself, knew many of the characters of the underworld. Dan Ricord derived a fair income by renting out piano-organs and ice-cream barrows. To say that the breath of suspicion had never tarnished the brightness of his reputation would be untrue; but it was true that the police had never associated him with even a minor crime, unless it be a crime to charge exorbitantly for the apparatus he owned.

He had a wide acquaintance not only among the police but also among law-breakers. When John Wade and Elk drove down to interview him, he received them openly in his rather ornate parlor.

"Golly Oaks I know nothing about," he began. "But I can tell you that a lot of queer-looking fellows have been around here lately, usually after dark. They go about in pairs and look as if they're getting acquainted with the neighborhood."

"Why this neighborhood?" asked John Wade.

"Heaven knows," was the cheerful reply. "But I happen to know that this is a fact, because a man who peddles dope—not exactly a friend of mine, you understand—had a talk with them. He says they're gunmen. He says there's been half a dozen of 'em walking about this district, the last night or two."

"Are they living here?"

Ricord shook his head.

"No, sir. That's the funny thing. If they were living here, it wouldn't be curious that they should be running round the neighborhood."

While Wade and Elk were interviewing Ricord, several detectives were scouring the neighborhood to find the two men who said that they had seen Oaks on tne previous night. The officers were waiting for Wade when be left Ricord's house, to tell him that

POLLINATING DATES

Finicky Date Blooms Have to Be Served Pollen by Hand

(Illustrating Article by Iva M. McFadden)

Two workers in a date garden. The male bloom, which has just begun to crack its sheath, is cut off the palm, opened by hand, and the small sprigs of pollen-bearing flowers are removed. They will be dried carefully to prevent loss and later the pollen will be applied to the flowers on the female trees to insure a crop.

Here's a small cluster of the female flowers—although they look more like buttons strung on twigs—cut from a young date palm. Hand pollination develops the fruit and seed normally and this practice of artificial date bloom fertilization has been followed for centuries in the old-world lands where dates are grown, as well as here.

Pollination is effected in various ways. After it is completed, the ends of the female bloom clusters are clipped off and tied with a string in a slip-knot which "gives" as the fruit grows. The string holds the female blossoms together for pollination from a couple of sprigs of the male blooms usually inserted upside down at the top of the cluster, and also prevents wind damage to the fruit while it is small.

This date grower puts the male flower sprigs down on newspapers so that none of the pollen may be wasted.

The young date palm "matron" in the background has been pollinated and the clusters tied and clipped. The two operators are showing a male bloom freed from its sheath.

It takes one male tree to grow pollen enough to care for from 50 to 100 fruit bearers. Now scientists believe that a "better sires" campaign for date groves may be advisable. This producer has the pollen crop gathered and ready to apply to the embryotic fruit.

Hats Off to the Amateur and His Gardening Prowess

By Frances Duncan

Calceolarias grown by H. B. Todd on the T. W. Warner Estate and shown at Pasadena. Calceolarias formed an interesting part of the Adamson exhibit at the West Los Angeles Flower Show.

The exhibit at the Pasadena Flower Show of Briggs Floral Company, Encinitas, was especially brilliant in color. Just beyond is seen the exhibit of Clinton Pedley, a Carlsbad bulb grower. The Briggs Company had a notable exhibit at the San Diego Flower Show, April 27 and 28, also.

THE goddess Flora, ever since the mid-April affair at Redlands, has been enjoying a very orgy of coming-out parties. In fact, these receptions have been as difficult to watch as a four-ring circus with the rings some fifty miles apart.

In several towns and cities the flower show has been a new thing and this spring's show the first ever attempted. But no visitor would guess that, for the new shows have been staged with all the skill of long practice. No one who visited Glendale's show, held April 26-27 in the luxuriously appointed women's club, would imagine it was that community's first show, nor that held at Azusa on the 30th was that enterprising town's first. One would like to mention the work of all the exhibitors, for the flowers displayed were beautiful specimens and in most cases charmingly arranged. One thing is certain, that a survey of many smaller shows makes clear that no amateur winner at Covina, at Whittier, at Glendale, for instance, need hesitate to send an exhibit of flowers to the Southern California show. It would be hard to find a finer stalk of the iris "Lent A. Williamson" than that shown by Mrs. B. F. Stair at Azusa, nor finer roses than the "Belle of Portugals" shown by Mrs. W. V. Anderson at Glendale, nor a more interesting exhibit of wild flowers than that exhibited by J. F. Gadden at Whittier, nor finer lilacs and sweet peas than Whittier showed, nor more beautiful pansies than one could see at Covina in the show held there April 24-25.

Nothing so "puts the town on the map" as a successful flower show, and it would be a graceful thing if, after the show is over, the city which often finds time and occasion for a junket or a banquet, should give a dinner to the committee and the prize winners at the flower show, or, if they preferred, having usually the gardener's preference for the hyacinth to the extra loaf of bread, stand treat to a trip to some neighboring gardens. Certainly it is among the folk who stage and put across the garden show that one can find some of the most valuable citizens in the community. It wouldn't be a bad idea if the chairman of the garden section were automatically on the city council—unquestionably it would make for an improvement in the town's appearance, and his or her presence on the council would act as a brake on projects which would mar the town's beauty.

San Bernardino's Show

San Bernardino's Wild Flower Show was highly successful. It was extremely well staged and although there were not so many varieties shown (the rigid restrictions on the picking of wild flowers probably put a damper on some collecting), a new departure was the exhibition of mushrooms, all carefully labelled—botanical name and character also, whether poisonous or non-poisonous. The cacti were displayed in great variety. There was the ocotilla, desert lily, chocolate lily, and all the richness of the desert, for from San Bernardino the Mojave is not so far distant. The practice of a realistic representation of the desert instead of varieties of cactus in pots, is increasing. Miss Josephine Conly Smith had the management of the show, and was ably assisted by San Bernardino's flower-loving experts.

Whittier's Garden Flowers

Whittier's show was especially strong on the old-fashioned garden flowers. The show was well staged in the pretty little club house at Bailey and Friends avenues. Here were splendid snowballs, very beautiful lilacs, weigela, forsythia, for this spring the flowering shrubs have been having the time of their lives and have revelled in the long, [illegible] that has been annoying to the roses. Sweet peas were especially beautiful; so were stocks and snapdragons; there was a fine display of irises and beautiful baskets of flowers. One remembers especially J. F. Gadden's basket of wild flowers in varying shades of blue. The North Whittier Heights Garden Club had an exhibit of flowers beautifully grown and beautifully staged. Next year this club should exhibit at the Pasadena show. There were few commercial exhibits, for the Whittier show is essentially amateur. Howard and Smith had a display, more interesting to many a gardener than the striking showing of cinerarias which won for them a first prize at the West Los Angeles show. Their Whittier exhibit was hastily staged and the flowers were too crowded—probably their experts were busy at West Los Angeles—but they had some rarely beautiful delphiniums, in color from turquoise to a deep sea-blue, very lovely columbines in beautiful color, gloxinias and ranunculi in great variety—and it's late for ranunculi.

Very likely Whittier will be the next to follow Redlands' example and keep open house during flower show week. Surely anyone who visited the flower show would be delighted to see the pretty gardens that were there represented. Mrs. F. C. Gillett, who was garden chairman, had much to do with "putting across" the show, which was very successful.

West Los Angeles Show

The second birthday of the West Los Angeles show, which already bids fair to rank with Pasadena's, was well worth seeing. The space covered by the big tent at Santa Monica and Sepulveda boulevards was as large as that at Pasadena, but the exhibits were not quite so many. Especially fine were the commercial displays. One might think that Howard and Smith, Coolidge's Rare Plant Gardens, and Edward Rust had collaborated, the displays harmonized so well. Mr. Rust, of Pasadena, in the central space, showed beautiful rhododendrons. Howard and Smith had a gorgeous display of cinerarias. Coolidge's showing was of tree roses, beautifully grown and in fine flower—these were the background; in the foreground were azaleas and ericas in great variety—a prize-winning display, this. To the right of Coolidge's display was Armacost and Royston's lovely showing of hothouse roses—beautiful roses they were; especially fine were Dame Edith Helen, the gorgeous Lady Hillingdon, and the Californian, Mrs. Lovell Swisher. Beverly Hills Nursery had a fine showing of Easter lilies and pale rose-colored rhododendrons in a garden setting that was very effective; cinerarias and azaleas were also included in their display. Briggs Floral Company of Encinitas showed beautiful gladioli, and Clinton Pedley, also of Encinitas, displayed beautiful specimens of that colorful "glad," W. H. Phipps. The iris display was Stillman Berry's, of Redlands, who showed a great variety of his rarely beautiful irises—it seems to have been an exceptionally fine year for the iris. Dr. D. A. Houghton, of San Fernando, took a first prize with his cactus and succulent garden, which was full of interest and variety, but Mrs. Diedrich went a very close second. Her display was not so large nor so varied, but it was delightfully displayed. Another woman exhibitor among the professionals whose exhibit was most interesting was Mrs. C. A. Adamson. Entirely of potted plants was this exhibit, but such calceolarias, such gloxinias—varieties, too, which one rarely sees. "I haven't seen such gloxinias since I was a child in England," said little Mrs. Lester Rowntree, whose wild-flower stand was near the Adamson display; "a Scotch gardener, too, it must be."

The amateur exhibits came from the palatial gardens of Beverly Hills and Santa Monica, and were rich in color; shrub branches were shown in profusion—irises, stocks, pentstemons; there were several admirable school exhibits; especially good was that of the Harding School—splendid woodwardias and tree ferns were shown.

Riverside's Flower Show

Mrs. Belle Ewing sends this account of Riverside's first community flower show given under the auspices of the garden department of the Women's Club and held on April 17 and 18.

"The show was a complete success," writes Mrs. Ewing. "Mrs. Charles G. Rouse was the chairman. No admittance fee was charged—no prizes were given. This was strictly an amateur show, and the club rooms were literally filled with glorious flowers.

"There were beautiful roses, sweet peas in coral and lavender, large pansies, old-fashioned lilacs, the bridal wreath; there were tulips, many varieties of iris, also wild flowers, ferns, cacti, and many new and unusual plants. Lovebirds were present in pretty cages; there were goldfish in a water garden; photographs of desert scenes and flowers, by Edward Avery Fields of Riverside, and flowers everywhere.

"Three schools had exhibits—the Bryant, Lowell and Irvine. Of these, that of the last named was by far the most interesting. This school, attended by Mexican, Chinese, Japanese and Negro children, showed an herb garden. The youngsters had written the labels on the plants that they had grown, as well as the recipes for their use. Thus one learns that the blossoms of the snake cactus, boiled, are good for the heart; Yerba buena, for the stomach; dasima soothes earache; the verano, headache. A recipe for cooking common cactus was given as follows: Remove spines, cut into small pieces, boil, drain, then fry in lard with onions, tomatoes and cilanto, the latter a feathery herb used for seasoning.

"A redwood burl, an avocado growing from the seed, a Jerusalem chagolla, and a beautiful flowering Spanish cactus, called "Hand-of-the-King," were also among the exhibits on this table.

"A very charming exhibit was the bridal set. The tiny bride and groom stood under a canopy of broom; a tall white lupine was the candle, sweet alyssum and orange blossoms banked the aisle. The native ferns grown by Mrs. W. R. Baty were also of interest. A very pretty table was the one sponsored by the Riverside Lions Club. Walter F. Sheetz contributed rockery plants and camellias, and Raymond Best showed wonderful tulips. Other members sent calla lilies, petunias in many varieties, variegated iris, and a lovely showing of pansies. Another interesting exhibit was the one put on by the city of Riverside propagating plant.

"There were tables of ranunculi, roses, delphiniums, columbines, sweet peas, pansies, snapdragons, and California poppies, as well as many tables of mixed flowers. Irises and tulips seemed to be the most popular flowers with Riverside gardeners."

He Raises Turkeys on Ranch in Southland Mountains

A. J. Hartford has a turkey and apricot farm in Elizabeth Canyon a few miles back from Castaic. Of course he needs dogs, and he is here shown with a future "varmint" hunter. At that, Mr. Hartford declares, the most dangerous "varmints" a Southland poultryman has to deal with are the two-legged kind.

Mr. Hartford no longer dries his apricots, so he utilizes the trays to house and fence his turkeys. These high barriers keep the turkeys in and marauders out.

Mr. Hartford says he has eliminated disease by introducing wild turkey blood into his flock. Here is a pen of his birds.

Below—A screen porch has recently been added to the rambling farm home. It still lacked the finishing touches, the screen and paint, when it was photographed.

Many early pioneers of California chose the hills. They liked the beetling crags, the trees and streams. Mr. Hartford's place includes eighty acres on the floor of the canyon, and this is the grand view at the front gate.

A corner of the farmstead, with a bit of what will be an alfalfa field.

Wild Mexican turkeys seem to have a greater resistance to blackhead, major turkey trouble, than many more domestic strains, says Mr. Hartford. This bird came from a reserve in Arizona.

Poultry Pays Good Profits —at Fontana

This statement has again received authoritative support in the report of 1928 poultry records of representative flocks compiled by the ranchers themselves under the supervision of the University of California Extension Service, and the San Bernardino County Farm Bureau. You will do well to give serious consideration to these proven successes, and to your possibilities of joining others in this enjoyable country life with an income—yes, a three-way income in this delightful and soundly established community, Fontana.

Here are the Figures

—An abstract from the official report showing twenty Fontana ranches with a total of 17,704 hens gives a total flock income of $27,735, or $1.55 per hen for the year 1928. POLLINATING DATES

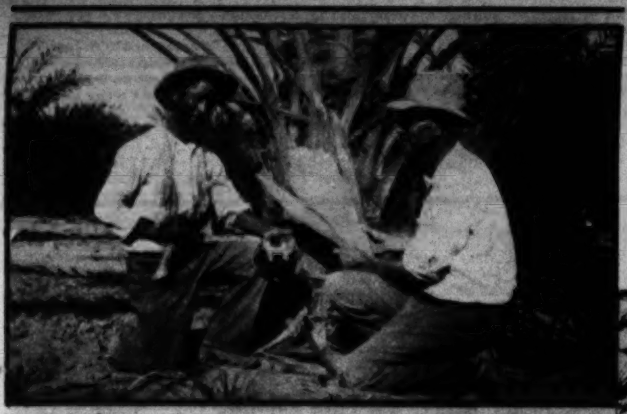
Finicky Date Blooms Have to Be Served Pollen by Hand

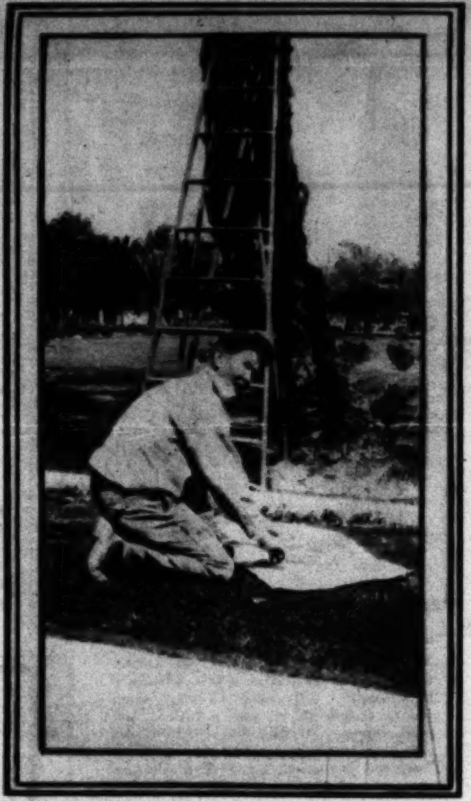
(Illustrating Article by Iva M. McFadden)



Two workers in a date garden. The male bloom, which has just begun to crack its sheath, is cut off the palm, opened by hand, and the small sprigs of pollen-bearing flowers are removed. They will be dried carefully to prevent loss and later the pollen will be applied to the flowers on the female trees to insure a crop.

Here's a small cluster of the female flowers—although they look more like buttons strung on twigs—cut from a young date palm. Hand pollination develops the fruit and seed normally and this practice of artificial date bloom fertilization has been followed for centuries in the old-world lands where dates are grown, as well as here.

Pollination is effected in various ways. After it is completed, the ends of the female bloom clusters are clipped off and tied with a string in a slip-knot which "gives" as the fruit grows. The string holds the female blossoms together for pollination from a couple of sprigs of the male blooms usually inserted upside down at the top of the cluster, and also prevents wind damage to the fruit while it is small.



This date grower puts the male flower sprigs down on newspapers so that none of the pollen may be wasted.

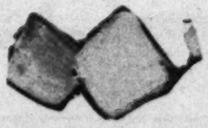
The young date palm "matron" in the background has been pollinated and the clusters tied and clipped. The two operators are showing a male bloom freed from its sheath.



It takes one male tree to grow pollen enough to care for from 50 to 100 fruit bearers. Now scientists believe that a "better sires" campaign for date groves may be advisable. This producer has the pollen crop gathered and ready to apply to the embryotic fruit.

Hats Off to the Amateur and His Gardening Prowess

By Frances Duncan

Calceolarias grown by H. B. Todd on the T. W. Warner Estate and shown at Pasadena. Calceolarias formed an interesting part of the Adamson exhibit at the West Los Angeles Flower Show.

The exhibit at the Pasadena Flower Show of Briggs Floral Company, Encinitas, was especially brilliant in color. Just beyond is seen the exhibit of Clinton Pedley, a Carlsbad bulb grower. The Briggs Company had a notable exhibit at the San Diego Flower Show, April 27 and 28, also.

THE goddess Flora, ever since the mid-April affair at Redlands, has been enjoying a very orgy of coming-out parties. In fact, these receptions have been as difficult to watch as a four-ring circus with the rings some fifty miles apart.

In several towns and cities the flower show has been a new thing and this spring's show the first ever attempted. But no visitor would guess that, for the new shows have been staged with all the skill of long practice. No one who visited Glendale's show, held April 26-27 in the luxuriously appointed women's club, would imagine it was that community's first show, nor that held at Azusa on the 30th was that enterprising town's first. One would like to mention the work of all the exhibitors, for the flowers displayed were beautiful specimens and in most cases charmingly arranged. One thing is certain, that a survey of many smaller shows makes clear that no amateur winner at Covina, at Whittier, at Glendale, for instance, need hesitate to send an exhibit of flowers to the Southern California show. It would be hard to find a finer stalk of the iris "Lent A. Williamson" than that shown by Mrs. B. F. Stair at Azusa, nor finer roses than the "Belle of Portugals" shown by Mrs. W. V. Anderson at Glendale, nor a more interesting exhibit of wild flowers than that exhibited by J. F. Gadden at Whittier, nor finer lilacs and sweet peas than Whittier showed, nor more beautiful pansies than one could see at Covina in the show held there April 24-25.

Nothing so "puts the town on the map" as a successful flower show, and it would be a graceful thing if, after the show is over, the city which often finds time and occasion for a junket or a banquet, should give a dinner to the committee and the prize winners at the flower show, or, if they preferred, having usually the gardener's preference for the hyacinth to the extra loaf of bread, stand treat to a trip to some neighboring gardens. Certainly it is among the folk who stage and put across the garden show that one can find some of the most valuable citizens in the community. It wouldn't be a bad idea if the chairman of the garden section were automatically on the city council—unquestionably it would make for an improvement in the town's appearance, and his or her presence on the council would act as a brake on projects which would mar the town's beauty.

San Bernardino's Show

San Bernardino's Wild Flower Show was highly successful. It was extremely well staged and although there were not so many varieties shown (the rigid restrictions on the picking of wild flowers probably put a damper on some collecting), a new departure was the exhibition of mushrooms, all carefully labelled—botanical name and character also, whether poisonous or non-poisonous. The cacti were displayed in great variety. There was the ocotilla, desert lily, chocolate lily, and all the richness of the desert, for from San Bernardino the Mojave is not so far distant. The practice of a realistic representation of the desert instead of varieties of cactus in pots, is increasing. Miss Josephine Conly Smith had the management of the show, and was ably assisted by San Bernardino's flower-loving experts.

Whittier's Garden Flowers

Whittier's show was especially strong on the old-fashioned garden flowers. The show was well staged in the pretty little club house at Bailey and Friends avenues. Here were splendid snowballs, very beautiful lilacs, weigela, forsythia, for this spring the flowering shrubs have been having the time of their lives and have revelled in the long, cool spring that has been annoying to the roses. Sweet peas were especially beautiful; so were stocks and snapdragons; there was a fine display of irises and beautiful baskets of flowers. One remembers especially J. F. Gadden's basket of wild flowers in varying shades of blue. The North Whittier Heights Garden Club had an exhibit of flowers beautifully grown and beautifully staged. Next year this club should exhibit at the Pasadena show. There were few commercial exhibits, for the Whittier show is essentially amateur. Howard and Smith had a display, more interesting to many a gardener than the striking showing of cinerarias which won for them a first prize at the West Los Angeles show. Their Whittier exhibit was hastily staged and the flowers were too crowded—probably their experts were busy at West Los Angeles—but they had some rarely beautiful delphiniums, in color from turquoise to a deep sea-blue, very lovely columbines in beautiful color, gloxinias and ranunculi in great variety—and it's late for ranunculi.

Very likely Whittier will be the next to follow Redlands' example and keep open house during flower show week. Surely anyone who visited the flower show would be delighted to see the pretty gardens that were there represented. Mrs. F. C. Gillett, who was garden chairman, had much to do with "putting across" the show, which was very successful.

West Los Angeles Show

The second birthday of the West Los Angeles show, which already bids fair to rank with Pasadena's, was well worth seeing. The space covered by the big tent at Santa Monica and Sepulveda boulevards was as large as that at Pasadena, but the exhibits were not quite so many. Especially fine were the commercial displays. One might think that Howard and Smith, Coolidge's Rare Plant Gardens, and Edward Rust had collaborated, the displays harmonized so well. Mr. Rust, of Pasadena, in the central space, showed beautiful rhododendrons. Howard and Smith had a gorgeous display of cinerarias. Coolidge's showing was of tree roses, beautifully grown and in fine flower—these were the background; in the foreground were azaleas and ericas in great variety—a prize-winning display, this. To the right of Coolidge's display was Armacost and Royston's lovely showing of hothouse roses—beautiful roses they were; especially fine were Dame Edith Helen, the gorgeous Lady Hillingdon, and the Californian, Mrs. Lovell Swisher. Beverly Hills Nursery had a fine showing of Easter lilies and pale rose-colored rhododendrons in a garden setting that was very effective; cinerarias and azaleas were also included in their display. Briggs Floral Company of Encinitas showed beautiful gladioli, and Clinton Pedley, also of Encinitas, displayed beautiful specimens of that colorful "glad," W. H. Phipps. The iris display was Stillman Berry's, of Redlands, who showed a great variety of his rarely beautiful irises—it seems to have been an exceptionally fine year for the iris. Dr. D. A. Houghton, of San Fernando, took a first prize with his cactus and succulent garden, which was full of interest and variety, but Mrs. Diedrich went a very close second. Her display was not so large nor so varied, but it was delightfully displayed. Another woman exhibitor among the professionals whose exhibit was most interesting was Mrs. C. A. Adamson. Entirely of potted plants was this exhibit, but such calceolarias, such gloxinias—varieties, too, which one rarely sees. "I haven't seen such gloxinias since I was a child in England," said little Mrs. Lester Rowntree, whose wild-flower stand was near the Adamson display; "a Scotch gardener, too, it must be."

The amateur exhibits came from the palatial gardens of Beverly Hills and Santa Monica, and were rich in color; shrub branches were shown in profusion—irises, stocks, pentstemons; there were several admirable school exhibits; especially good was that of the Harding School—splendid woodwardias and tree ferns were shown.

Riverside's Flower Show

Mrs. Belle Ewing sends this account of Riverside's first community flower show given under the auspices of the garden department of the Women's Club and held on April 17 and 18.

"The show was a complete success," writes Mrs. Ewing. "Mrs. Charles G. Rouse was the chairman. No admittance fee was charged—no prizes were given. This was strictly an amateur show, and the club rooms were literally filled with glorious flowers.

"There were beautiful roses, sweet peas in coral and lavender, large pansies, old-fashioned lilacs, the bridal wreath; there were tulips, many varieties of iris, also wild flowers, ferns, cacti, and many new and unusual plants. Lovebirds were present in pretty cages; there were goldfish in a water garden; photographs of desert scenes and flowers, by Edward Avery Fields of Riverside, and flowers everywhere.

"Three schools had exhibits—the Bryant, Lowell and Irvine. Of these, that of the last named was by far the most interesting. This school, attended by Mexican, Chinese, Japanese and Negro children, showed an herb garden. The youngsters had written the labels on the plants that they had grown, as well as the recipes for their use. Thus one learns that the blossoms of the snake cactus, boiled, are good for the heart; Yerba buena, for the stomach; dasimna soothes earache; the verano, headache. A recipe for cooking common cactus was given as follows: Remove spines, cut into small pieces, boil, drain, then fry in lard with onions, tomatoes and cilanto, the latter a feathery herb used for seasoning.

"A redwood burl, an avocado growing from the seed, a Jerusalem chagolla, and a beautiful flowering Spanish cactus, called "Hand-of-the-King," were also among the exhibits on this table.

"A very charming exhibit was the bridal set. The tiny bride and groom stood under a canopy of broom; a tall white lupine was the candle, sweet alyssum and orange blossoms banked the aisle. The native ferns grown by Mrs. W. R. Baty were also of interest. A very pretty table was the one sponsored by the Riverside Lions Club. Walter F. Sheetz contributed rockery plants and camellias, and Raymond Best showed wonderful tulips. Other members sent calla lilies, petunias in many varieties, variegated iris, and a lovely showing of pansies. Another interesting exhibit was the one put on by the city of Riverside propagating plant.

"There were tables of ranunculi, roses, delphiniums, columbines, sweet peas, pansies, snapdragons, and California poppies, as well as many tables of mixed flowers. Irises and tulips seemed to be the most popular flowers with Riverside gardeners."

He Raises Turkeys on Ranch in Southland Mountains

Mr. Hartford no longer dries his apricots, so he utilizes the trays to house and fence his turkeys. These high barriers keep the turkeys in and marauders out.

Mr. Hartford says he has eliminated disease by introducing wild turkey blood into his flock. Here is a pen of his birds.

Below—A screen porch has recently been added to the rambling farm home. It still lacked the finishing touches, the screen and paint, when it was photographed.

Many early pioneers of California chose the hills. They liked the beetling crags, the trees and streams. Mr. Hartford's place includes eighty acres on the floor of the canyon, and this is the grand view at the front gate.

A. J. Hartford has a turkey and apricot farm in Elizabeth Canyon a few miles back from Castaic. Of course he needs dogs, and he is here shown with a future "varmint" hunter. At that, Mr. Hartford declares, the most dangerous "varmints" a Southland poultryman has to deal with are the two-legged kind.

A corner of the farmstead, with a bit of what will be an alfalfa field.

Wild Mexican turkeys seem to have a greater resistance to blackhead, major turkey trouble, than many more domestic strains, says Mr. Hartford. This bird came from a reserve in Arizona.

Poultry Pays Good Profits — at Fontana

This statement has again received authoritative support in the report of 1928 poultry records of representative flocks compiled by the ranchers themselves under the supervision of the University of California Extension Service, and the San Bernardino County Farm Bureau. You will do well to give serious consideration to these proven successes, and to your possibilities of joining others in this enjoyable country life with an income—yes, a three-way income in this delightful and soundly established community, Fontana.

Here are the Figures

—An abstract from the official report showing twenty Fontana ranches with a total of 17,704 hens gives a total flock income of $27,735, or $1.55 per hen for the year 1928. The Grower Thinks He's Gypped Enough

Credit Association to Examine Ratings of Commission Men and Buyers Believed Only Way of Weeding Out "Fly-by-Night" Operators Who Leave the Producer Holding the Sack

By Chandos B. Castle

HONEST buyers or commission men are naturally most popular with the producer when he has a crop to dispose of. Through his own experience or that of his neighbors, he can generally find such an outlet for his goods during times of fair prices. He may get little or much, but he has some assurance that he is being fairly treated.

But when a crop market gets shaky, either through lack of demand or overproduction, the producer finds himself in a dilemma. The established houses, finding his particular crop a straight-out gamble, decline to handle it, and the producer is left to thread his way through the marketing maze alone. And here is where the "fly-by-night" buyer steps into the picture. Johnny on the spot, check book in hand, he is ready in the grower's hour of need, and he usually finds "good pickings."

Take the case of a certain Southern California grower of cauliflower. He shall be called John Doe. Mr. Doe had had a lot of experience in marketing. He had come to depend upon the better type of buyer, for his luck has been remarkably bad with the other kind. He remembered not so long ago when one man mulcted him of his entire crop.

This season his cauliflower, coming along toward maturity in good shape, found a very slow market. His honest company marked it off the list, and he was left to find his own buyer. The outlook was far from pleasing, and Mr. Doe went into conference with himself and emerged with a new idea.

Instead of trusting one buyer whom he did not know, he would divide up his crop and sell to several. One might turn out badly, but he would even up, or average up, he figured, with what he would get from the others. So reasoned Mr. Doe, and it was not bad reasoning at that.

THE CHECKS CAME BACK

He sold a part of the crop to Mr. A., who gave him a check in payment. The check was duly turned in for payment, and came back with the notation that it was post-dated, and would not be payable for some time. Later, when the smoke had cleared away, Mr. Doe discovered that it never would be paid.

Meanwhile he had sold another portion of the crop to B. & Company. They "stood him off" for a few days. Finally he got restless, and called in farm bureau help. The farm bureau official informed him that B & Company were mighty "close to the rocks," but went with him to see Mr. B. That worthy very truthfully declared that he had no money at the time, but expected some in a few days. "Very well," said the farm bureau official, "let us have a post-dated check for the amount." Mr. B. obliged, but when the check was presented "a few days later," it came back, marked "not sufficient funds." It is still worthless.

Ah C, a Chinese, was the third buyer. Now Chinese are notably honest, but Mr. Doe is not lucky. "For ways that are dark, and tricks that are vain," the reader is respectfully referred to Ah C, who gave Mr. Doe a check on a bank where he had no account, and had never had an account.

Mr. D. accepted delivery of some of Mr. Doe's crop, and left the country without the formality of paying for it. Mr. E. paid "cash on the nail," and Mr. Doe deposited the cash in his local bank. He is doubtless worrying now for fear the Federal authorities will apprehend him for circulating counterfeit currency, but so far his money has stayed in the bank, and it was apparently perfectly good coin of the realm.

Summing up, Mr. Doe got one-fifth of the very modest price he asked for his cauliflower.

This case is exceptional only in its elaborateness. The same sad story of bad checks, forgeries, disappearing buyers, and financial disaster follows every crop which develops a market weakness. Grape growers in the interior of the State have felt the fly-by-night's heavy hand many a time. Growers of all kinds of field crops, at one time or another, have suffered.

Even growers of good-paying crops are not exempt. One slick individual, whose name might be Henry Ausstinn, but isn't, "bought" hay in a Los Angeles county district. He gathered up several carloads there, with trucks, and added these carloads to several more he had procured elsewhere. The growers are still "whistling" for their money, and whistling in vain.

"Must be a lot of mighty easy marks," is the by-stander's probable comment. But in this case Mr. Ausstinn even neglected to pay the truck man for hauling the hay. If the reader wishes to find out just how slick Mr. Ausstinn was, let him try to mulct a truck operator of his well-earned hire.

Some fly-by-nights are not such close relatives of Jesse James as was Mr. Ausstinn. Some of them doubtless really mean to give the grower a "run for his money," instead of a "run-out."

HE'S A GAMBLER

Consider Richard Roe, which is an alias. Mr. Roe is a "business man." He doesn't like work. He likes to chin with the boys, and have plenty of energy left for a game or two of pool in the evening.

He feels that he is doing the grower a genuine service. The grower, poor fellow, has produced something to sell, and he is willing to buy it. Mr. Roe is a first cousin of those shady followers of the race tracks, who figure to gamble the other fellow's money for him, and take a "divvy."

He handles some winter truck crop and finds the gamble has failed. Pretty soon the growers are hunting him up for their money. They can't find him at first, but later they discover that he has moved over into the Imperial Valley, and is busily engaged in "business" concerned with the cantaloupe deal.

"Where is our money?" chorus the coast growers.

"Why, you know the market was a wash-out," parries Mr. Roe.

"Well, what are you going to do about it?" they demand. "You took the stuff, and we want our money."

"Give me a little time," says Mr. Roe.

"What for? So you can 'gyp' a lot more people?" the growers reply. "If you don't come through, we'll make it so hot for you that you'll have to get out."

"Now, boys, is that treating me nice? Here I am over here trying to recoup on cantaloupes, and you come along and tell me that I mustn't try to get any money for you. If you run me out, how in the world will you ever get your money?"

So what do the growers do? What would you do? Let Mr. Roe go on with his little game, on a chance of getting something out of the wreck, or run him out for the good of the community?

There's still another angle to the "game" as played by the birds of prey. Honest buyers have to watch the market pretty closely, else they might be caught between two millstones, the buying price and the selling price. The money they offer the grower usually strikes a nice balance, designed to give them a fair profit on the deal. But a man who pays with worthless checks is not worrying about millstones. One figure is as easy and cheap to write as another, and if he offers more than the honest buyer, he very frequently can influence the agriculturist to part with his property. There is no sure remedy for this situation except a keen knowledge of markets on the part of the producer, who might very well beware of a fancy price, not justified by the market conditions.

A lot has been said among growers about the matter of credit, and some sporadic attempts to cope with the situation are on record. On occasions, fly-by-nights who were out and out crooks have been apprehended and dealt with according to law. This is of course quite possible when a bad check figures in the case. It is not possible when the crooked buyer is shrewd enough to stay within the law. A civil case against a man who has nothing, sometimes not even an office desk, is usually just a waste of money.

CREDIT BODY PLANNED

The problem is to lock the door before the horse is stolen. With this in mind, the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau directors have investigated a proposal to form a credit association, which would examine the rating of buying firms, and supply information concerning them to inquiring growers.

The directors have even gone so far as to take the matter up with the State Farm Bureau Federation's authorities for advice as to the legal aspects.

Out of this step may come an office which would stand as a buffer between the farmer and the buying world, protecting him from fraud on the one hand, and giving "clean bills of health" to worthy buyers who are ready and willing to meet their obligations. That, at least, is the aim of the Farm Bureau.

Earl Maharg, secretary of the Los Angeles county unit of the bureau, is bending a lot of effort to make a reality of the credit association proposal. He says:

"The association would do away with the losses, and with a lot of futile chasing after men who have skipped the country. It would serve to prevent fraud, and in this case, prevention is far better than cure, for there is no cure for a flattened pocket book, once it is flattened. Locking up a criminal will only increase the farmer's taxes, for the criminal must be fed and housed and clothed. Trying to squeeze restitution from a fly-by-night is like trying to get blood from a turnip.

"Crooked buyers can be stopped only when they know that the farmer is going to demand credentials."

SLIPSHOD METHODS

Mr. Maharg points to one example of the laxity with which producers have been selling their stock in trade. A bank manager at Lancaster, in the Antelope Valley, after a careful survey, is authority for the statement that more than 75 per cent of the hay grown in that district has been sold without written memorandum. A good part of these sales were between honest growers and honest buyers, men whose "word is as good as their bond." But it was exactly the situation which allowed "Henry Ausstinn," mentioned above, to defraud the growers and line his own dishonest purse.

The Farm Bureau's recently promulgated standard form of hay sales contract another frontal assault upon the crooked buyer, not only will put in cold black and white the vital terms of the sale, but in addition contains a clause designed to establish the buyer's credit. Space is left for three references to be given by the buyer. Immediately below this space is the final paragraph of the contract, as follows:

"It is understood that the above financial references have been submitted by the buyer for the financial protection of the seller. Furthermore, the seller shall have a period of five days from the signing of this contract in which to satisfy himself as to the financial responsibility of the buyer. Should the seller not be satisfied with the financial rating of the buyer, he shall on or before five days from the above specified date so notify said buyer in writing and at the same time return all moneys received, and in such case it is herewith agreed by buyer and seller that this contract is void and of no value."

A meeting of desert ranchers. At such gatherings there's an exchange of experiences, some a bit sad, but all part of the community life. The "going" is hard at best in some of the arid districts.

Before You Buy Any Desert Be Sure It Is Fit for Farming

By F. H. Ernst

Assistant Farm Adviser, Los Angeles County

FAVORABLE prices for alfalfa hay have created an interest in alfalfa production, which in turn has resulted in increased interest in the development of desert lands all through the Southwest. That the desert should appeal to the prospective alfalfa grower is but natural, since large areas of it are within trucking distance of Los Angeles, the land there costs less than that near the metropolitan centers. An arid atmosphere, dry winds, and lack of rainfall in the desert are directly responsible for the production of a high quality hay, of good color.

The picture which the settler has in his mind is low-priced land, a good-paying crop, a healthful climate, and independence. It's not a bad picture by way means, but there's another side—the reverse—which must be scrutinized carefully.

To the man who contemplates taking up the desert way of living, there may be a future of failure and disillusionment. He may avoid these by a very simple precaution—by investigating carefully, by refusing to be stampeded by those who have land to sell, and by making use of every available source of agricultural information.

TRIO OF REQUIREMENTS

The choice of land should depend primarily upon three factors, physical character of the soil, chemical character of the soil, and source of water supply. These are the most important things. There are others, such as the market for the produce grown, the distance to markets, the proximity of churches and schools, the amount of capital available, taxation, general social conditions, and so on. But the soil-water-alkali trinity should be disposed of first by the most careful investigation.

Obviously, soil conditions must be such that crops will grow after they have been properly planted and cared for. The mere fact that the surface soil is excellent is no proof that the quality of the subsoils is good. Old river washes are sometimes covered with fine material to the depth of one foot, with only gravel beneath. Such soil is of little value to the grower. The ideal condition would be a sandy or silt loam to a depth of at least six feet. A soil map, where available, is an excellent help. A soil auger is the best guide to use in the field, as it reveals subsoil conditions. The uninitiated would do well to get disinterested help. The United States Department of Agriculture and the University of California give this help for the asking.

As to the chemical condition of the soil, one must be sure of drainage and freedom from alkali salts, both as to soil and as to the water which is applied to the soil. Either may be too alkaline to permit of economic growth of crops. Generally speaking, areas in which artesian wells occur are likely to be alkaline since they are situated in the lower basin of a valley where the drainage is usually poor. A water table may frequently be found in such areas within three to five feet of the surface. The soil generally contains black as well as white salts, and it is as yet impossible to reclaim these soils at a cost that justifies their purchase for agricultural purposes. Alkali reclamation is really the business of the established farmer rather than that of the beginner, who usually is handicapped by limited capital.

MUST HAVE WATER

Availability of water is the third vital need. Excessive "lifts" which must be accomplished by pumping, particularly in

Studies Dreaded Fly

Riverside.—Prof. H. J. Quayle, head of the division of entomology, Riverside Citrus Experiment Station, has been sent to Florida by the University of California to study the Mediterranean fruit fly situation there. Several years ago Prof. Quayle visited the Mediterranean region and made a study for the Federal government of this dreaded fruit pest. A. E. Bottel, Riverside county horticultural commissioner, has also gone to Florida to aid in the work of fighting the pest, by request of fruit growers of this region.

Redlands Cleans Up on Naval Shipments

REDLANDS.—Redlands has just about cleaned up on navel orange shipments for the season. The shipments total more than 4000 cars of citrus fruit, practically all of navels, although there are some cars of grapefruit and some of lemons.

The navel crop, while a fairly large one this year, has not brought the money to the grower that it brought last year. The grower will get about 2 cents per pound for his fruit whereas he was paid on an average 4 cents per pound last season. This makes considerable difference even though the crop has been heavy.

Last year the orange crop brought the growers of the Redlands district well over $7,000,000 and brought the entire district close to $10,000,000, with picking and packing costs added, but this year, it is believed, the growers will be fortunate to get $5,000,000 for it.

Shipping of Valencias will not be heavy for several weeks to come.

ing in spite of the late frosts. Although much of the crop was killed, what was left will make up for this loss in size and quality, ranchers believe. There were many windfalls in apricot and plum orchards during a recent high wind that swept through the valley, but only the inferior fruit was destroyed. On account of a rather severe winter and a late spring outlook for a fair yield of deciduous fruit in both family orchards and commercial groves is fairly good.

Big Nut Crop Coming

Fullerton.—The Fullerton-Placentia Walnut Growers' Association recently distributed their first payment on 1928 culls, amounting to $10,500. The prospects for the coming crop are very good, according to the Orange county farm adviser who has recently made a number of grove inspections, and indications point to a much larger crop than last year. The fruits are setting in twos and threes. Arthur Staley, manager of the Fullerton-Placentia house, is recommending to his growers to spray for aphis and worms this year, as last year's heavy cullage was due to the lack of pest control measures in many groves. Groves that were sprayed last year were much cleaner and had less culls, according to Mr. Staley.

Look After Windbreaks

Tustin.—Sixteen miles of windbreaks make up the effective system of wind protection of the San Joaquin Fruit Company's ranch, according to C. V. Newman, its manager. These plantings make one of the most complete systems in Southern California. They constitute an integral part of the extensive citrus and avocado plantings and are given special care throughout the season to secure maximum protection. Periodical root cutting is practiced. A tractor and a heavy root cutter, capable of cutting to a depth of fifty inches, is employed. Regular irrigation and fertilizer applications are supplied so that the roots will not depend upon the orchard fertility and water entirely. Eucalyptus and cypress are the principal varieties used.

Sells Big Apiary

Upland.—William Atchley, who built up in this community one of the large honey-producing plants in Southern California, has sold his bees to U. S. Standlea, who moved to Upland recently from Texas, and will hereafter devote his time to his duties as San Bernardino county bee inspector. In addition to this work Mr. Atchley will become managing buyer and seller for the San Bernardino County Beekeepers' Club, to which post he was recently appointed. This work will consist of providing members with supplies, and he will also buy and sell honey for the producers. Mr. Atchley will bond his local warehouse in which he will store and grade honey for county producers. Warehouse certificates will be available, so that producers may borrow on the certificates. His final shipment of honey to eastern markets from his own place was a twenty-ton carload.

Want Meat Inspection

Ontario.—State and Federal inspection of all meat sold in Ontario and Upland is sought by meat dealers in those communities, following a recent meeting here. Dr. B. W. Wells, health officer of Riverside city and county, suggested as a model Riverside's ordinance which would make unlawful the sale of meats unless they had first been passed by State or Federal inspectors. The ordinance would, however, make exceptions in cases of persons who kill their own animals for meat consumption. Dr. C. L. Emmons, health officer of Ontario, and a member of City Council, declared strict inspection of meats is important. It was decided at the meeting that the matter should be brought to the attention of the city councils of Upland and Ontario at an early date.

Citrus Crop Shipments

Riverside.—Local shipments of citrus frutis for the season up to April 20 totaled 4172 carloads. Of this number, 4095 were oranges and the rest lemons. To the same date last season, there had been 2558 carloads of oranges and seventy-three of lemons shipped. In 1926-27 the shipments had reached 4407 carloads of oranges and 151 of lemons up to the same date.

Truck Crops Roll

San Fernando.—A check made by the Southern Pacific agent here shows that an average of eight refrigerator cars of vegetables, principally lettuce and cabbage, are leaving this point daily, and the shipment will continue until these crops have been harvested.

After Puncture Vine

Roscoe.—The battle against puncture vine was begun the first of this month in San Fernando Valley. Crews from the county horticultural department are spraying the young plants with light fuel oil as this has been found to be the most effective and economical of all means yet tried for the eradication of this pestiferous weed.

Buys Warehouse

Smeltzer.—The Smeltzer Lima Bean Growers' Association recently contracted to purchase the Golden West warehouse here for $12,000. The warehouse, owned by H. P. Dunning, Tustin, and H. F. Haseltine, Los Angeles, has been used by the association for several years and is equipped with machinery for cleaning and sacking beans.

Big Persimmon Crop

Fullerton.—A. J. McFadden, Santa Ana, was re-elected president of the Orange County Persimmon Growers' Association at the annual meeting of the growers held here recently. J. M. Alcorn, Fullerton, was elected vice-president; H. F. Taylor, Atwood, secretary-treasurer; and H. W. Walker, El Modena, assistant secretary. The selection of a manager to handle the 1929 crop will be made at a later date. Crop prospects for 1929 are very good, according to reports offered by the growers. The crop will be as large as the 1928 crop, which was the largest in the history of the persimmon industry. Plans are already being made to increase foreign shipments as an outlet for local production, according to Mr. McFadden.

Off for Europe

Lindsay.—B. G. Rooke, citrus packer of this district, shipped thirty-eight cars of Valencias for export to Europe early in May. He expects to export about 100 cars during the season.

Farm Women Meet

Visalia.—During February and March, 783 farm women of Tulare county participated in twenty-seven meetings held by the farm home department of the Farm Bureau according to Miss Clara Cowgill, home demonstration agent for Tulare county. The work during April was handled by project leaders who have been trained for the various projects, Miss Cowgill devoting April to home visits.

Berries by the Ton

Heber.—Tons of strawberries in one shipment! It sounds big, but Heber not long ago expressed two tons of "straws" as well as five tons of squash at one time.

Packing Plant Burns

Yucaipa.—On the evening of April 26, the Yucaipa Apple Association Packing House on Colorado street was burned to the ground, all machinery and all equipment and supplies for the coming fruit season being lost. The building was 150x190 feet, with basement, and was valued at $20,000. The Yucaipa Valley Fruit Company has just added a unit for the making of vinegar to its present plant.

Southland Garden

of the nematode, and as a result the vegetables were matured before they were badly infested. I use about three-fourths of a teacup of ammonium sulphate to every ten feet of double row, working the "dynamite" in well between rows. One application is sufficient for the average summer crop.

AN EMBARRASSING QUESTION

In answer to the lady who recently wrote us asking why we did not produce good Brussels sprouts in the Southland, we respectfully give the following information, but suggest that she does not ask such embarrassing questions in the future. We have repeatedly stated in these columns that everything in the vegetable line grows well in the Southland, and while we like to answer inquiries, it is bad business to knowingly contradict oneself.

Brussels sprouts do best in a cool, equable climate. The central Coast of California grows a fair quality, but so far we have not had much success in the Los Angeles area, largely because of the relatively high spring temepratures. The crop requires a long, cool growing season.

Then, aphis is particularly fond of Brussels sprouts. Aphis is a pest that does not have a race suicide problem—they multiply so rapidly that no calculating machine could follow the increase. Control of this pest on Brussels sprouts is difficult, for one must use nicotine sulphate sprays continuously, and they do not add materially to the eating quality of the sprouts. Also, because of the character of the vegetable, it is not always easy to prepare after the pests have been eradicated. In other words, they are rather messy with the shambles.

Farm and Orchard Magazine
Devoted to the ambitious agricultural interests of the great Southwest and issued every week with the world's biggest Sunday newspaper.

EDITED BY HAROLD M. FINLEY

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, poultrymen, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of food production are gladly received.

Good clear photographs of interesting farm and garden activities are always welcomed. The Los Angeles Times Farm and Orchard Magazine is the only farm journal in the West printing illustrations in the incomparable rotogravure process.

Garden Reading

"THE Lure of the Garden" was intensified this spring through the work of the Los Angeles County Free Library and its chief, Helen E. Vogleson.

Five hundred volumes relating to the subject of home gardening were made available at the numerous branch libraries, colored posters gay with flowers called attention to them, and special folders listed them.

The "golden text," quoted from L. H. Bailey, was: "A poor garden of one's own is better than a good garden in which one may not dig."

It is quite likely, however, that those beginners who chose books from the library list, will be digging in "bigger and better" gardens before many moons have passed. The subjects under which volumes were listed show the scope of the reading program laid down by the library: "The Garden in California," "Guides and Manuals," "Landscape Gardening," "Trees, Shrubs, and Hedges," "Color Effects," "Special Gardens," "Special Flowers," and "Bulbs."

This work of popularization reflects credit upon library and librarian. The organization annually distributes books numbering into seven figures, and traveling to the far and rugged corners of this huge county. Having accomplished the task, the officials might be excused if they exclaimed to the public: "Here are the books; come and get them."

But they believe that their task is not accomplished unless, having "put the books in stock," they also "sell" them, that is, render them popular and hence useful. And no better subject to be "sold" to Southlanders occurs to us that "The Lure of the Garden."

Carrots in Demand

A total of 3632 straight carloads of carrots was California's contribution to the carlot commerce in this vegetable in 1928. The rapid growth in the size of the carrot deal has been attributed largely to two things: First, the carrot is being more liberally used in the diet of children, due to its wholesomeness and, second, because it is said to have a good effect upon the complexion, the ladies are eating it liberally. California is by far the largest factor in the carrot supply of the nation.

The Cover Page

The picture used as a cover this issue was taken in the municipal plaza at Brawley in Imperial Valley, where the city fathers have decided to combine utility and beauty and have date palms for their ornamentals.

Farm News of the Great Southwest

CALEXICO.—Extra express cars have been added to the regular evening train to accommodate outgoing perishable shipments from Imperial Valley. Calexico, El Centro and Brawley all have their own cars which go out each evening. Shippers are asking for a return of the special train which last season left at 5 o'clock and reached Los Angeles shortly after midnight.

Rushed the Season

Coachella.—Onion growers of Coachella Valley are looking with alarm at the great acreage of Texas onions this year. In order to forestall a heavy influx of these earlier onions on the local markets cutting of earliest local fields was started ahead of the normal season. These onions were pulled by hand and were selected only from the fields that showed up well ahead of the others. T. J. Gridley shipped 2500 crates of these hand-picked onions during the last week in April.

Early onions from field of T. J. Gridley in Coachella Valley. They were shipped the last week in April.

Heads Almond Growers

Banning.—C. D. Hamilton of this place again heads the Almond Growers' Association both in Banning and in the State, having recently been re-elected president of both groups. More than $1,000,000 in assets over liabilities were shown in reports at the San Francisco meeting. Probable high prices are expected for the existing unsold portion of the 1928 crop because of damage to the new State crop by frost. T. C. Tucker, secretary of the State body, reported after the April frosts that in the almond districts of California about 25 per cent of a normal crop will be harvested. Banning will be much above this average, some of the local crops having been badly damaged, but many of the groves having been saved by smudging.

Rabbits a Pest

Westmorland.—Two drives have been conducted west of Westmorland against rabbits which have been especially numerous this year in Imperial Valley. On ranches bordering the desert they have become a pest. Under the supervision of the Horticultural Commissioner, drives have been made with good success.

Testing by Mail

Reno (Nev.)—Cow-testing by mail will shortly be inaugurated in six Nevada counties, Prof. V. E. Scott, State agricultural extension poultry and dairy specialist, has announced. A sample of milk from each cow to be tested will be mailed to a central point, where analysis will be made and records computed. From four counties—Clark. Lincoln, Lyon and Washoe—the samples will be sent to the college of agriculture at the University of Nevada, where they will be tested by students in dairying. Elko county dairymen will have their testing done at the creamery in Elko, and in Churchill analysis will be made at the State cream testing laboratory.

Good Set Promised

Yucaipa.—The week of April 21-27 saw Yucaipa apple trees beautiful with blossoms, Winesap, Delicious, Bananas and King David all showing a strong full bloom. Rome Beauties come a little later. The bloom has been free from evidence of frost injury and gives promise of a heavy set of fruit. The calyx spray, the first of the season, is in order as soon as the blossoms fall.

To Test Peanuts

Hanford.—Farm Adviser Wallace Sullivan has secured a quantity of peanuts, of the Jumbo, Virginia Bunch and Improved Spanish varieties from the south and will test them under King's county conditions. Some years ago Oliver Jenkinson, a local farmer, grew peanuts, on a limited scale, with satisfactory results as to quality, but they have not as yet been grown as a commercial crop in the county.

"Better Homes" Tour

Riverside.—Over 200 women participated in the Better Homes tour conducted recently by the home department of the Riverside County Farm Bureau in Moreno and Perris valleys. Miss Jessie-Lee Decker, home furnishings specialist for the agricultural extension service, and Miss Cornelia Walker, Riverside county home demonstration agent, led the tour. At noon a luncheon was served in the [illegible] school by the home departments, members of the Moreno-Armada department acting as hostesses. A demonstration of a combination nursery and bedroom for children was shown on the stage of the school auditorium. Homes being built or remodeled and decorated according to suggestions made by the extension service workers, were visited.

New Gin Installed

Corcoran.—The Ellett Cotton Gin Company of this place is installing machinery for a new five-stand, eighty-saw gin with a capacity of 100 bales a day to meet the situation caused by the increased acreage of cotton in this section this season.

Busy With Grapefruit

Redlands.—Redlands packing-houses are busy with grapefruit now. The district has no extensive planting of grapefruit, but there are orchards scattered here and there and this year the growers have a good crop. The price promises to be about 2 cents per pound and the growers consider that a fairly good return for their fruit.

Spinach Deal Complete

Porterville.—Canning spinach at the local plant of the Fred B. Neuhoff Cannery Company was practically completed early in May, after a very successful season. The quality of the pack this year was good. Apricots will be the next crop canned. About a 60 per cent crop is expected in the Porterville district, according to L. W. Waters, local manager. Prices are expected to be high. All deciduous fruits in this district appear in very good condition as compared with many other sections of the State which were hit hard by frost, and growers are optimistic regarding probable prices.

A Trap That Never Fails for Wireworms

WIREWORMS are a serious menace to your crops—but they can be quickly destroyed by the Cyanogas method.

It is only necessary to plant a bait crop, using corn, peas or beans in a few rows. Soon all the wireworms congregate in the small area. Then fumigate with Cyanogas, approximately six pounds per 1,000 lineal feet, and a complete control is secured.

Cyanogas is also effective in treating wireworm-infested gardens where plants and flowers are to be grown. Write for wireworm booklet.

Uses Wild Turkeys As Disease Buffer

NEWHALL.—A. J. Hartford, whose ranch is up Elizabeth Canyon, back of Castaic, is another "farm boy" who, after years of business pursuits, went back to the land in search of health and serenity. Mr. Hartford knew poultry from his boyhood days, and settled on turkeys as his main "crop." The eighty-acre place in the canyon had an apricot orchard, and plow land suitable for alfalfa.

Mr. Hartford started out well with his turkeys, but encountered trouble from disease. An acquaintance told him of the reputed immunity, manifested by the Mexican wild bronze turkey, and he reports that following his introduction of wild blood into the flock, the problem has faded away.

Water is secured for irrigation from a well of moderate depth, by means of a gasoline engine and turbine pump. Apricot drying trays, no longer used, since the crop is sold fresh, were utilized to make houses and fences for the turkeys.

The Hartford house has recently been improved by the addition of a screen porch. Mrs. Hartford has been busy this spring putting in a home garden. The ranch is situated in an attractive spot, the sort upon which many an early-day pioneer settled, a home in the hills lacking in some degree the monotonous loneliness of a plains dwelling.

Moreno Valley Folk Confirmed Ranchers

RIVERSIDE.—Two ranchers in the Moreno Valley who are making a success at ranching are William Rouse and G. W. Blackburn. Mr. Rouse has twenty acres of land. He has at present only 300 White Leghorn hens, but is developing a flock which eventually will number 1000.

Mr. Rouse uses sand exclusively in all of his pens, having found straw to be very unsatisfactory, especially in the scratching pens. For when the straw becomes broken up the hens eat the "knuckles," he says, thinking them grain. These will not digest and in the end, he says, may cause the death of the fowl. "I use sand and renew it every three months," he declares. "I also cover the floor of the brooder with sand one inch thick. This is changed every four days." Mr. Rouse finds it very convenient to purchase day-old chicks instead of hatching them himself. The brooder is heated by a kerosene brooder stove.

The major part of his twenty acres is devoted to oat hay. One acre is in family orchard. The surplus fruit is sold locally. Mr. Rouse finds his early peaches, the Alexandria and the Early Mayflower, the most profitable. This fruit ripens the last of May and the first of June.

"If anyone would plant an orchard of these peaches he would make money," he says. "They are the earliest on the market and always bring a good price. They are fine table peaches, both of them."

A vegetable garden is also "on the program," and kale is grown for the hens and lettuce for the baby chicks. Mr. Rouse says that the babies thrive better on lettuce than any other "green." A small field of alfalfa furnishes green feed for the two horses used to work the ranch and for the cow. Some of this, cut very fine, is given the hens. Sprouted barley is fed to the hens in the morning, and wheat in the evening.

Mr. Rouse has been in the Moreno Valley for fifteen years, having come to California from Michigan. He was born and reared in the country, but left the farm to learn the machinist's trade. Finding the latter work not to his liking he turned again to farming.

A view of the neat chicken runs on William Rouse's ranch in Moreno Valley.

Mr. Blackburn has thirty acres and rents thirty more. He does all of the work himself on the sixty acres. Most of the land is devoted to grain. Last year he harvested 360 sacks of barley from twenty acres, he says. From 600 to 700 hens are kept, White Leghorns and "Reds."

Mrs. Blackburn expects to raise 100 turkeys this year. She feeds the poults rolled oats, and hard-boiled eggs mixed with kale and onion tops. Alfalfa meal—made from the leaves and blossoms— is given the poultry, and is found to be a good "regulator."

A family orchard supplies the family with fresh fruit and a garden with vegetables. Green feed is produced for the poultry as well.

Boy Earns While He Learns Egg Business

SANTA MARIA.—How one boy earned money while acquiring a knowledge of the theory and practice of poultry husbandry is exemplified in the work of Albert Souza, 18-year-old Santa Monica Union High School student.

Young Mr. Souza "grossed" more than $250 from his project in chicken raising, conducted under the supervision of J. M. Boothe, head of the department of agriculture at the school.

"After I decided on chicken raising as my project, I made plans for housing," the boy said. "I looked over a number of chicken houses and decided on the university type. I constructed the building of rough lumber, and floored it with wood instead of concrete. Working after school and week-ends, I had the house ready before Easter vacation and then purchased an electric brooder."

Two hundred White Leghorns were purchased locally for $24. Of this number, 185 were raised to four months of age, when the cockerels were sold for $50. The eighty-seven pullets left were culled to sixty-eight at 5 months of age, the cull pullets bringing $21.

The labor expended on the project averaged forty minutes a day, including the time for building the poultry house. The pullets averaged about 60 per cent production of eggs, which brought about 25 cents a dozen. Total receipts were $161. The value of the flock at present is estimated at $90, making the total returns from the project $251.

Expenses included the house, $49; chicks, $24; feed, $88; and equipment, $53.50, making a total of $214.50.

The difference between the receipts and expenses as listed above is only $36.50, but besides this clear profit, young Mr. Sousa has the house and all his equipment with which to make further profits.

Interest in Asparagus

Attention has recently been called to the valuable mineral and iodine content of asparagus and this information will doubtless be a factor in encouraging consumption of this product. Producing, as it does, more canning and shipping asparagus than any other State, California is very much interested in the attention which is being given to this subject. A special report on the marketing of California asparagus, issued by the State and Federal Departments of Agriculture, shows that approximately 60,000 acres are devoted to this crop in California. The acreage has not shown much change in recent seasons, but production, on the other hand, has been showing a material increase. Last season Los Angeles ranked second only to New York in the quantity of fresh asparagus consumed, San Francisco being third, and Chicago fourth.

A Productive Home Is Good Investment

EAGLE ROCK.—Eight years ago, when J. C. Ramsey brought his wife and two small boys to their newly acquired homesite at 1546 Yosemite street, the two-acre tract which he had bought showed no signs of plant life whatever, except for a small clump of young sycamore trees. When they looked closer they discovered that the ground was riddled with gopher holes. A little later on, when the rains came, a harmless looking "wash" at the rear of their land became a raging torrent that tore the adjacent soil away with it.

It wasn't an outlook favorable for any Omar Khayyam—no time to loaf under any bough and no bough to speak of. The family and all its worldly possessions were under two tents, and Mr. Ramsey had to hold down an outside job, so he had nothing but evenings for house building and reclamation work. Nevertheless, the gophers were trapped, trees and flowers were set out, a garden was made and before the rains came again, a sturdy cement wall held the "winter river" in its appointed channel.

So well was all this done that in another year another acre was added to the patrimony. Now there was room for Mr. Kelsey's equipment as a contractor, a woodyard, piles of sand and rock and bunk houses for his men, without tresspasing on the chicken yard, the garden, orchard and home grounds.

At present he has yards for chickens, ducks and geese, housing for rabbits and pigeons, an assortment of fruit trees, a vineyard and about an acre of everbearing strawberries. A vegetable garden furnishes the table with fresh greens and root crops and provides exercise for the boys. A productive home, Mr. Kelsey says, is the best sort of investment.

Pigeons and Kadota Figs Keep Him Busy

CHATSWORTH.—Sixty pairs of Silver King pigeons, two and a half acres of Kadota figs, and a job make H. J. Jackman of this place a busy man. Enthusiasm over his birds is evident in his description of methods and results.

Mr. Jackman, with several other pigeon fanciers in this neighborhood, is working hard for results. The records he keeps of performance are complete and comprehensive. By his method he is able to keep track of what each pair does. His system is to give mated birds a fair chance, but if, in three months' time, they fail to produce, they are "divorced" and remated.

Mr. Jackman went into the pigeon business with forty birds and a determination to see what business methods would do for the job. His young pigeons are all banded, so that he is able to keep track of what they do.

While Mr. Jackman is in the commercial squab-raising business, he has shown birds at Pomona and Riverside fairs with pleasing results.

The fig orchard takes a share of Mr. Jackman's time, its product, like that of most of the neighboring orchards, being turned into preserves and confections.

Grape Mildew Discussed

Agricultural Extension Service Circular 31, "Powdery Mildew of the Grape and its Control in California," recently issued from the press at Berkeley, is now available for free distribution at the College of Agriculture, Berkeley, and from the offices of the various farm advisers of the State. The author is H. E. Jacob, associate in viticulture at the college branch at Davis. Powdery mildew is the most serious fungus disease from which California grapes suffer, says Mr. Jacob in his circular, and in most districts is dangerous every year, attacking all green parts of the vine. Finely ground sulphur is recommended as a control, three to five applications being the proper number, the first when the new shoots are six to eight inches long, the second when they are fifteen to eighteen inches in length, the third at two to three feet, the fourth when the berries are well set, and the fifth when the berries are about half grown. Knapsack dusters are recommended for small vineyards, and power apparatus for large holdings. Dusting should be done before irrigation rather than after it. High winds should be avoided, as well as wet vines and hot weather. For most effective work, the dusting sulphur should be extremely fine, easy to work, and free from adulterants.

Poultry Field Notes

By C. B. Castle

J. F. KONOLD had high pen to date and for the month of April, according to the last monthly report of the Chaffey Trapnest Station, Ontario, on the egg-laying contest in progress there. The Konold Pen No. 1 has 1520 eggs to date and 225 for the month. A. E. Richards had high hen to date, with 192 eggs, eighteen eggs ahead of the nearest rival, and Fontana Farms Company had the high hen for April, with twenty-nine eggs.

Demand for chicks and turkey poults is holding up well this spring, according to general report, and it is expected that the total business in late-hatched birds will be very gratifying.

Frequent turning of turkey eggs in the incubator is recommended by C. F. Reichers of Ontario, proprietor of the Flying R ranch. Mr. Reichers says that the extra trouble of turning the eggs as often as five times a day results in fewer culls, and is well worth while. Mr. Reichers is using feather brooders without heat now, and reports good success.

A local egg shortage, due either to the late cold season or to a decrease in hens, was reported for the Porterville district early in May by W. B. Roby, manager of the Porterville Poultry Association. A good season is expected, however, as feed prices are about the same as last year, with poultry products prices somewhat higher, Mr. Roby says.

The most striking improvement noted in the Orange county summary of cost of egg production study in 1928 is the increase in average egg production per hen, which jumped from 129 in 1927 to 154 in 1928. In 1927 four farms, out of fourteen studied, showed a net profit, while in 1928, the number was seven out of eleven. The average net loss in 1927 was $1.14, while in 1928 there was an average net profit of 48 cents per hen.

The "hen cemeteries" in California's commercial poultrydom are more crowded than need be, says Prof. B. H. Crocheron, director of the agricultural extension service. One county, in the course of some studies conducted by the service, showed 20 to 28 per cent mortality among the hens during the past four years, much of it caused by parasites and disease germs. Prof. Crocheron says that lime and spray materials placed on the poultry yard are valueless as far as destroying round worm eggs, and in fact may do more harm than good. Dryness and sunshine will destroy worm eggs and germs, however. With the spring rains over the professor says, set aside yards for next year, leaving them exposed to the sun all summer, without plowing, spading, or irrigating. When fall rains come, plow and sow barley or rye, and when the crop is well grown, the yard will be clean, sanitary, and ready for use next summer. When it should be kept clean and hard and dry again.

Light colored walls in the kitchen reflect and distribute both artificial and natural light.

The Southland Garden

and Small Farm Home

By Ross H. Cast

TO THE already long list of reasons why Southland residents should have vegetable gardens may be added the advantage of greater health values in vegetables produced in this section of the country. It has been discovered that green vegetables produced in the open, brought to maturity by the justly famous California climate, are chuck full of "vim, vigor and vitality."

For many years foods were foods, and it made little difference to the individual whether he filled his stomach with bully beef, sauerkraut, or rutabagas. The objective was to allay hunger, that is, on the part of the average person. The epicure has not changed his food habits. In recent years, however, we have found that certain foods are good for particular parts of the body, and for the prevention and even the cure of certain human ailments. As a result of these studies and their application, the consumption of fresh vegetables has seen a tremendous increase in the past decade. Western growers have participated most in this new demand, first, because of the quality of the western product, and second, as a result of their enterprise and resourcefulness in merchandising.

The vitamine theory and the wide publicity given these elusive elements in foods have been important factors in stimulating the consumption of fresh vegetables, for research has shown that they contain many of these health essentials. And western vegetables, because of the conditions under which they are produced, can take a real advantage of this trend of thought. After all, the health angle is a factor in merchandising any food product. This point cannot be too strongly emphasized with western vegetables, for the long hours of sunlight that go into the making of our vegetable crops do have a vitalizing effect.

Some months ago we predicted in these columns that in the near future, western vegetable growers would declare themselves as merchandising "western sunshine." This seems to have been a good guess, for recently the lettuce growers of California and Arizona laid plans for a big national advertising campaign on head lettuce. The health appeal will be stressed, for lettuce is an extremely healthful product.

Having been rather lucky in our prognostications, we will hazard another prophecy. Picture a snowbound eastern home, with the children of the house indoors at play. Lunch time is approaching and the mother is preparing her youngsters' midday meal. She doesn't call them to lunch, however—she says, "Children, come and eat your Western Sunshine!"

Coming back to the Southland home garden, where we produce our own all the year 'round, aided by a generous climate, we can have our sunshine, both externally and internally, winter and summer.

PROTECT YOUR PETS

A recent correspondent does not like to use the cutworm eliminator we recommend, because of the danger of eradicating her pets. Poison bran is an effective cutworm control but it should not be spread and left uncovered in the open. Generally when it is used a chicken wire covering is placed over the poison, as this precludes any chance of the family dog or cat contracting the stomachache or worse.

FEED 'EM AND DON'T WEEP

During the warm summer months, the nematode is quite active in many Southland gardens. Those who are so unfortunate as to have their garden soil infested badly with this pest often feel that they must give up the production of some crops during the summer period. They experience difficulty particularly in growing good root crops such as turnips, carrots, beets, etc., as the nematode prevents proper maturity. This pest cannot be eradicated without a rather expensive soil treatment.

My garden has around 100,000 nematodes to the square inch. They seem to favor my backyard over my neighbor's garden plot. For several years, summer maturity of root crops was out of the question, but of late seasons, I have out-smarted the pesky things.

I found that if my plantings were forced along rapidly with some quick acting fertilizer such as ammonium sulphate, the rapidity of growth outdistanced the activity

Ladybirds Come High But Groves Need 'Em

By H. M. Armitage
Los Angeles County Entomologist

Fifteen county citrus associations and privately owned insectaries in Southern California, are now engaged, on a commercial scale, in the production of the ladybird, or lady bug, beetle, Cryptolaemus which is being systematically liberated throughout the mealybug-infested citrus orchards of the southern part of the state. Few growers, however, have any conception of the amount of equipment necessary to, or the labor required in, the production and distribution of these beetles. A consideration of these points as applied to the Los Angeles county insectary at Downey, and its 10,000,000 beetle production requirements for the 1929 season will be interesting.

The operation of an insectary producing Cryptilaemus is divided into three phases, the growing of a host plant on which mealy bug may be raised, the growing of the mealybug, and the actual production of the ladybugs. The unit of production is a small redwood tray 14½x16½x4 inches, in which whole potatoes are planted in a prepared soil mixture for the purpose of growing sprouts as host plant material. The unit of operation, however, is a room of variable size, but usually holding 360 of these trays, in which heat, humidity and aeration may be controlled.

One hundred and fifty days are required for the complete cycle of operation, and planting of the host material must be started December 1 in order to complete production during the optimum period for field liberations the following April, May and June.

Experience has made it possible to closely estimate the amount of equipment, materials and labor necessary to produce any given number of these beetles over a definite period.

A tray of host plant material can be depended on to produce 400 adult beetles, from which it can be readily computed that 25,000 trays were required to produce the 10,000,000 beetles necessary to meet the 1929 field needs in Los Anglees county. These trays require 15,000 square feet in seventy rooms, 12x18 feet with 8-foot ceiling. The cost of such a building, including thermostatically controlled heat and mechanical ventilation, together with the necessary land and trays, represents an investment of approximately $60,000.

In the planting of these trays 150,000 pounds of potatoes, 150 cubic yards of soil, thirty-seven yards of dairy manure, thirty-seven cubic lards of sand and the full time of ten men for thirty days are required, representing a material and labor cost close to $5000.

During the sixty-day growing period of the host plant material, the labor of four men is required to carry out the necessary watering at ten-day intervals. The thirty-day period of infesting and developing the mealybug on the potato sprouts is the most tedious and careful work of the entire operation. Mealybugs must have been previously developed in the laboratory in sufficient quantity and available at the proper time in the proper stage to infest the 25,000 trays. This involves the use of at least 250,000 pieces of supplementary host material in transferring the mealybug from the provided material to the new sprouts, each piece being handled three times. The labor of ten men is required for this phase of the work.

Production must have been previously arranged for and timed so that 625,000 beetles are available for "stinging" up the host insect material with eggs at this stage, twenty-five beetles being placed in each tray and allowed eighteen days in which to deposit their quota of eggs. Two weeks later, production starts and continues for six weeks, during which period the 10,000,000-beetle production must be collected in small containers holding ten beetles each and taken to the field, ten beetles being liberated on each tree in the infested properties.

One man will average, in collecting, 2000 beetles per hour, while one man will liberate 4000 beetles per hour, so for each two men collecting in the laboratory, one man is required in the field. Placing the 10,000,000 beetles in 1,000,000 containers requires 5000 hours of labor, and liberating them in the field 2500 hours labor, or the full time of twenty men for six weeks. Incidentally, in liberating, the men performing this operation will have walked approximately 2000 miles.

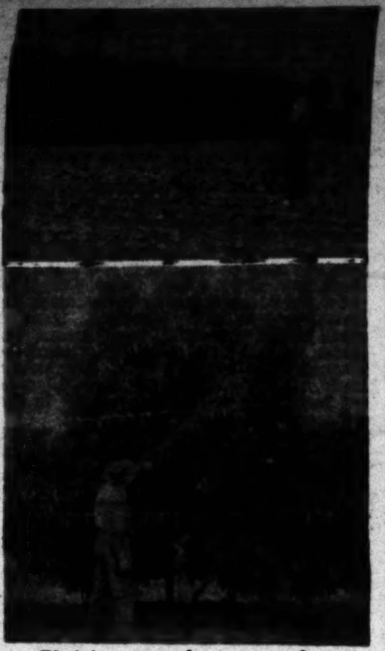
During the rest of the year, the insectary must continue in operation enough tray material to meet a late season emergency and to carry over mealybugs and ladybugs to start the following season's operations.

In the meantime, six special inspectors, assisting the fifteen district county horticultural inspectors in their respective districts, will have inspected in thirty days the 17,000 acres of citrus in Los Angeles county known to be infested with mealybugs. Each property will have been graded as to degree of infestation and this information used as a basis for allocating to the best advantage the ladybugs as they become available at the insectary for field distribution.

The total cost of producing and liberating the 10,000,000 beetles, including depreciation on buildings, overhead, operation, materials and labor, will approximate $40,000, or 4 cents per insect. At ten beetles per tree, the ultimate charge to the grower, however is only 4 cents per tree, and in many cases the district bears a fair percentage of that cost as a matter of orchard insurance.

The work is partially self supporting through payments by growers for beetles received, the rest of the cost being met by the county, which furnishes the buildings, and advances operating funds.

On the night of March 29, this spring, fire destroyed the branch insectary at Rivera, with 9000 trays of host plant material planned to produce 4,000,000 ladybugs. The insectary at Downey was equipped to turn out 6,000,000 beetles and insectaries in other counties, particularly Ventura county, have made up the shortage, so the full 10,000,000 will be available this season in Los Angeles county's mealybug-infested groves.



Thriving avocado trees and garden of N. C. Johnson at Solano Beach. He credits his effective windbreak, seen in top photo, with his success as a grower.

Credits Windbreaks With Crop Success

SOLANO BEACH.—Five years ago N. C. Johnson retired from service with the Marines to a two-acre farm here. As a boy he had grown vegetables and as a Marine, he had studied the effect of winds on land and sea. Because of the latter, the first improvement he made on his little farm was to surround it with a lath windbreak reinforced with a row of athel trees. Then he planted vegetables and 160 avocado trees. He declares that production and returns have amply justified his efforts and the precaution he took.

In fact, he attributes his success as a grower to the fact that he solved the windbreak problem before planting. Others, he says, have failed or borne four or five years of losses before acknowledging that windbreaks are necessary and profitable in many sections of the coast.

Lighter Grain and Hay Crops Expected

BEAUMONT.—Cold weather late into the spring and lack of seasonal rains are responsible for a shortage of hay and grain crops in parts of Riverside county, according to a survey made by Carl J. Fowler, who was for almost a decade one of Beaumont's heaviest and most successful growers of hay and grain, and who is now with a Riverside implement house. While crops will be curtailed in most parts of the county and lighter than normal in all parts, there will be a large tonnage and high prices are inevitable, he declares.

Mr. Fowler closed a county-wide survey in Beaumont and pronounced only three districts as having first-class prospects for crops—Beaumont, Diamond Valley south of Hemet, and Temecula Valley. Winchester has fairly good prospects, he says, and sections of the foothills northeast of Murietta look fairly good. Moreno, with the exception of one portion, is light and poor, according to Mr. Fowler, who also found the Perris Valley crops and those of Menifee and Gavilan valleys light. Coahuila Valley, southwest of Hemet, at an elevation of 4500 feet, has a crop season later than other portions of Riverside county, but at present time conditions are reported favorable for a good crop of wheat, the main product grown there.

"The hay and grain will be a little short of the average year all over the county," said Mr. Fowler early in May. "Beaumont shows the best average crop of anything I've seen."

A Day Nearer

California products have been brought a day nearer to the markets of the Atlantic Coast by the inauguration of a three-day service from Chicago and St. Louis to New York. Fresh fruits, vegetables and dairy products from the West and Southwest will have the benefit of this shortening of schedule. The new service is now available for Pacific Coast perishables and will be quite generally used in the movement of crops of the 1929 season.

Quality of Oranges Better This Season

ANAHEIM.—Some 150 directors and house managers of the Northern Orange County Fruit Exchange met recently here for their quarterly session. L. D. Savage, assistant orange sales manager of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, said there remained about 6000 cars of navels to ship. Valencia picking will be delayed until the navels are practically cleared away, he said. He reported that R. S. Woglum, exchange entomologist, is in Florida studying the Mediterranean fruit fly situation.

H. J. Ramsey of the exchange predicted a better quality crop than they did this time of last year, which he said was one of the poorest for many seasons. The reduction in California deciduous production this spring, due to frosts, may react favorably on the Valencia situation, he thought.

Harold E. Wahlberg, Orange county farm adviser, reviewed the present status of the Valencia industry recently completed by the agricultural extension service. He stated that the Valencia deal was in a better position than the navel situation, judging from all data available. The Valencia is a summer fruit, coming on at a time when other citrus fruits are scarce—and the orange juice demand during the summer months has increased rapidly.

Mother Put "Pinks" With "Best Sellers"

TUJUNGA.—More than 250,000,000 carnations have been shipped from local flower gardens for Mither's Day, according to H. Muto, who operates the McDonald Carnation Farm of this place. Mr. Muto has ten acres of rose pink carnations and is setting out some additional acreage this year, the entire farm being irrigated with a sprinkling system.

Of the 300 or 400 acres of hill land flower gardens in the Tujunga-Sunland district, at least one-half is planted entirely to carnations. The rose pink and red vareities take precedence, with the white carnation a close second. Mother's Day, May 12, of course, affords the greatest stimulus to the marketing of this flower.

Carnations from local fields are picked every other morning while they are still dew covered, and are sent by fast truck to Los Angeles and other near-by markets or prepared for shipment to farther points, which include several neighboring States. Some go as far east as Chicago. Growers here declare that the soil and climate of the district are excellent for the growing of cut flowers and bulbs. Sweet peas, stock, larkspur, cornflowers and other less known flowers grow outdoors, in season, the year 'round. Sweet peas are protected by thin muslin shade from wind and sun when needed. Flowers from Tujunga, especially carnations, are known for their keeping qualities.

The history of the carnation, from the first little, spicy old-fashioned "pinks" to the present-day winners is written in letters of fragrance and margined in color. The name "carnation" is taken from the Greek word "carnis" (flesh) and refers to the flesh color of the flowers of the original type. Although the carnation has been in cultivation for more than 2000 years, it was not until the beginning of the Sixteenth century that its development into numerous varieties made an impression upon flower history. The gardeners of Italy, France, Germany and Holland, with their respective ideals of beauty, contributed so many varieties that in 1597 Girard wrote that "to describe each new variety of carnation were to roll the Sisyphus stone or number the sands." The carnation was brought to its present state of perfection by American growers. Only in the last twenty-five years has it been grown to any extent commercially in Southern California.

With the inauguration of Mother's Day, the carnation found new favor and took its place among the "best sellers." Just as the Easter lily is the symbol of the Resurrection, the violet, the herald of spring, so has the carnation found a place in the hearts of the world as the symbol of mother love. Many a man who a year ago wore a red carnation in his buttonhole and sent loving greetings to a living mother, today will reverently fasten a white blossom on his coat in memory of one who is gone.

Dates Demand a Lot of Help From Man

By Iva M. McFadden

The date palm came from Asian and African deserts and while it has adapted itself admirably to American "waste places," it still maintains its air of aloofness and recalls fanciful tales of Arabian and Persian gardens steeped in mystery. Like oriental royalty, it demands attention, too, which no common tree requires, for it must be pollinated by hand. This practice is as ancient, apparently, as date culture and no modern science has succeeded in finding any speedier or better way of securing a crop.

The date palm is dioecious; that is, one tree is male and another female. The male tree produces the pollen and the female, the fruit. With similar plants, insects or the wind distributes the pollen quite well, but not so with the date palm.

When the male bloom appears it is enveloped in a hard sheath. If left to itself, this sheath bursts, disclosing spikes of tiny white blossoms in a heavy head. The practice is to cut off bloom head before maturity, open the sheath and separate the spikes and dry them, commonly in a screened porch, for they need air. They are sometimes placed on the screen trays later used in handling the fruit, and papers are spread beneath to catch any of the pollen that falls off.

The female bloom is also wrapped in a hard spathe and this cracks and opens when the flowers are ready to be pollinated. The female flower clusters are longer than those of the male and consist of many strands lined with the flowers, which look like buttons strung on a twig.

While the female blossom cluster is still compact, the date grower customarily places two sprigs of the male blossom upside down at the top and the cluster is then tied with a string by a slipknot. This knot is supposed to loosen as the fruit develops. The string keeps the cluster compact and makes pollination surer and also protects the small fruit from injury by wind. The pollen which sifts down on the papers is gathered up on bits of cotton, or even pipe cleaners, and placed in the clusters. Some growers apply pollen by means of blowpipes of bamboo. The clusters are then clipped or "bobbed" at the ends to encourage the development of larger fruit.

Pollen keeps its potency surprisingly long. It is said to be safe for use a second season after collection.

There may be some wind or insect pollination, for dates that are not artificially pollinated sometimes mature. The Deglet Noor when not pollinated at all, develops a fairly normal date as far as size goes, but the seed is undeveloped. As date trees have ugly thorns, at the time of pollination it is customary to de-thorn the trees by means of a heavy knife with a curved blade.

The study of date varieties and strains has heretofore been chiefly with the female trees, and the pollen has been assumed to be about as good from one male as from another. A satisfactory male tree was one that produced plenty of pollen. However, it was noted that some fruit matured faster than other fruit, some had larger seeds than their neighbors of the same variety, and the plant specialists began so suspect that papa palm had something to do with it as well as mamma.

To test it out, experiments have been conducted at the United States Date Garden at Indio for three years, while supplemental tests have been made in the Salt River Valley, Arizona. They indicate that different pollens affect the time of ripening and size of both fruit and seed. No practical application has been made of the findings so far, but in the future it is probable that account will be taken of them and that choice male trees will be tested out and sold for new plantings.

Female date palms blossom from March till June as a rule, but April and May bring most of the hand pollination in California date gardens.

Uncle Ab says that love and reason are the best of companions although they don't always go together.

Junior Republic Is Scene of Field Day

CHINO.—Agriculturists from many parts of Southern California gathered recently at the California Junior Republic, near here, for the annual field day exercises, which started at 8:30 a. m., and continued throughout the day. Because of the wide fame the republic has gained through its fine herds of Holstein cows and Berkshire hogs, scores of prominent live-stock men were in attendance.

Under the auspices of the agricultural extension service and the San Bernardino County Farm Bureau, a fire prevention and water conservation experiment and demonstration was included in the program. The fire prevention demonstration brought to the republic various types of fire-fighting apparatus best suited for country needs. Prof. W. Metcalf and J. P. Fairbanks represented the University of California, and Herbert White and A. Campbell, San Bernardino county.

Livestock men were particularly interested in the second demonstration, which consisted of the selection of profitable breeding stock.

Farm project clubs for boys and girls had several representatives present. These juvenile visitors had the privilege of judging the live stock of the republic. Two of the outstanding animals brought out for the young judgers were Ida, Holstein butter-fat producer, and Blackie, the big republic's Holstein bull. This animal has taken honors at a number of fairs.

Republic boys also brought out a class of senior heifers and junior bull calves, registered Berkshire sows and Hampshire ewes, and farm draft horses. Other judging events were held in the poultry and tree divisions.

Among those supplying poultry for judging were David Porter of Pomona, with typical specimens of African and Buff geese, White Muscovy and Rouen ducks; L. N. Kirk of Upland, Red Leghorns; Charles Gage of Upland, Buff Leghorns; Mrs. E. R. Lasell of Burbank, Australorps; and Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Shelton of Pomona, Bronze turkeys.

Paul C. Kennedy, superintendent of the poultry show of the Los Angeles County Fair at Pomona, also supplied poultry for the judging.

High schools and individuals winning honors in the judging contests were: Poultry—J. C. Fremont, Los Angeles, first; San Bernardino, second; girls' team from Fremont High School, Los Angeles, third; Fred Poppet, San Bernardino, high individual; Harold Wood and Allen Lambourne, both of J. C. Fremont, Los Angeles, second and third. Trees—San Bernardino, first; Chaffey, Ontario, second; James Riley, Chaffey, and W. Stanley, San Bernardino, tied for high; D. Spurlock, San Bernardino, third. Live stock—Chaffey, first; Phineas Banning, Wilmington, second; Hemet, third; Charles Birdsall, Chaffey, first; Hal White, Phineas Banning, second; Harold Webster, Hemet, third.

R. A. Condee, president of the California State Agricultural Society, and C. E. Wright, superintendent of the "Republic," were the directors in charge of the event. R. Weston was in charge of registration, and W. Welch of refreshments.

The "Republic" contemplates the staging of various demonstrations designed to assist in the solution of problems confronting the ranchers and future ranchers of the State, it is announced. The agricultural department is open to the public, and student guides are supplied to visitors.

Desert Farming

areas remote from markets, are to be avoided, since the greater the lift, the greater the operating cost. In making estimates of the actual pumping lift during operations, it is necessary to get as reliable data as possible, and preferably to make actual lift measurements. Certain wells will give an artesian flow in the winter but in the summer, during the pumping season, they may have an actual pumping level of as much as ninety feet or more.

Logs of wells nearby may give considerable valuable information on the kind of water strata likely to be encountered. Under heavy pumping conditions, the water is likely to drop more where water-bearing strata are made up of fine sands and silts, than when the strata are of layers of coarse gravel. The ideal well is one with a reasonable water lift which remains practically constant. Falling water tables involve expensive pump repairs and alterations.

Having disposed of the three vital questions, the desert settler may consider the other factors. Most desert areas, because of their elevation, lack of trees, and temperature conditions, are subject to strong winds. While the natural desert conditions are rather harsh, it is surprising what a complete change can be effected in a few years' time by the planting of alfalfa and the growing of trees, around the farmsteads. Trees and alfalfa in combination cool the air, and the trees will fend off severe windstorms. So the wise settler plants trees and then more trees. A quarter to a half an acre of trees on the windward side of the house and barn make living conditions on the ranch quite good in just a few years.

There should be enough capital to "carry" the family for a year, at least, in addition to developing part of the raw land. The development will average in cost $50 to $75 per acre and in some cases will run higher. House, barn, pump and motor, tools, and implements are to be purchased. It takes money to get started. Returns are slow, for the soil must be stocked with humus. Virgin desert soils, lacking this constituent, are not well suited for vegetables until alfalfa has been grown for several years. The initial crops are limited, including such things as clovers, alfalfa, the cereals and sorghums.

But there are other excellent farm combinations. Sheep or cattle do well in connection with alfalfa. Poultry and turkeys have also proved profitable. As to the alfalfa hay, the desert "does a good job." The hay may be cut, raked and baled in a short time, and the color remains green because the curing is mostly in the shock. Because there is little bleaching, there is small loss of vitamin B from leaves and stems, an important item in present-day marketing, especially with the poultry trade. In spite of the dry climate, an extra leafy type of hay is produced in desert sections.

The desert is all right agriculturally if it has the three chief requirements—good soil, soils free from alkali and cheap water. Otherwise, look out!

Record Entry List in Packing Contest

ANAHEIM.—Officials of the California Valencia Orange Show to be held here May 23 to June 2, are confident that the orange-packing contest that is a regular feature of this annual event will this year attract more entries than ever before.

George W. Reid, general manager of the exposition, declares that practically every citrus packing-house of consequence in California will be represented.

Rules and regulations for the packing events have been perfected by the committee in charge and are in the hands of the printers. Monetary prizes, cups and various trophies will be included in the awards to the winners of the contest.

Hemet 'Cot Growers Expect High Prices

HEMET.—The old saying that "it's an ill wind that blows nobody good" applies to the apricot growers of the Hemet district who saved their crops by heavy smudging during the two recent cold snaps. Practically every grower whose orchard was equipped with heaters and who worked hard and long during the cold nights, succeeded in saving nearly all of his fruit, and with the State's crop reduced to less than half of the early estimated totals by the untimely visitations of Jack Frost, these growers feel they stand to reap the reward of their foresight in the highest price apricots have brought since the days immediately folowing the World War.

While there is no getting around the fact that many growers lost the biggest portion of their apricots in the freeze, some of them were partially covered by insurance taken out against just such a contongency. It is estimated that there are some 6000 tons of apricots to be harvested in this valley from ranches where the owners smudged and from the orchards which were not seriously hurt by the frosts. It is reported that already prices double those of last season are being offered, but growers are somewhat cautious about signing contracts as yet, because they think that still higher prices will prevail before the season gets under way. Warehouses are said to be more nearly cleared up on old apricots, both canned and dried, than they have been in years.

Desert Grapefruit Exchange Is Formed

EL CENTRO.—Desert grapefruit growers of California and Arizona, affiliated with the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, met here recently to form a district organization to be known as the Desert Citrus Exchange. The membership is now made up of citrus associations in the Imperial and Yuma valleys, but will be open, however, to any association in these districts and in the Coachella Valley, California, and Salt River Valley or elsewhere in Arizona which may affiliate with the California Fruit Growers' Exchange.

El Centro has been designated the principal place of business. The district exchange will have no capital stock, but will be supported by a small assessment on each box of fruit which it markets.

The directors of the new organization are William H. Lowther and H. B. Stewart, representing the Imperial Valley Citrus Exchange of Brawley; John P. Waterman and J. M. Grafton, representing the Imperial Valley Grapefruit Growers of El Centro; J. W. Longstreth and Daniel Grant, representing the Yuma Mesa Grapefruit Growers; and George M. Hill, representing the Yuma Mesa Grapefruit Company.

Officials of the new exchange estimate that they will market between 700 and 800 carloads of grapefruit in the 1929-30 season.

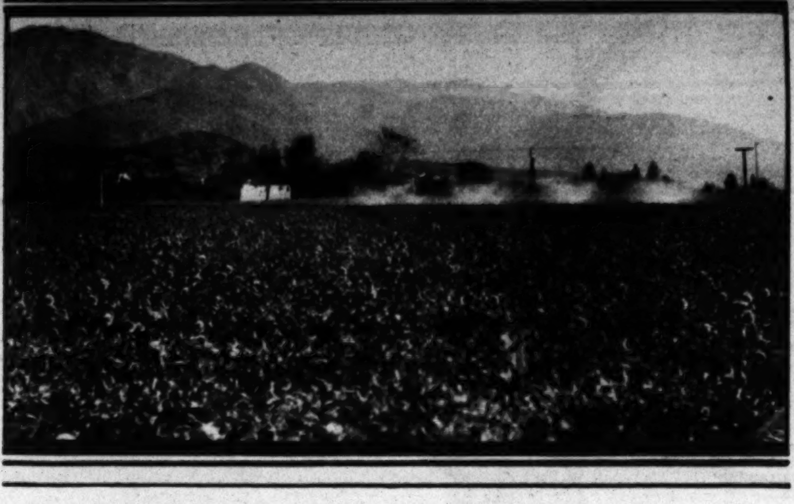
The Flower of Flowers Today

(Illustrating Story in This Issue)



The carnations of today are vastly different from the little old-fashioned "pinks" of yesterday, thanks largely to American growers, but it was the "Mother's Day" idea that put this flower among the "best sellers." Here is a field of carnations at Tujunga, taken just before this year's "Mother's Day" harvesting. Today the blossoms may be seen in thousands of buttonholes and in vases in innumerable homes—a colorful tribute to mother love. Lucky are they who wear the red—sad the wearers of the white.

These Tujunga carnation pickers with armfuls of lacy blossoms were photographed just as they had "cleaned" a field of its choisest flowers.

One of Tujunga's hillside flower gardens. Half of the four hundred acres in flowers in this highland area is in carnations.

Sweet peas are protected by muslin shade from wind and sun when needed. Here is a fine Tujunga planting.

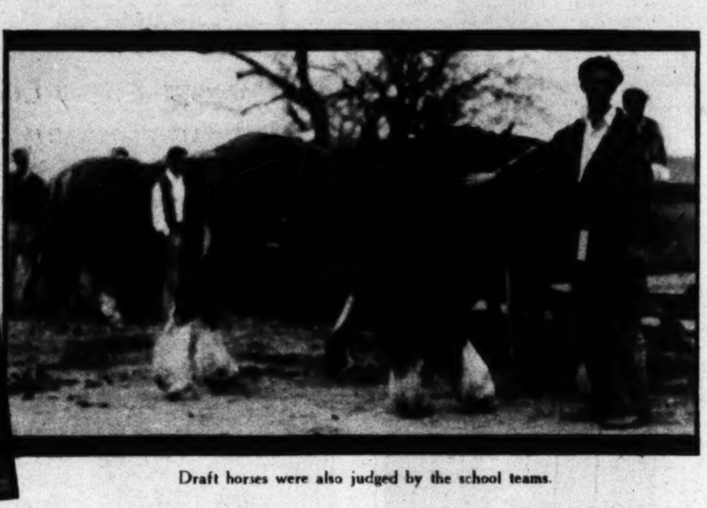
With the Crowd at the Junior Republic's Field Day

Students from a number of Southern California schools took part in judging contests at the recent Field Day held at California Junior Republic, near Chino. Here are some contestants and judges sizing up the merits of trees in the "Republic" orchards.

Boys judging sheep, another activity of the day at the "Republic."

Fine Holstein cows at the "Republic" were led from their stalls and submitted to the inspection of future dairymen, as part of the live stock judging contest held at the field day.



Draft horses were also judged by the school teams.

A Berkshire mama and her brood, with Robert Tyson, "captain of the piggery." The "Republic" specializes on this breed, and has some pretty "snooty" aristocrats in the herd, although their names are unusually short and democratic, such as Mamie and George, as befits a Republican form of government.

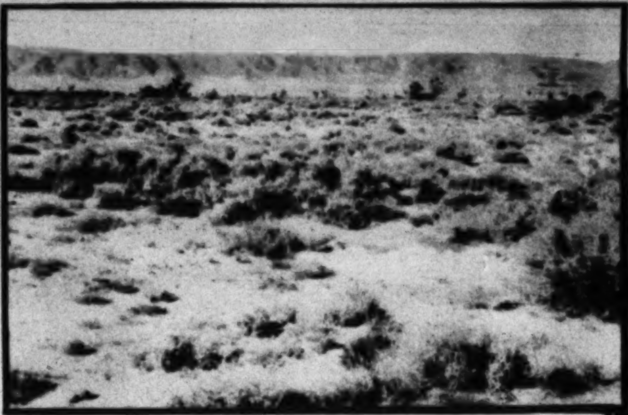
Poultry, both exhibition and utility, came in for some expert attention on the part of the youngsters. Here are three of the contestants "looking 'em over."

A glimpse of the "piggery," a new and ultra-modern structure, the gift of Fred Bixby, well-known live stock man. The boys are members of the live stock judging teams.

John Graham, a "Republic" boy, and Alice, becomingly decked in pink and blue ribbons—one of five motherless lambs this lad raised on the bottle.

Trees—a Beauty Aid for the Desert's Sunburned Face

(Illustrating Story by F. H. Ernst)



Here's the raw desert near Del Sur, in the west end of Antelope Valley. Some of the desert has agricultural possibilities but some of it has none, and a prospective buyer should "know" before spending his money on attempted development.

Most crops want more humus than desert soils have and alfalfa is one of the best of the lot for arid lands. But there are combinations that may be made profitably with this great legume, such as sheep, cattle and turkeys.

Water is one of the real essentials to desert ranching, which commonly starts with alfalfa. The cost of pumping from deep wells may put the ranch "in the red," even though the flow is constant through the summer months.

Trees ameliorate the desert dweller's lot, break the force of the wind and cool the air with shade. The trees shown at right were provided by the California State Forestry Department for wood-lots and windbreaks in Antelope Valley. Those taller ones at left came from the Los Angeles County Forestry Department and were distributed for Antelope Valley roadside plantings. They will be good "treatment" for the tanned complexion of the desert.

A part of a lot of 7,000 trees chosen for desert conditions in Antelope Valley and distributed there this spring by the State Forester through the Agricultural Extension Service. As they are hardy, need little water and grow very rapidly, these little seedlings will, in a few years, make homes comfortable in what has been a desolate waste. They might be termed "health and beauty treatments" for the dry places.

Avocado Land

—the Big Income Producer!

We have three avocado land subdivisions of the very highest type; two of them located within an hour's drive of Los Angeles, and the third in northern San Diego County. Each is eminently adapted to raising this profitable fruit, having excellent soil, high-quality water and ideal climatic conditions. Prices range from $450 to $2,000 an acre, according to location, and parcels are available in size to suit purchaser—ranging from two acres upward to estates of thirty or forty acres each.

Avocado land is becoming more and more scarce as a result of the increasing popularity of this exceptional fruit. The supply is limited by nature and cannot be increased. If interested in making money by growing Avocados, Oranges, Lemons or other profitable products of the soil, write, telephone or call for literature regarding our income land subdivisions. No obligation.

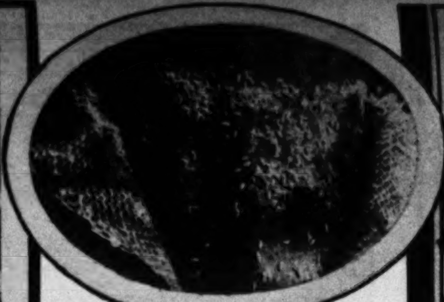
A home in the desert. The right sorts of trees make it charming and temper the sun and wind—and there's variety enough for really good landscaping.

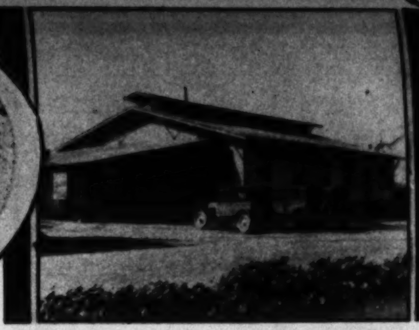
This isn't a scene along some winding stream of the Middle West, but a reservoir on a desert alfalfa ranch in Southern California. Because it's artificial and made to hold irrigation water in storage, doesn't keep it from being a good substitute for "the old swimmin' hole."

Applying the Theory of "Bug Eat Bug" to Save Citrus

(Illustrating Article by H. M. Armitage)



Under trap bands the female mealy bugs creep to lay their eggs. Some measure of control of the swarming hordes may be accomplished by this method, but too many escape to make tree banding really effective.



Rivera branch of the Los Angeles County insectary as it appeared before it was destroyed by fire this spring. The building housed 9,000 trays of host plant material capable of producing 4,000,000 Cryptolæmus ladybird beetles and all these were burned.

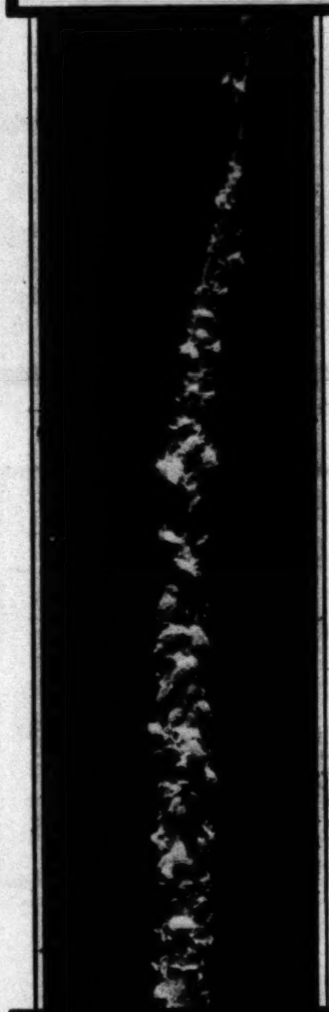
Here's the main insectary of Los Angeles County at Downey. The building used to be a furniture factory, but now it grows potato sprouts to feed Citrophilus mealy bugs to feed Cryptolæmus ladybirds to deposit eggs in groves to eat more mealy bugs. Ten million ladybird beetles of the right variety were needed in the Los Angeles County citrus groves this year.

Is Citrophilus mealy bug a pest that needs control? Just take a look at this infested tree and think of the spread of these prolific creatures to the groves round about, and you'll know why state and county horticultural authorities have to encourage the predacious foes of these crumby little bugs.

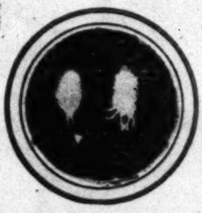
A corridor at the Downey insectary. H. M. Armitage, county entomologist, has just examined the crop of mealy bugs in this room and is recording the degree of progress that has been made in the dark, heated but well-ventilated chamber.

Inside the room. Both sides are lined with shelves filled with boxes containing potatoes that provide host sprouts for the development of mealy bugs.

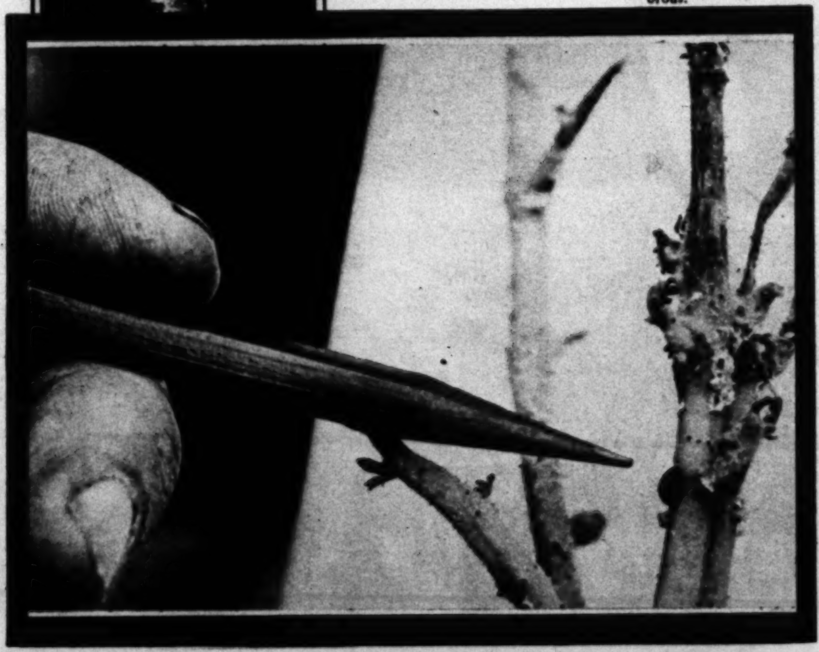
The "crypts" are placed ten in a capsule and liberated in infested groves. When a ladybird is tossed into a tree he "plays possum" at first and falls into the branches as though lifeless, but in a few moments he orients himself and starts out looking for his favorite and only prey, mealy bug.



A potato sprout covered with mealy bugs developed at the Downey insectary for "crypt" food. The ferocious little beetles have to have their citrophilus to eat, even in their crawling larva stage, or they turn cannibal and devour each other.



At left is a partly-grown Citrophilus mealy bug, and at right is a Cryptolæmus larva. They look something alike, but they don't act the same. One is a vegetarian and the other might be termed carnivorous.



Here's the "crypt" ready to start on his life work. He has discarded his larval overcoat which split up the back and now his wings are in working order. This ladybird—whose official name is Cryptolæmus Montrouzieri—is smaller than his red brothers and sisters that folks are most familiar with and his coloring is almost black. The red variety preys on aphis while this fellow craves an exclusive diet of mealy bug.

"Nicona PROTECTION" for your garden .... easy to have!

"NICONA - protection" means the elimination of destructive insects and diseases from your garden. Aphids, mildew and the rest of the hungry host of garden pests can never get a foothold where NICONA has been systematically used.

There is no mystery about the way NICONA works or how it should be used.

Highly refined oil and nicotine are combined in this spray. Both have great value in the curing of plant diseases and the killing of minute, destructive insects.

NICONA is easy to use. There's nothing unpleasant about its use. Spray systematically covering every bush in your garden several times during the spring at intervals of two weeks. You'll see the results in a more beautiful garden later in the year.

MAY TIME FASHIONS

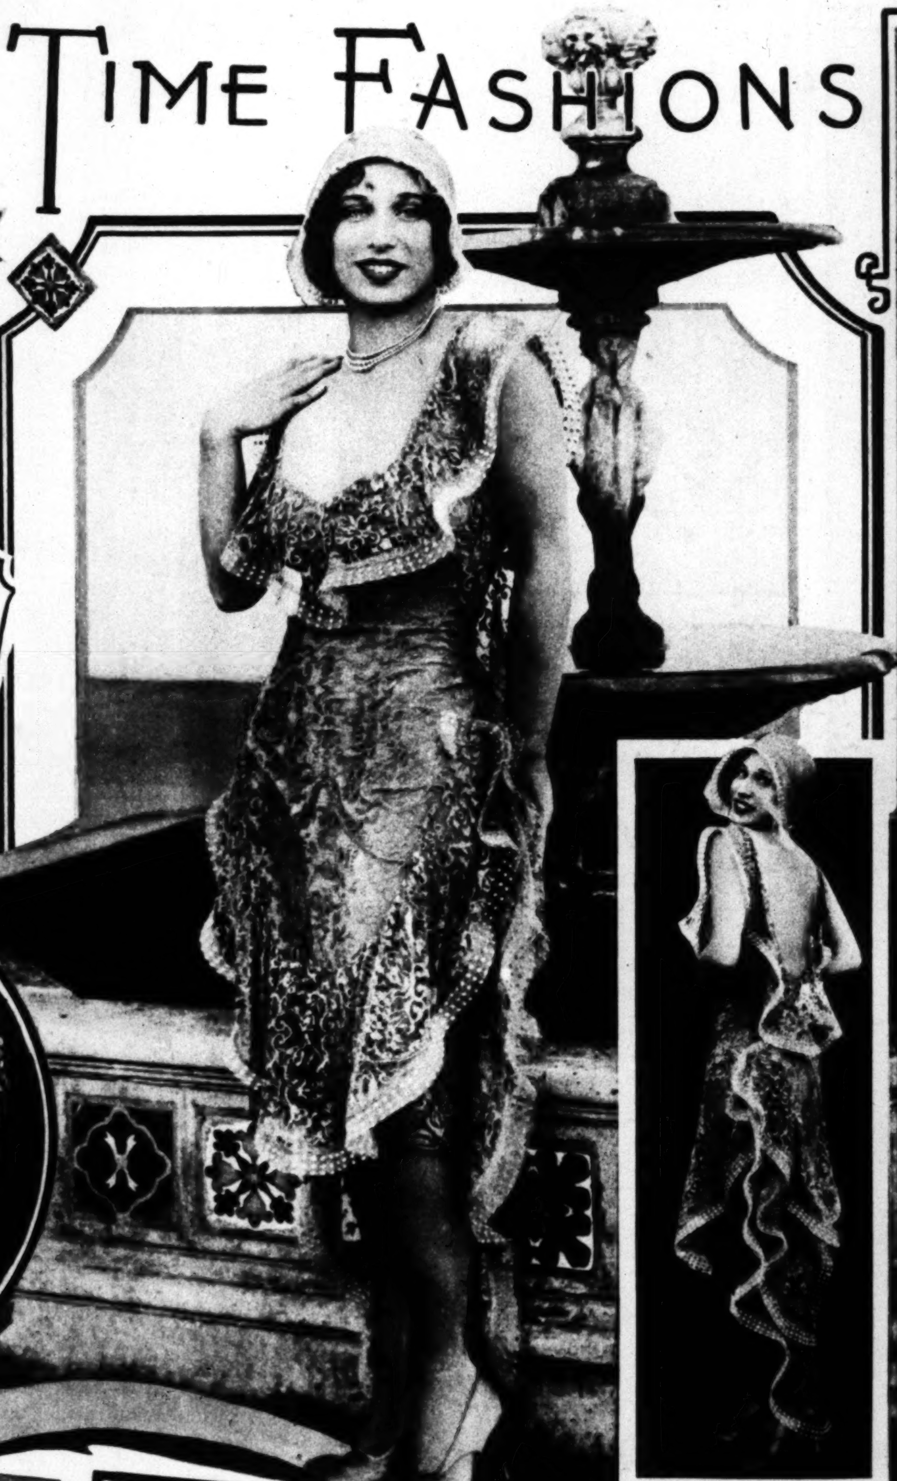
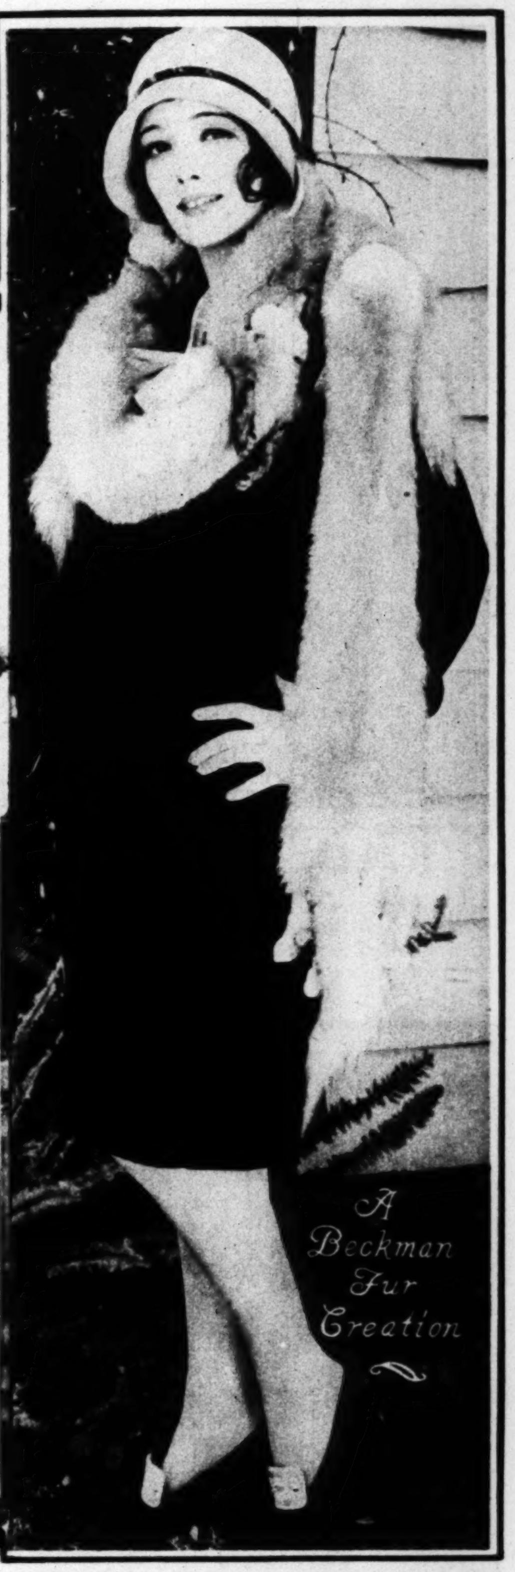
Beckman's Exclusive Fur Shop of West Seventh Street, introduces for summer gowns the ideal fur accessories shown here by Polly Ann Young. Here Miss Young wears a flattering canary fox skin which adds a fluffy and luxurious atmosphere to the flowered silk or dainty chiffon afternoon or dinner costume.

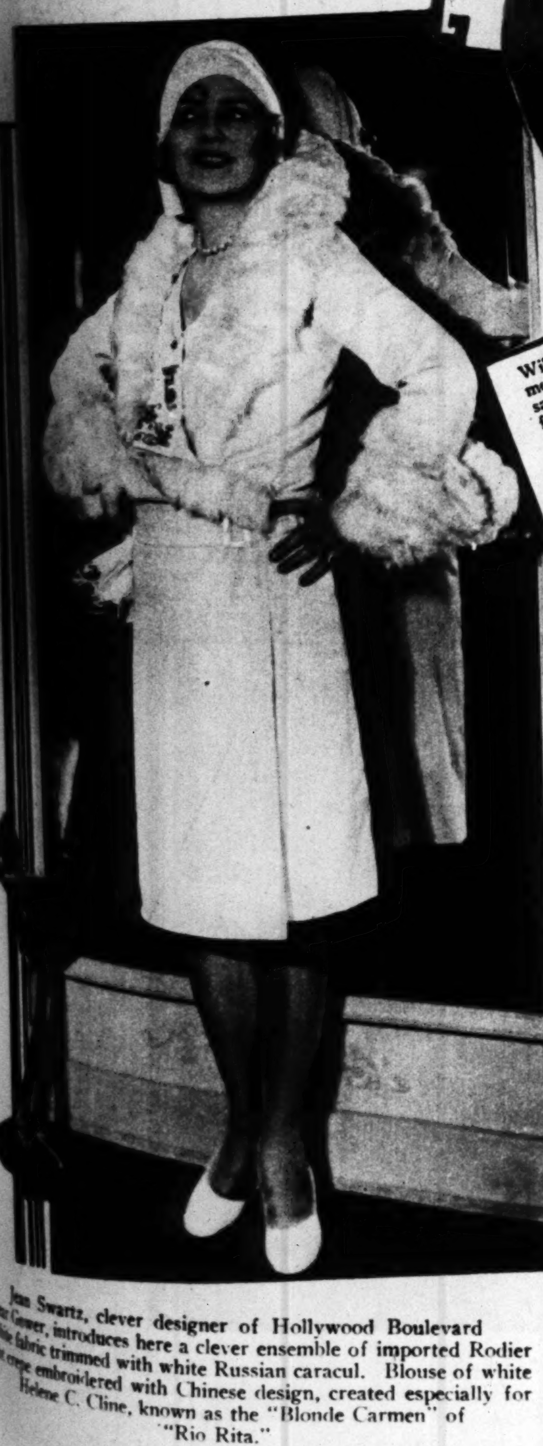


Dot Gregson, whose striking personality and art in gown designing has won for her much favor in Southern California, especially in Hollywood. Miss Gregson has just returned from Palm Beach, where she received some of the inspirations which she has introduced in her summer collection which she is showing in her Fashion Salon in the Roosevelt Hotel, on the mezzanine floor. Miss Gregson poses here in one of her own creations—a gown of Lido blue all-over lace, trimmed with horsehair braid, set with blue rhinestones, called the "Sophisticant." Blue Banckok hat trimmed with the same blue rhinestones.

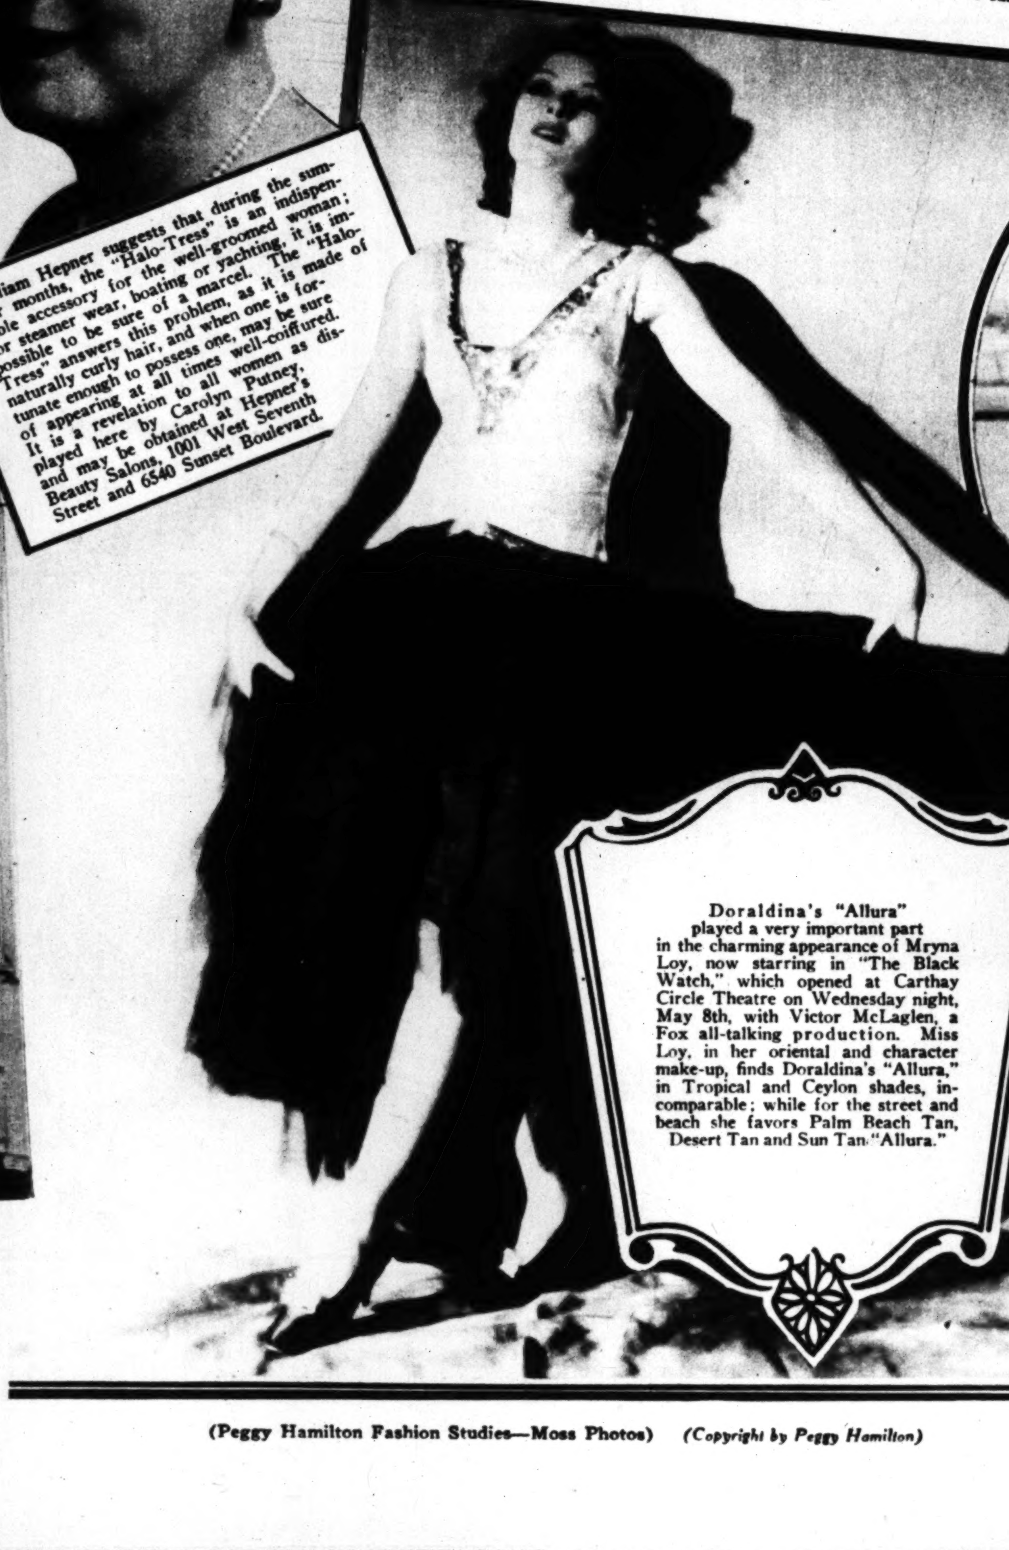


Polly Ann Young introduces here for Beckman's Exclusive Fur Shop one of the most attractive fur pieces of canary marten for semi-tailored summer or light silk ensembles; when, upon removing the wrap, the fur adds a lovely finish to the gown.

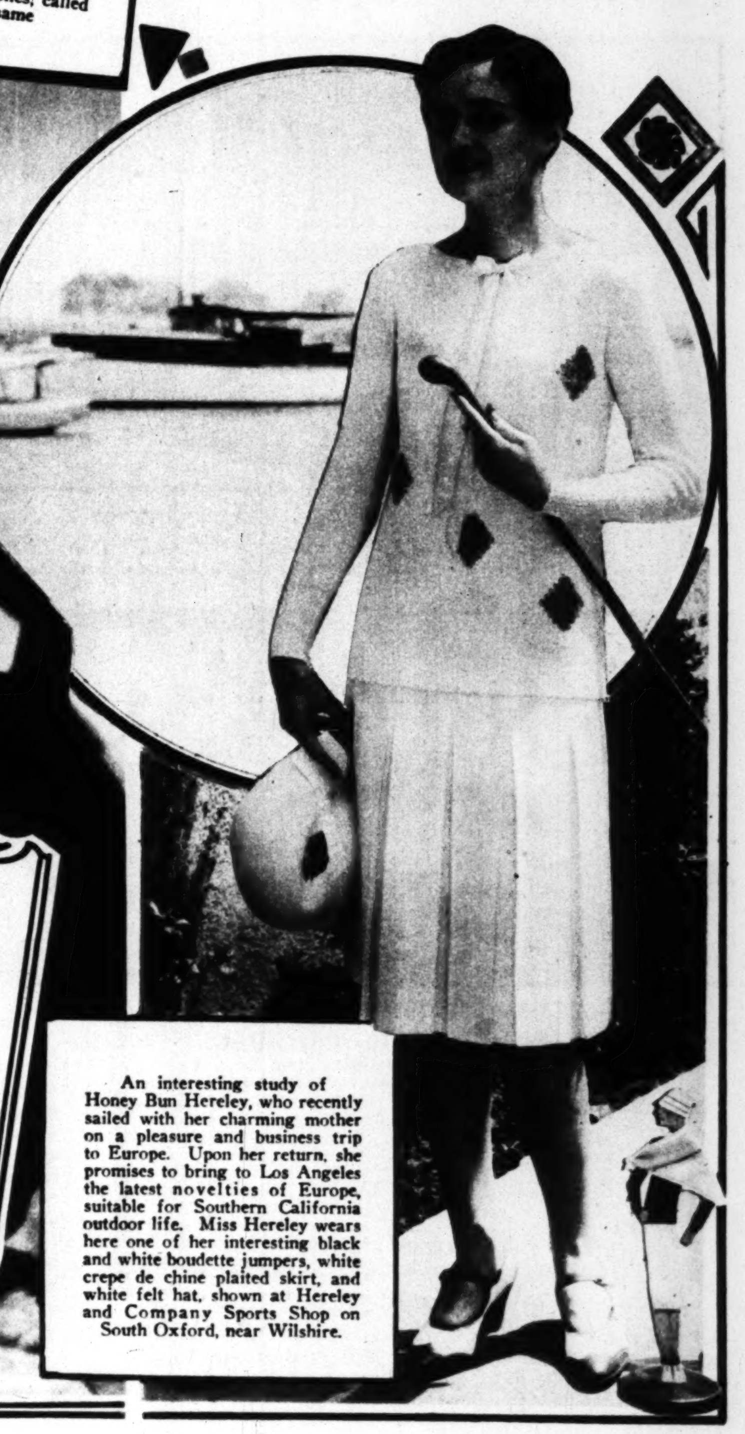
William Hepner suggests that during the summer months, the "Halo-Tress" is an indispensable accessory for the well-groomed woman; for steamer wear, boating or yachting, it is impossible to be sure of a marcel. The "Halo-Tress" answers this problem, as it is made of naturally curly hair, and when one is fortunate enough to possess one, may be sure of appearing at all times well-coiffured. It is a revelation to all women as displayed here by Carolyn Putney, and may be obtained at Hepner's Beauty Salons, 1001 West Seventh Street and 6540 Sunset Boulevard.



Jean Swartz, clever designer of Hollywood Boulevard near Gower, introduces here a clever ensemble of imported Rodier white fabric trimmed with white Russian caracul. Blouse of white flat crepe embroidered with Chinese design, created especially for Helene C. Cline, known as the "Blonde Carmen" of "Rio Rita."



Doraldina's "Allura" played a very important part in the charming appearance of Mryna Loy, now starring in "The Black Watch," which opened at Carthay Circle Theatre on Wednesday night, May 8th, with Victor McLaglen, a Fox all-talking production. Miss Loy, in her oriental and character make-up, finds Doraldina's "Allura," in Tropical and Ceylon shades, incomparable; while for the street and beach she favors Palm Beach Tan, Desert Tan and Sun Tan "Allura."



An interesting study of Honey Bun Hereley, who recently sailed with her charming mother on a pleasure and business trip to Europe. Upon her return, she promises to bring to Los Angeles the latest novelties of Europe, suitable for Southern California outdoor life. Miss Hereley wears here one of her interesting black and white boudette jumpers, white crepe de chine plaited skirt, and white felt hat, shown at Hereley and Company Sports Shop on South Oxford, near Wilshire.

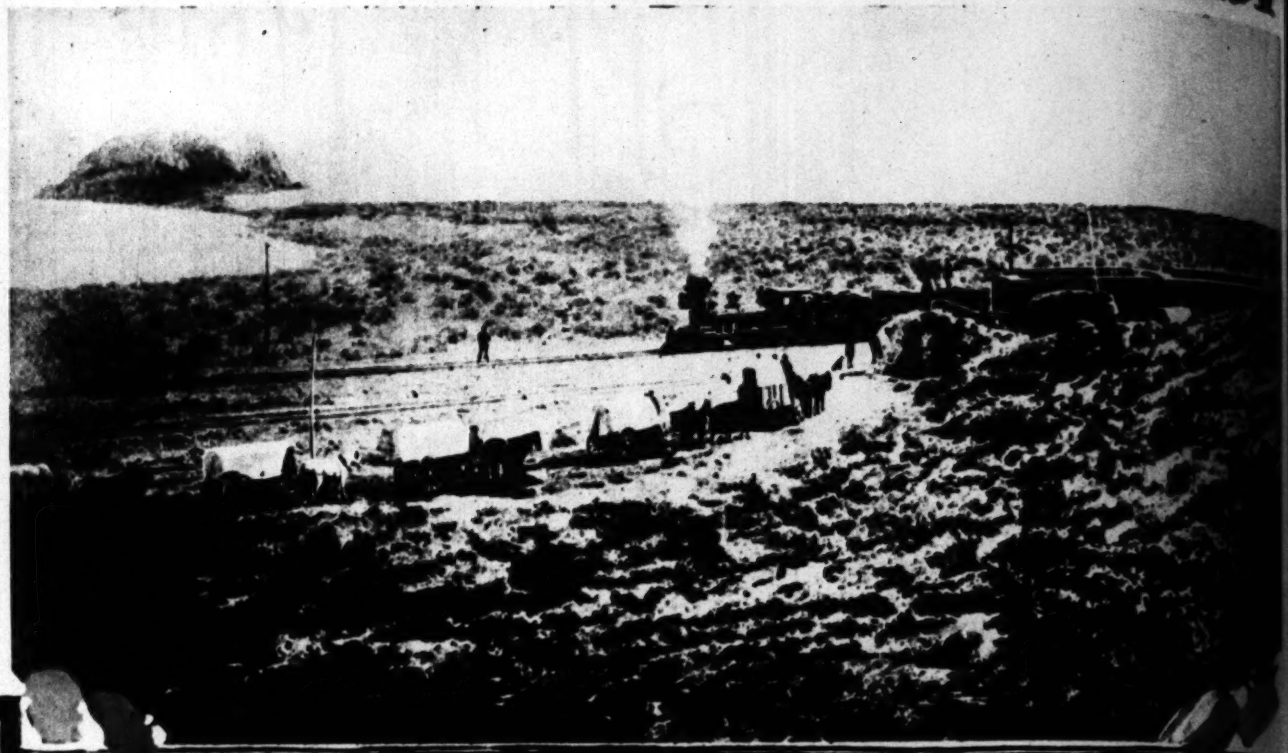
WHEN THE RAILS CAME WEST

Passing Through the Palisades

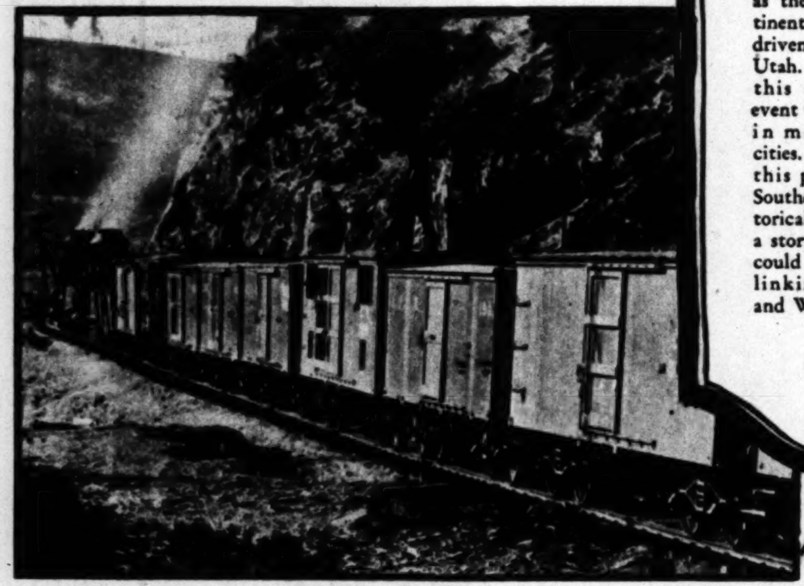
Construction train of the Central Pacific is first train to pass through the Palisades, Nevada, after that section of the first transcontinental railroad was completed in 1868. This was before ballasting.

A Mountain Fill

Note the one-horse dump-carts and the construction foreman on a horse.



SIXTY years ago, May 10, 1869, the golden spike connecting the Central Pacific, now the Southern Pacific, and the Union Pacific as the first transcontinental railway, was driven at Promontory, Utah. Celebrations of this epoch-making event were held Friday in many Western cities. The photos on this page, from the Southern Pacific Historical Collection, tell a story that no words could convey of the linking of the East and West by rail.



A Freight Drag

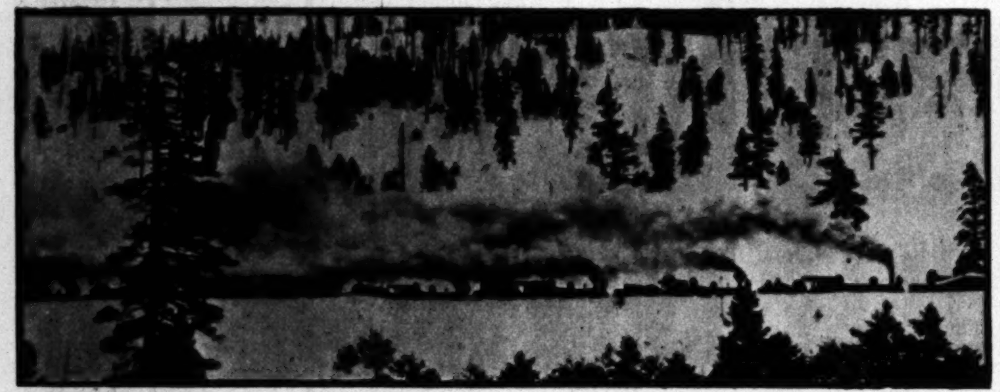
Strobridge, superintendent of construction, who was in charge of the work on that day, is the tall man standing in the center foreground.



Bucking Snow

Keeping the railroad open over the Sierra Nevada Mountains, where the snow often is twenty feet deep, has been one of the Southern Pacific's big operating problems ever since the line of the parent company, the Central Pacific, was opened. Here are seven wood-burning locomotives bucking snow in the early days.

THE LINCOLN

IS AN UNUSUALLY SAFE MOTOR CAR

SAFETY is, and always must be, one of the first considerations in any motor car. It is one of the fundamental principles of Lincoln policy.

Safety in a motor car depends upon a number of things. In the first place, there must be strength . . . strength to resist not only the ordinary strains of motoring, but any sudden shocks. The brakes, obviously, must be dependable and powerful. The glass must be shatter-proof. Acceleration must be fast. . . . And finally, there should be a subtle balance and stability, a sureness of tread, which keeps the car on its feet and holds it to the road.

Among engineers, the strength of Lincoln construction is proverbial. The steel chassis frame is extra strong and heavy, and it is hot-riveted throughout. And in Lincoln bodies the same strength is in evidence. Beneath the luxurious coachwork they are everywhere firmly reinforced and braced.

The Lincoln six-brake system gives positive control of the car. The foot brakes (internal expanding) operate on all four wheels, and the momentum of the car serves in part to apply them, so that they need very little foot pressure. The hand brake is internal expanding on the rear wheels. All six brakes are fully enclosed and protected from dirt and moisture. You can always be sure of your brakes, in a Lincoln.

Shatter-proof glass, of course, is used throughout. And as for riding qualities, the hydraulic shock absorbers, the torque tube drive, the magnificent spring suspension, and the perfect balance of the whole car make it not only safe, but profoundly comfortable and luxurious.

Safety, sincerity, beauty . . . those are the attributes of the Lincoln . . . "as nearly perfect a motor car as it is possible to produce."

From Berlin comes this
[Schlankheitsbad]

THE famous Slim Figure Bath that became the sensation of Europe almost overnight, is now on sale in America! It brings to you the same pleasant, harmless method of reducing your weight that has proved so amazingly successful abroad.

German and English Physicians Pronounce It Absolutely Harmless

Before the first package was sold in Germany, tens of thousands were used in clinical tests by prominent Berlin physicians. The moment Dr. Paul Mueller, official Chief Chemist of the Berlin Chamber of Commerce, and Dr. G. Braun pronounced it absolutely harmless and effective, a wave of Slim Figure Bathing swept over the whole Continent. Millions of packages have been sold in a very few months. In England, the medical profession openly endorses it.

No Dieting or Exercise Necessary

This strange, new, non-salt bath that scorns diet and exercise to get results, immediately began taking off weight. Not in a few cases, but in hundreds of thousands. Men and women alike. In many instances, where other methods had been tried, the Slim Figure Bath was the first and only one to actually take off fat.

LESSER, the Slim Figure Bath, is not a salt but a strictly cosmetic preparation. It is new in principle—new in action—new in effect. By conserving the heat of the body and by encouraging the action of the whole inner system, it invigorates as it reduces. You can ascertain this reduction after each bath!

A Most Exquisite Beauty Bath

But LESSER is more than a reducing bath. It has proved to be a most remarkable skin beautifier. Sallow skin is made clear and lovely. Thousands use it for that alone. Its dainty scent lingers on the body, giving a delightful feeling of sweet cleanliness.

Proved in American Hospital

LESSER, the Slim Figure Bath, was given thorough scientific testing in one of America's foremost and best equipped hospitals. The average loss of weight was nearly two pounds per bath—and in no case was any possibility of harm observed. Try Lesser Bathing yourself—today—and let your scales measure its benefit!

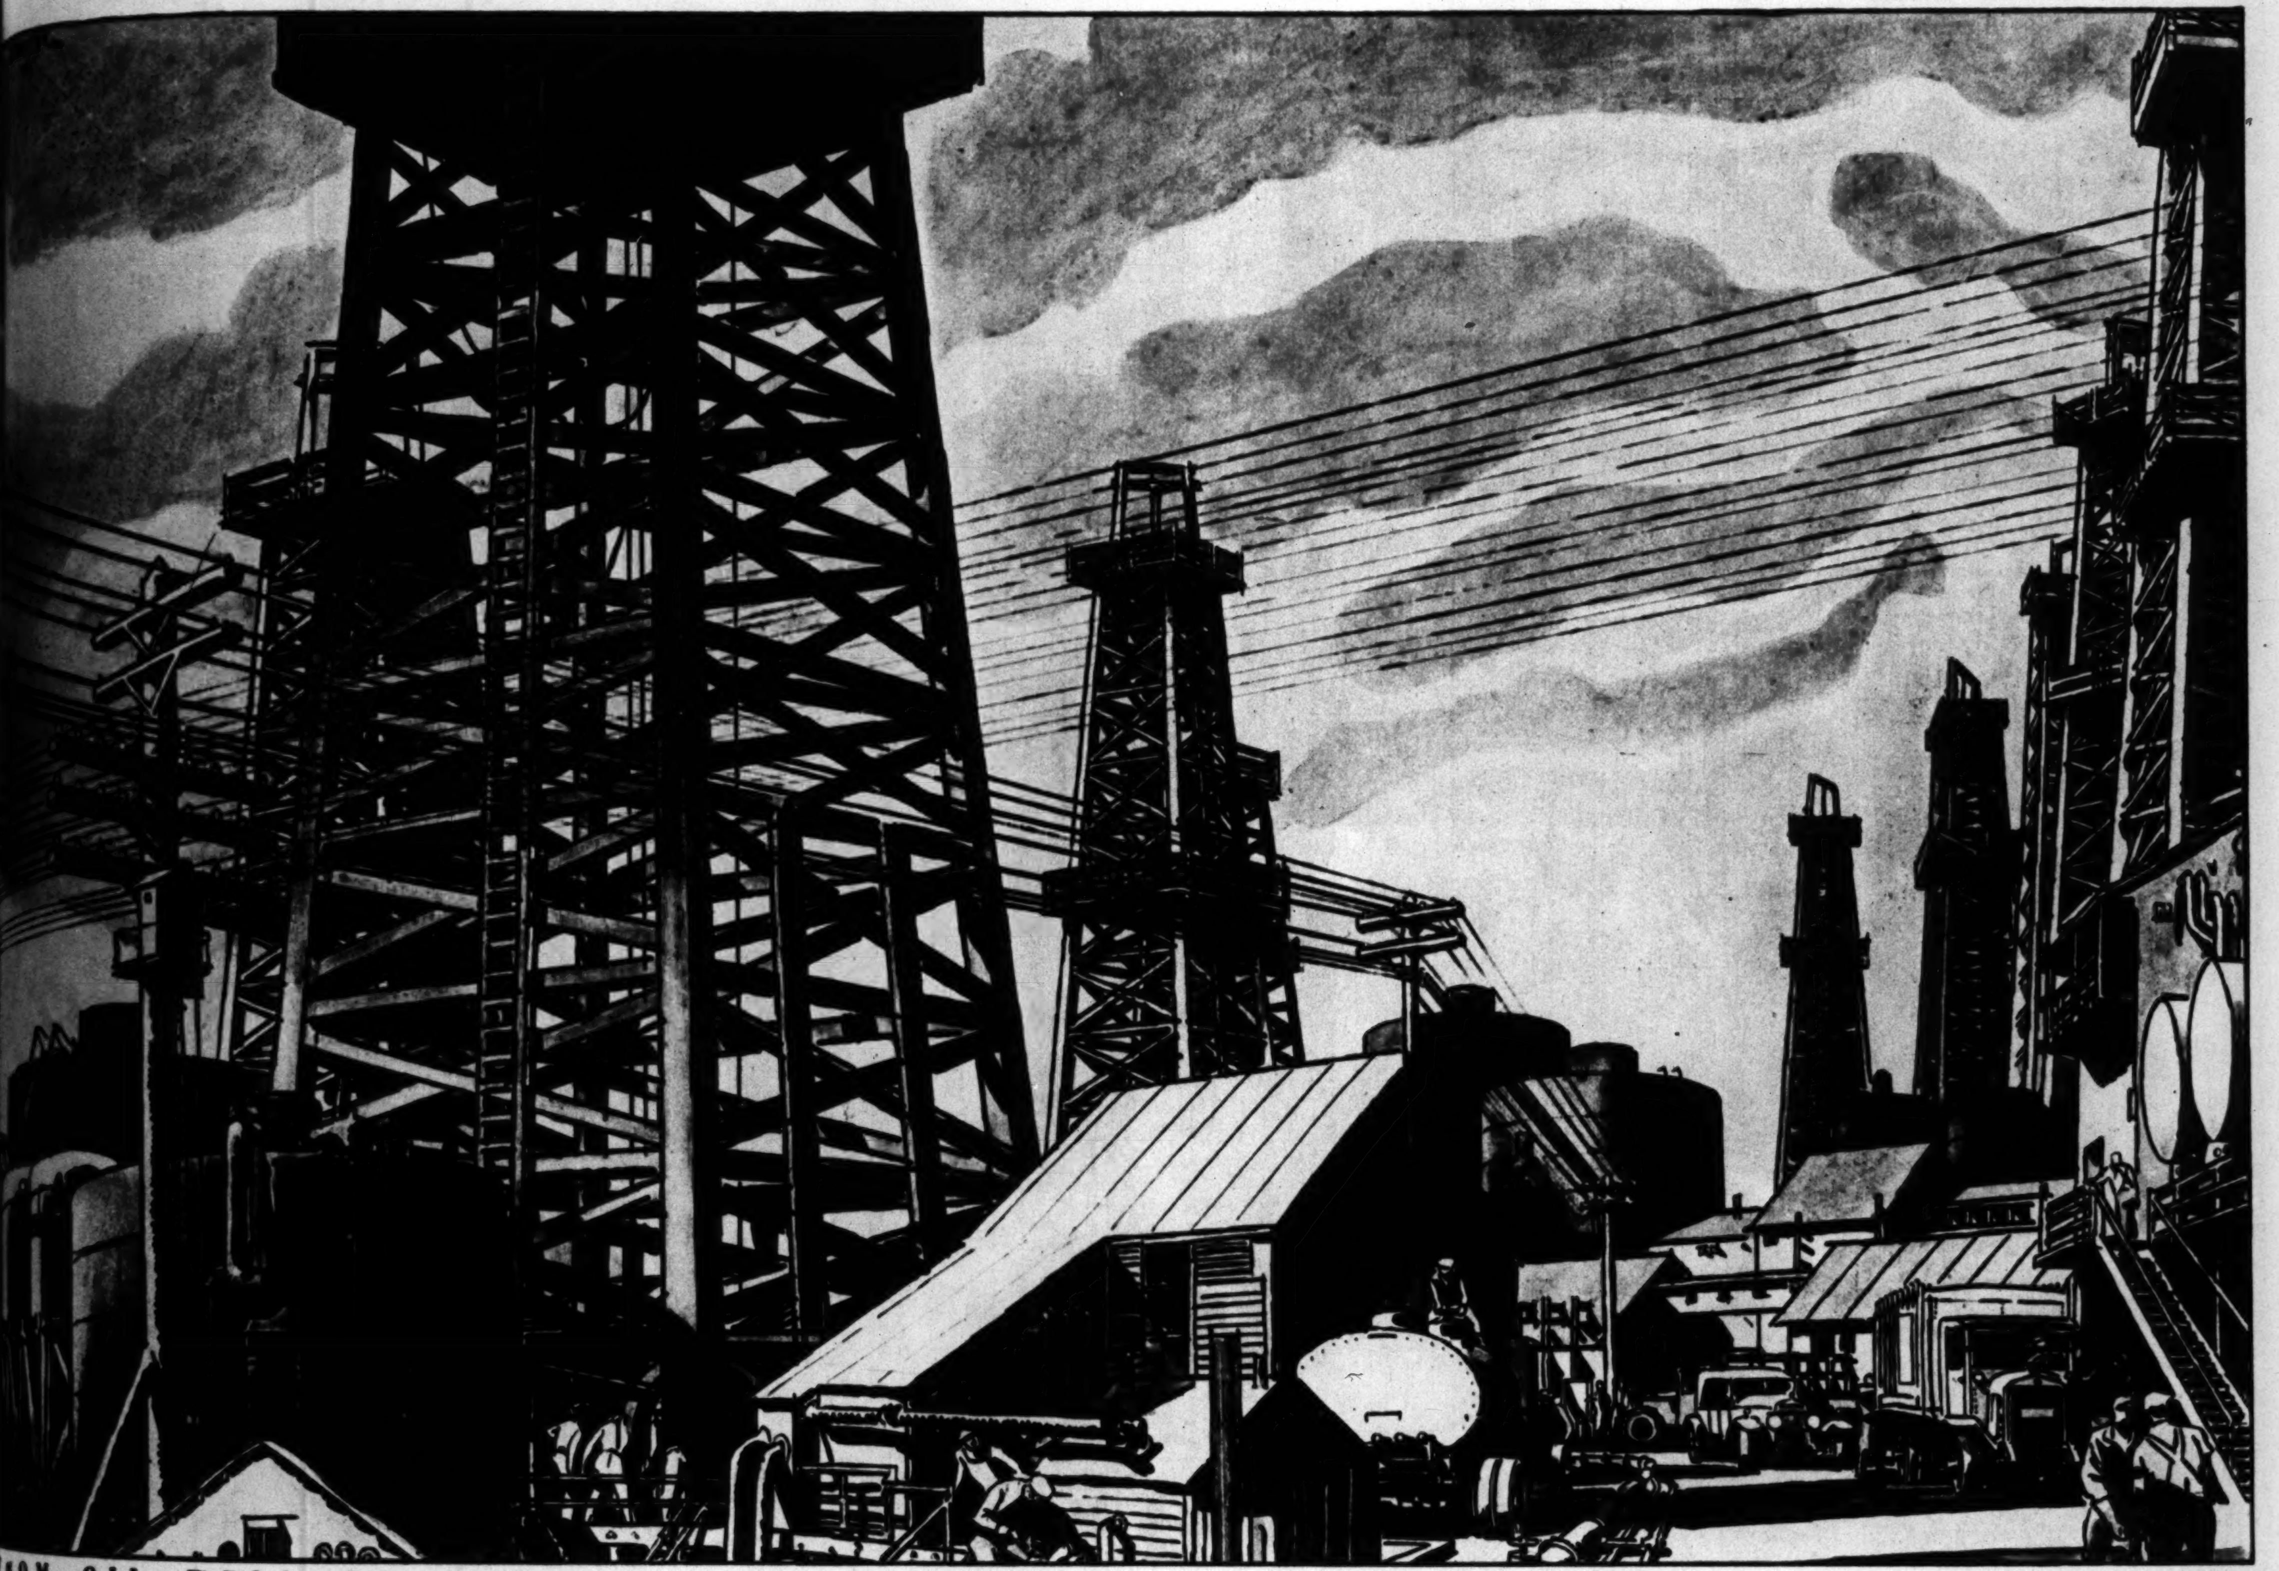
DRAWN FOR WESTINGHOUSE BY C. PETER HELCK



FROM OIL WELL TO FILLING STATION WESTINGHOUSE SERVES THE PETROLEUM INDUSTRY

Electricity brings the oil fields to you

When you fill your car at a nearby gasoline station, or order fuel oil for your furnace, you are probably tapping an oil field that's half a continent away. Electrical equipment—Westinghouse equipment—plays a big part in the economical production and convenient distribution of petroleum products which we enjoy today.

With electric power, drilling operations get under way at once. The unwieldy steam boilers, their troublesome water lines and fuel trains—and their fire hazards—all are left behind.

Electricity provides steady, dependable pumping power where oil is lifted, often a mile or more, from its underground pools. Electric power re-pressures and revives old, abandoned wells, often doubling their total output.

Electricity welds pipe-lines in less time and at less cost than is required to connect them by any other method. Then it stands by, at booster stations, to man the pumps that hurry the oil to its destination—six or six hundred miles away.

Many modern tankers are driven and maneuvered by electricity. Railway tank cars, in increasing numbers, are welded electrically.

On compressors in absorption plants, electricity supplants cumbersome gas engines, eliminating danger from hot exhaust pipes. In refineries, electric motors replace steam engines with their thousands of feet of wasteful piping. At the filling station, electricity pumps your tank full of today's better gasoline.

Westinghouse studied the needs of this eleven-billion dollar industry and co-operated with the industry's engineers in developing much of the special equipment required for its electrification. In every field of industry Westinghouse helps to produce more and better goods for your enjoyment.

A TOP-NOTCH TALKIE

The warehouse robbers are surprised by the "copper," whose being shot is the raison d'etre for the picture.

Few talkies have been more highly praised than "Alibi," which is to make its debut this week. The production achieves most skilfully the combining of sound with action. Adapted from the stage play, "Nightstick," the picture is a vigorous and dramatic affair, dealing with an investigation into the criminal activities of a released convict, who elopes with the daughter of a police officer. The picture is unusually replete with human conflict, and suspense. It was directed by Roland West for United Artists. Its first showing promises to be an event.

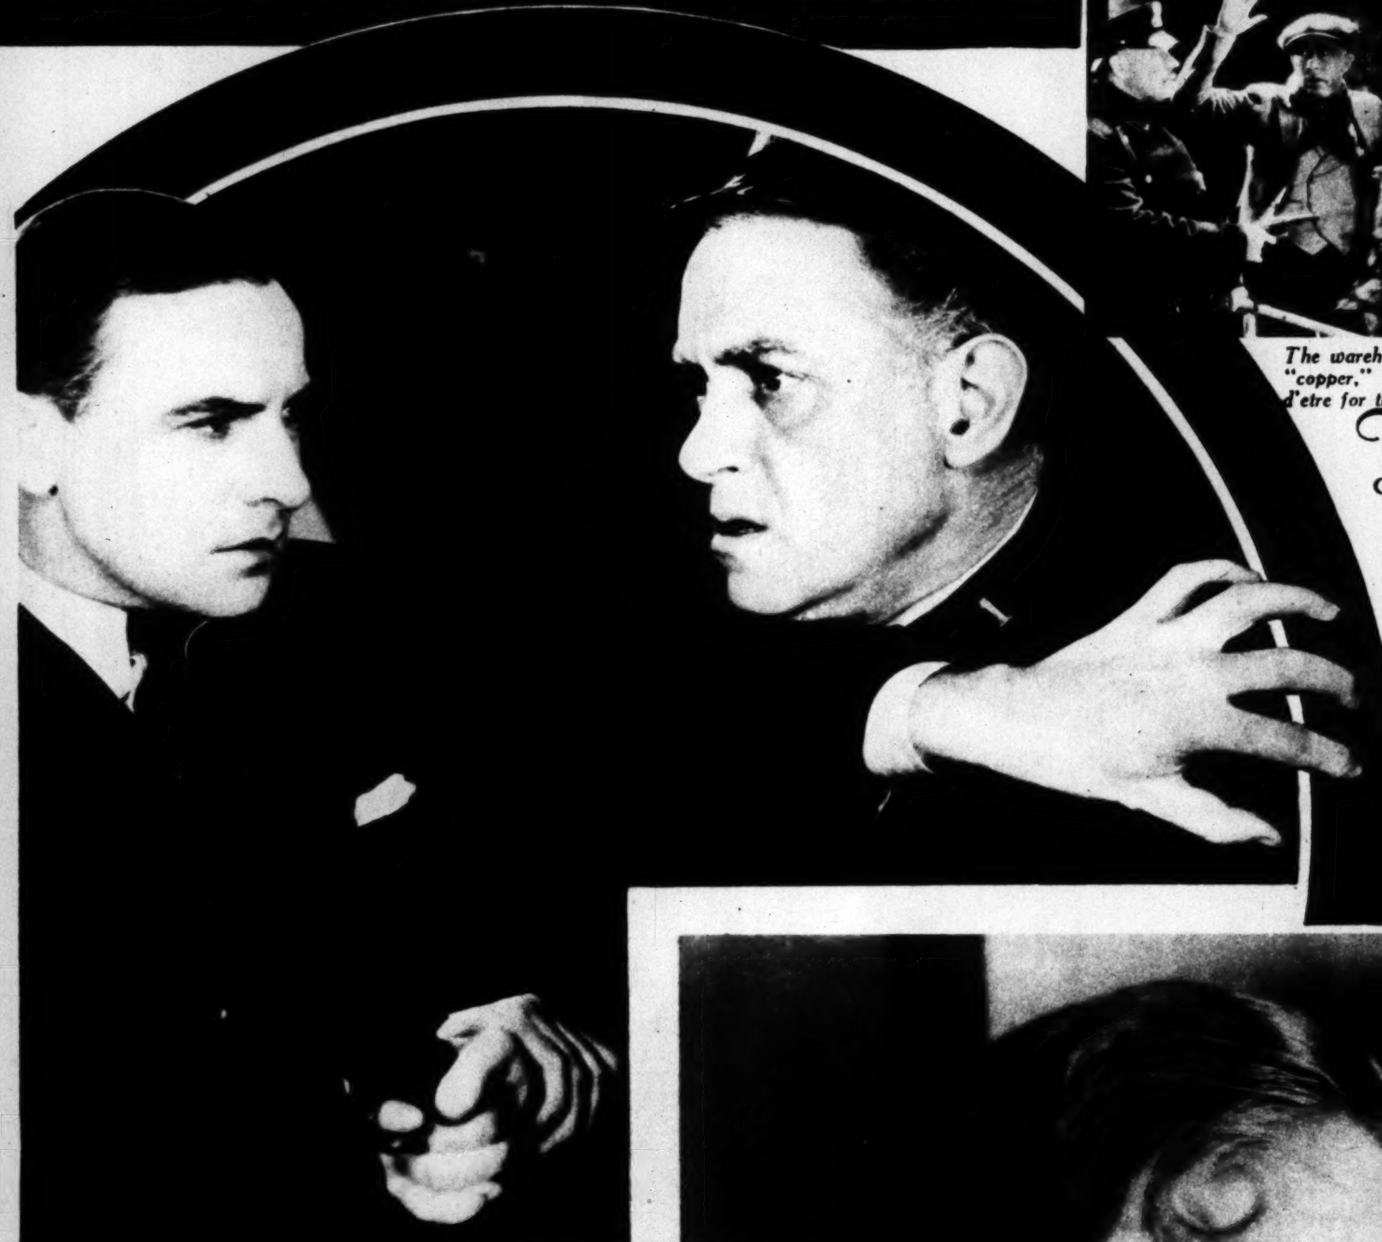
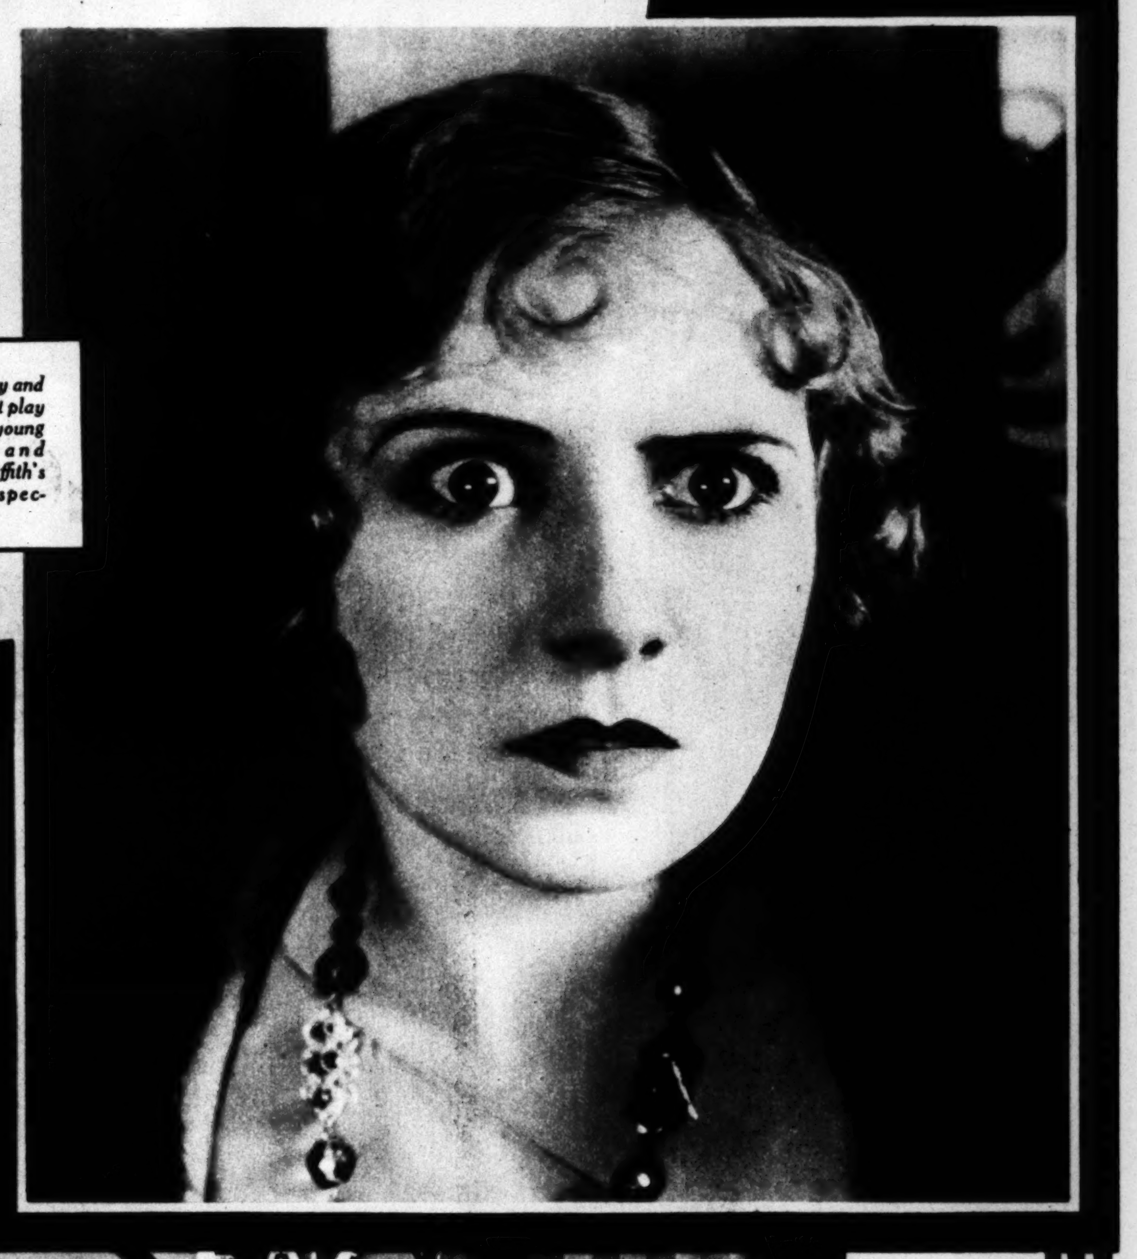
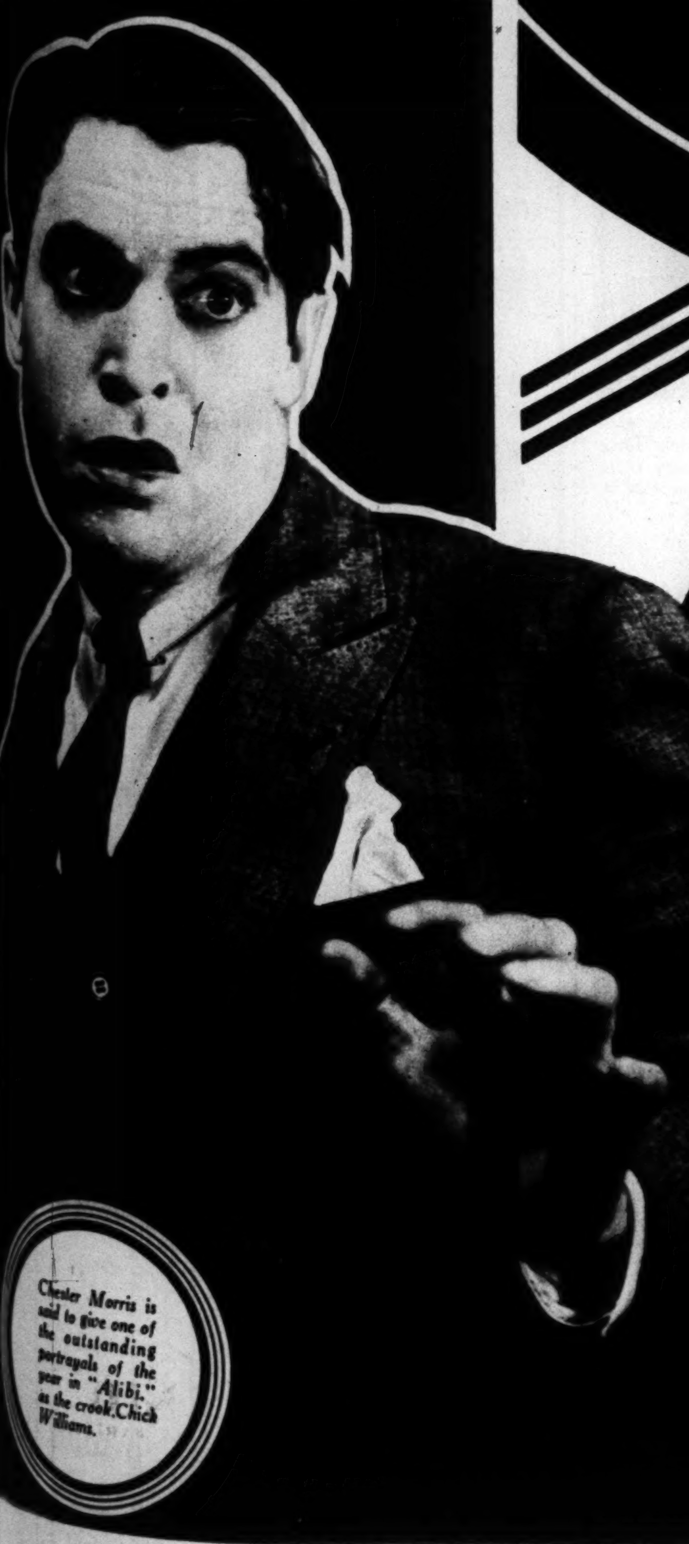
Atmosphere in abundance is provided by such realistic touches as this scene of the police headquarters switchboard.



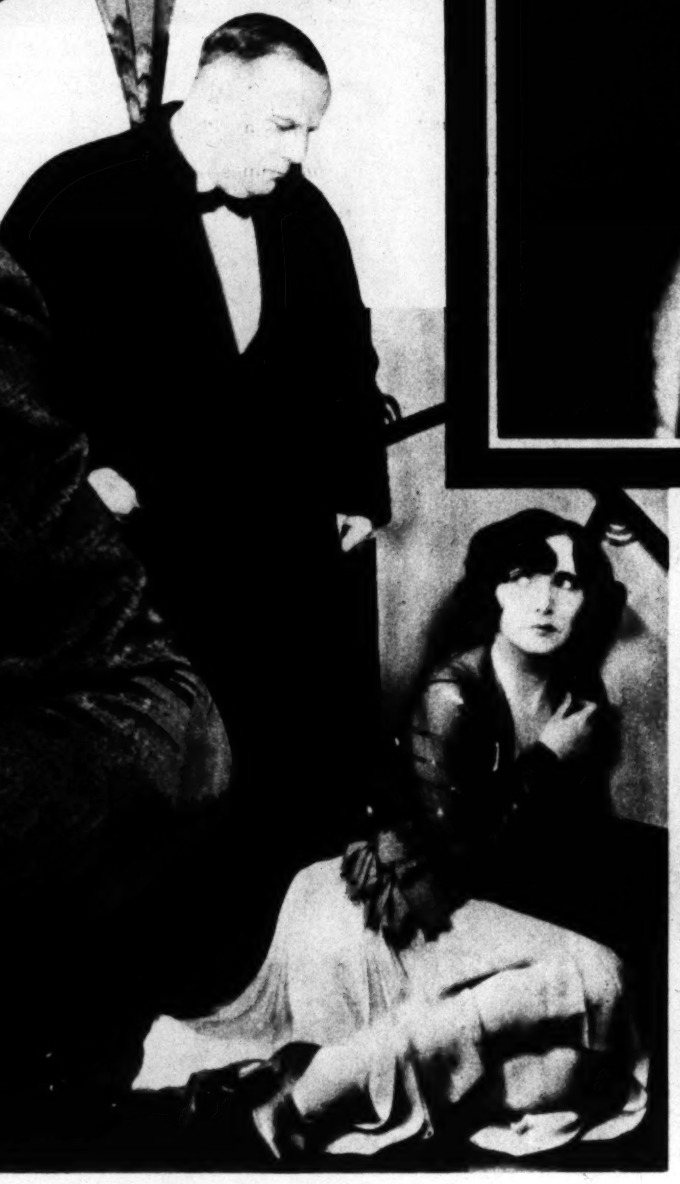
Pat O'Malley and Purnell Pratt play the parts of young detective and Eleanor Griffith's father, respectively.



Eleanor Griffith is a very convincing heroine.



Chester Morris is said to give one of the outstanding portrayals of the year in "Alibi," as the crook, Chick Williams.



Harry Stubbs and Mae Busch are cast in important roles, as gang leaders.

A fashionable night club serves as background for a portion of the plot.

A new idea for evening frocks

Quite the smartest and the newest thing is the evening frock of flat crepe. As done in Paris it is suave and supple, gracefully swinging, intricately cut and deceivingly simple in appearance.

FAWNKREPE,* the classic Cheney flat crepe with its rich suppleness most perfectly interprets such an evening frock. The sketch at the left is one that has just arrived from Paris and we believe is the perfect example of a low-lustre flat crepe evening frock.

You will find FAWNKREPE* at the better shops both in dresses and by the yard in the new summer tan colors that have been tested to harmonize with six summer tanned complexions.

THINC WHEN THINKING OF BEAUTY

Do your eyes look one age and your face another?

DULL, tired eyes belie a youthful face—a clear, fresh skin. They deny your youth—betray neglect. They can add five, ten, even fifteen years to your appearance.

Kathleen Mary Quinlan—beauty specialist—pioneer in the care of the eyes—has perfected a group of preparations to keep eyes young and lovely through the years.

First, bathe your eyes with Kathleen Mary Quinlan Eye Bath. This soothing, fragrant lotion banishes dust and redness—leaves the eyes clearly refreshed.

Next, lightly press rich, nourishing Vah-Dah Eye Cream into the lids and around the eyes. It smooths the delicate skin leaving it firmly young—freeing it of tiny laugh-lines and frown-furrows. Vah-Dah Eye Astringent briskly patted in corrects puffiness and leaves the skin clearly transparent.

After a Kathleen Mary Quinlan Youth-Restoring Eye Treatment, eyes are again brilliant, sparkling, youthful.

The atmosphere of the Tropics
Carroll Nye, Ruth Chatterton.

ONCE in an elder day of the screen "Madame X" thrilled the public. The picture was then silent, and Pauline Frederick played the title role.

"Madame X" in its new version is all-talking. Ruth Chatterton is featured, with Lewis Stone as the husband, and Raymond Hackett as the son. The new "Madame X" will thrill anew.

The production has been adapted from the stage play by Alexandre Bisson. It has, however, been re-dialogued by Willard Mack, who knows his theatre. Mack himself appears in the film for a brief bit as a doctor, though he uses the name, John P. Edington.

This is a story to touch the heart. Miss Chatterton's deeply emotional interpretation of the mother is adequate to do that. She is an actress of quality.

The scene in the court room, always the big scene in the picture, when Raymond Hackett pleads for her life, is high torture of the sympathies. It is bound to stir audiences to the depths.

Ina Claire's advent into the films should be welcome news. The star of many stage successes, and a comedienne of rare ability, her first picture for Pathe will be an original story by Arthur Richmond, New York playwright.

"MADAME X" THRILLS ANEW WITH SOB APPEAL

Ruth Chatterton, Lewis Stone, Raymond Hackett and Lionel Barrymore as director all garner honors.

The atmosphere of the Tropics is attained in the Malay sequence. Carroll Nye, Ruth Chatterton, Mitchell Lewis and Sojin appear.

ONCE in an elder day of the screen "Madame X" thrilled the public. The picture was then silent, and Pauline Frederick played the title role.

"Madame X" in its new version is all-talking. Ruth Chatterton is featured, with Lewis Stone as the husband, and Raymond Hackett as the son. The new "Madame X" will thrill anew.

The production has been adapted from the stage play by Alexandre Bisson. It has, however, been redesigned by Willard Mack, who knows his theatre. Mack himself appears in the film for a brief bit as a doctor, though he uses the name John P. Edington.

This is a story to touch the heart. Miss Chatterton's deeply emotional interpretation of the mother is adequate to do that. She is an actress of quality.

The scene in the court room, always the big scene in the picture, when Raymond Hackett pleads for her life, is high torture of the sympathies. It is bound to stir audiences to the depths.

As a talkie, "Madame X" is skillfully made. It could have had more atmosphere in some of the foreign episodes, but the dramatic interest is consistently preserved. The picture will be a talkie winner.

Lewis Stone exhibits fine polish in his work, and more than that attains a marked emotional verity. I do not recall having seen him do any role with more abundant feeling. Ulrich Haupt is responsible for a fine portrayal.

Lionel Barrymore's direction is amazingly good for an introductory production. He has staged with great intensity the trial. Hackett's speech is handled in a particularly powerful way, with the audience viewing a close-up of the son and his mother simultaneously while the boy's plea is in progress.

Miss Chatterton touches rare heights in this episode, and her restraint through the production will add measurably to her prominence. She is already outstanding as a personality in the new medium.

The scenes between Madame X, as played by Miss Chatterton, and Raymond Hackett exert tremendous emotional appeal.

Lewis Stone gives a very finished interpretation of the husband, Floriot.

Ulrich Haupt will find wide popularity for his villainizing.

"Her proportions are perfect" writes Ziegfeld to Phoenix

Average in size . . . ideal in shape . . Barbara Newberry's legs form the pattern for exquisitely knitted stockings

No person in all the world is better qualified to judge of feminine loveliness than Florenz Ziegfeld, internationally famous producer. In his twenty years' experience in the theatre he has employed more than 6000 beautiful girls . . . Naturally, then, it was to him that Phoenix turned in looking for the most beautiful legs in America. For stockings knit by a wonderful process, it was desired to find a pair of ideal legs, average in size, perfect in shape . . . Nearly 300 girls in five of his current productions competed in Mr. Ziegfeld's contest. Measurements were taken and averaged, with the result that Barbara Newberry won the coveted title—Miss Phoenix . . . Following the lines of Miss Newberry's legs, Phoenix stockings are now knit by the Accurator process. Distinctive to Phoenix, this method which counts and gauges every stitch, produces hosiery of far greater beauty, lustre and allurement . . . Ask in the stores for the lovely, new, full-fashioned Phoenix. Whatever your size, you will find they fit marvelously and give the flattering illusion of perfection . . . $1.50, $1.95, $2.95.

Florenz Ziegfeld's booklet, "How I Selected America's Most Beautiful Legs", will be sent you for the asking. Address, F. Ziegfeld, Ziegfeld Theatre, Fifty-fourth Street and Sixth Avenue, New York City

Gentlemen:

In my twenty years' experience producing the Follies and other large productions, I have employed somewhat over six thousand beautiful girls. In selecting this number, I have seen and passed on considerably over a half million applicants and, in my opinion, American girls today are more beautiful than ever before in the history of our country, due to modern conveniences, freedom in dress, exercise and greater care of their bodies.

Miss Barbara Newberry's proportions are so perfect and her legs so ideally suited to your most exacting requirements that I suggest, in order to perpetuate the graceful contour of her shapely limbs, that you have them cast in bronze as a permanent record of dimensions.

Very truly yours

"The RAINBOW MAN"

Scenes between Dowling and Frankie Darro are blessed with [illegible] sincerity and touching promise.

Marian Nixon's appearance opposite Dowling is embellished with rare qualities.

Eddie Dowling proves entertaining star in meritorious singing and talking picture.

By WHITNEY WILLIAMS

A TEAR and a sob and a laugh. That's "The Rainbow Man."

Without any reservations whatsoever, I may recommend this picture, starring Eddie Dowling. Dowling, in case you of the motion picture public do not know, is one of Broadway's most brilliant and famous musical comedy stars—and "The Rainbow Man" marks his debut on the screen. May he make many more.

It is of the minstrel shows, and the heartbreaks and the joys. The tragedies that the public knows little about, and the success that the public so enjoys. Pathos, humor, song and romance, all blended into as ideal entertainment as the screen has seen this year.

Dowling should go far in his new medium. His voice and personality and ability are so well adapted to talking pictures that any producer in the field would declare him a real find. His manner in putting over a song would make him outstanding in any production, and he carries unconscious appeal.

"The Rainbow Man" has already been described as a "natural." In theatrical parlance, this interpreted means that it contains all the elements that go to make a feature a certain success.

It has also been said that it is crammed full of hokum. It is. But it is so well disguised that one doesn't mind in the slightest—any more than he objected to that in "The Singing Fool."

The picture is almost in nine reels, longer than the average length. One finds, in viewing it, that it is far too short. It has three very lovely songs. One would welcome more, the tunes are so lilting and the airs so catchy. "Sleepy Valley," sung a number of times by Dowling, will doubtless be one of the most popular of any theme songs yet heard.

A flying acrobat dies in the beginning, and leaves his little son to the care of his only friend. The pair, the man, Rainbow, and the boy, Billy, go into Doc. Hardy's Minstrel Shows, and Rainbow becomes a hit.

When they reach Arcadia, Rainbow meets the daughter of the hotel keeper and falls in love. He is kicked out into the rain that night and warned never to see Mary again. Discharged, he and Billy go to New York.

But work is difficult to find and soon they have no money. The morning that their money runs out, Mary arrives—she is Billy's aunt. There is insurance money, for Billy. And Mary cannot return to her home, because her father has forced her, too, to leave. She has come to be near Billy—and Rainbow.

From there the story runs on to a very natural finish. In words, the plot sounds hackneyed—on the screen, one is torn for pity of the three, Rainbow, Mary and Billy. It is all so logical when actually viewed—mere words cannot adequately do justice. Suffice it to say that the conclusion is most effective and satisfying.

Eddie Dowling wrote, as well as acted in, "The Rainbow Man," and he chose for his cast Marian Nixon, as Mary; Frankie Darro, as Billy; Sam Hardy, as Doc. Hardy, and Lloyd Ingraham, as Mary's father. All give highly commendable performances. Particularly are Miss Nixon and Frankie Darro seen at their best. Each gives the finest portrayal of her and his, respectively, career.

"The Rainbow Man" is a Sono Art Production and was given very able direction by Fred Newmeyer. His deft handling of scenes and situations is touched by refreshing ingenuity at times, and the picture is far and away his finest attempt at directing. Frances Agnew wrote the continuity, and the three songs, "Sleepy Valley," "Rainbow Man" and "Little Pal," were composed by James Hanley.

CRISCO
For Frying For Shortening For Cake Making
In its new air-tight can—as fresh and sweet as the day it was made
TWO little children are responsible for this extra-quick Crisco shortcake. With their puppy they wandered out one afternoon to hunt wild berries and returned, tired and bedraggled, after supper had been put on the table. "They wanted their berries in a shortcake," writes their mother, "but I couldn't stop to make it the usual way. So I melted the Crisco. This did away with the need to cut the Crisco into the flour and speeded up the recipe, so that before we'd finished eating, the cake was out of the oven—as brown and crunchy as any made the old slow way."
You'll find, too, that Crisco gives freshness and sweetness to shortbread made either this new quick way or by your own favorite recipe. For Crisco tastes very good all by itself—nicer than you ever imagined a shortening could be.
QUICK STRAWBERRY SHORTCAKE
1½ cups flour 3 teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt ⅓ cup melted Crisco
2 tablespoons sugar ⅔ cup milk
1 egg, well beaten
Sift dry ingredients together and stir in milk and melted Crisco which has been added to beaten egg. (Mix lightly, do not beat.) Spoon into Criscoed cake tin, and bake for 15 minutes in hot oven (450° F.). Let cool slightly, split cake and fill with crushed sweetened strawberries. Serve with plain or whipped cream. Any fresh fruit can be used with this shortcake.
Yes, Springtime in a Pudding
When I was a little girl, rhubarb and sassafras tea were just as much signs of spring as the first robin. Since I have grown up I have been able to get along without sassafras tea, but spring wouldn't be spring without rhubarb. Here's another way to serve it—in a simple, quick cottage pudding. A pudding made with Crisco, a shortening that reminds me of spring, too—it's so clean and fresh and sweet. If you'll taste Crisco all by itself you'll understand why it can't help but make anything you put it in taste better.
RHUBARB COTTAGE PUDDING
½ cup Crisco 2 cups flour ½ teaspoon salt
1¼ cups sugar 2 teaspoons baking powder
1 egg beaten ½ teaspoon ginger
1 cup unsweetened cooked rhubarb
Blend Crisco and sugar. Add beaten egg and rhubarb. Sift dry ingredients and add to mixture. Beat thoroughly. Bake in Criscoed loaf tin in moderate oven (350° F.) for 1 hour. Serve hot with favorite pudding sauce.

FOR THE WOMAN WHO MAKES LIFE MORE THAN A MERE ROUTINE

Not for her a dull, humdrum way of living! But a life, overflowing in its activity, brilliant in its charm

ARE you the type of woman, to whom health, energy and vitality are essential? Then the protection afforded by this new knowledge of The Danger Line is vital to you.

Thousands, dentists tell us, are stricken with serious illness—rheumatism—heart and nervous disorders—simply because of decaying teeth and infected gums. And that, not through neglect! For teeth, we know now, must not only be brushed, they must also be protected against the acids which attack tooth enamel and irritate the gums.

At The Danger Line, where gums meet teeth, the delicate gum edges form little V-shaped crevices. There, food particles collect and ferment. There, acids are formed that cause decay and dangerous gum irritations. These acids must be neutralized if you would avoid trouble.

Squibb's Dental Cream was developed in collaboration with leading dental authorities, to bring you this protection. It contains more than 50 per cent of Squibb's Milk of Magnesia, recognized everywhere as the safest and most effective antacid for use in the mouth. When you use Squibb's, it not only neutralizes the acids then in your mouth, but brings protection for a considerable time.

Visit your dentist at least twice a year. Use Squibb's Dental Cream regularly. It is effective—it makes teeth lustrous—it is pleasant and it contains no grit nor harsh astringents to irritate the delicate mouth tissues. You can use it to brush the gums as you should do to keep them healthy. It is safe to use in the tender mouths of children. Buy Squibb's today. Only 40c a large tube. E. R. "AND Charlie Chaplin is going to be there to christen—" I began.

"Well, if Charlie Chaplin is going to be there, I don't care whether it's a christening or a funeral—I mean to be there, too, if I'm invited," Stella interrupted.

"Oh, well, just in case curiosity gets the best of you," I went on, "Charlie is going to christen the thirty-four-foot boat in which Steve Miranda, the son of Tom Miranda, the writer, and Steve's friend, Daniel Blum, are going to sail around the world. The boat is to be called the Nomad, and the christening is to be done at San Pedro. And it's this afternoon."

MARY FORD, Jack Ford's beautiful wife, took us down there in her new Rolls-Royce. We found some people already gathered about the craft, which was drawn up at a tiny dock in the inner harbor, and it looked awfully small to us, even to travel to San Diego. Tom and Mrs. Miranda, the latter looking young and pretty enough in her white sport outfit to be Steve's sister instead of his mother, were talking to Steve and Daniel, who both looked handsome in their uniforms.

Steve went into the navy when he was only thirteen years old, and understands everything about running a boat. He is even a licensed radio operator. We decided that that radio set might look awfully good to Steve and Daniel one of these days, out in the midst of a stormy ocean.

Steve and Daniel have both written for publication, and they are now planning a sea story for one of the picture companies. They are taking the trip under the auspices of the Adventurers of the World Club, and Col. Edward Bailey, president, was on hand to make a little speech at the proper moment.

Sue Carol and Nick Stuart were there, and Arthur Lake, Betty Blair and Helen Ferguson, and presently a neat little power craft approached, with a lady waving wildly, while a man let go the wheel a moment to touch his hat in salute. When they got close enough we saw the passenger and crew were, respectively, Belle Bennett and her husband, Fred Windermere, who had arrived in style in their own boat, the Dove. Belle looked very handsome in her pretty sport suit.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN arrived just then, looking as natty and ruddy—the latter from sailing his own boat, named The Kid—as you could wish to see the world's most famous comedian looking. He brought Georgia Hale with him. Georgia carried a huge bouquet of roses, which are always a necessary part of the props at a boat christening, Heaven knows why. Probably it's because most ladies who christen boats aren't as sweet and pretty as Georgia, so they have to doll up with flowers.

Charlie was immensely interested in the boat—went all over it, and congratulated the boys on being able to seek adventure while they are still young and full of enthusiasm. He said, very wistfully, we thought, that he wished he were going with the boys on their trip. Charlie is crazy about boats.

EVERYBODY pointed out to us solemnly that the Nomad was sailing under the flag of the Adventurers, and that only two other flags had been issued, one to Commander Byrd, the Antarctic explorer, and the other to Lindbergh.

"But I'd need more than a flag to make me sail anywhere in that tiny boat," said Sue Carol.

And when we told Charlie that the boys expected to be sailing on that boat for four years, he confessed to us that he thought two people in that small cabin might quarrel.

A certain oil company is furnishing the boys with all their fuel, and Sue said that she meant to buy a yacht to see if she could get something like that done for her.

PRESENTLY everybody was ready for the ceremony, and Charlie broke the bottle of ginger-ale, dolled up to look like champagne, on the bow of the boat, said a few words, and the ceremony was over.

Charlie demanded to meet the crew, whereupon Captain Stetson appeared, and Charlie shook hands with him.

"But there's one member of our company you haven't met yet," remarked Steve, producing a small thin canine of uncertain breed, but nice dog manners, and Charlie was called on kiddingly to christen him Salty Marco Polo, which he did with his funny little grin, entirely entering into the spirit of the thing. Salty, it seemed, had been very seasick, which accounted for his "thinth." He had fallen into the ocean, too, so that it was no wonder if he looked a little low in his mind, even the fact that he met Charlie failing to cheer him up.

BELLE and Fred invited us to take a little ride in their boat, and we did, skimming along over the blue waters happily.

Mrs. Ford told us how her husband, Jack Ford, is leaving shortly for Annapolis, where she lived when she was a young girl, to make scenes for his picture. And how Jack was going to use some of the incidents of her girlhood, when she used to entertain the handsome Annapolis students, in his picture.

Belle said that the young bandit, who had held up her and Fred after Blanche Upright's party, had been captured, how he turned out to be a minister's son, and how he had confessed that he had had his gun all cocked to shoot Fred if Fred said a word.

We docked just as the sun was setting, saying a gay good-bye, and voiced a pleased and eager acceptance of Belle's invitation to take a week-end trip with her and Fred some day soon.

"WHEN Mrs. Ray Rockett gives a party for Mrs. Al Rockett, or indeed at any other time, don't miss it," adjured Stella.

"As if you had to tell me that," I answered.

The affair was a luncheon, given in honor of Mrs. Rockett's birthday, and the house was overflowing with guests when we arrived.

Mary Brian and Doris Dawson were being greeted just as we came in, and we found Fritzi Ridgway, Rosa Roma, Irene Day, Marceline Day, Mrs. M. H. Hoffman, Jackie Saunders, Grace Simpson, Ona Brown, Doris Arbuckle, Ruth Collier, Mrs. Ned Marin, Mrs. Richard Wallace, Jane Winton, Loris Fox, Mrs. Gunther Lessing, Peggy Hamilton, Minna Wallis, Mrs. Helen Wolff, Mrs. Chester Franklin, and a dozen others.

Mrs. Ray Rockett announced seriously during lunch that we were to have as a special treat a radio connection with New York, and presently a speaker came on to announce that we were listening to Loew's State station in the metropolis. We were much impressed, of course.

THE announcer said he was glad to be speaking to sunny California—it was raining outside, and we all snickered—and that he was glad to be able to announce that among the guests was Mrs. Doris Arbuckle—"known on the screen as Flora Finch," he added. That's when we began to smell a mouse.

And when he went on to say that he also introduced Mary Brian, "whom we all know as Mrs. Buddy Rogers," and Doris Dawson, "known on the screen as Lucille La Verne," we were sure there was some hocus-pocus somewhere. It revealed itself when a young man, who turned out to be Billy Wickersham, dashed out of an adjoining room, while the radio went dead, and demanded a drink of water—or something.

After that, when the announcer told us that "Peggy Hamilton's styles were known in New York, and even in Hoboken," we refused to get excited, but we had a lot of laughs over the kidding quips.

Mrs. Gunther Lessing, wife of the attorney, told us how a casting director had seen her at the last Mayfair, when she was wearing dark powder and her hair bushed up, and had offered to give her a screen test. She was all eagerness over it.

DOLLIE ROCKETT, our guest of honor, was looking lovely as usual, and had tried her best to look surprised when she came in and saw us all. We told her she was a good actress and should really be working in her husband's company.

We heard an airship droning overhead, and supposed that it was probably Doris Arbuckle's aviator-admirer, Lieut. Victor Bertrandais—that being the closest he could get to Doris, and not being allowed to drop notes down to her.

Doris Arbuckle, Fritzi Ridgway and Loris Fox all being from Montana, had a grand time chatting about their childhood days.

"In other words," put in Fritzi, "we knew each other when—."

There was a big birthday cake to eat and there were cards to play, and everybody voted Dollie's party a great success, and Mrs. Ray a wonderful hostess.

The Truth About Fat

Modern Science Finds a Cause—Easy to Correct —A Weak Gland

Excess fat was once ascribed to laziness or over-eating. The remedy was starvation and strenuous exercise. But such aids are hard and harmful when carried to extremes.

Then science found a great cause in an under-active gland. That gland largely controls nutrition. Its weakness permits too much food to form fat.

These research men tried feeding a gland food to correct that deficiency. Thousands of tests were made on animals, then on people. The results were so general, so helpful, so amazing that physicians the world over now employ this method in treating obesity.

Then a famous medical laboratory embodied this method in a tablet, for easy, economical use. The name is Marmola prescription tablets. People have now used them for 22 years—millions of boxes of them. Users told their friends.

Now in every circle one can see the changed conditions. Excess fat is far less common. Slenderness prevails. Countless people have gained new beauty, new youth, new health and vitality. This modern method forms a major reason, whether prescribed by physicians or taken in Marmola.

The prescription is not secret. The complete formula of Marmola appears in every box. The good results are explained. Every user thus knows just how the effects occur.

No starvation, no over-exertion, but moderation helps. Take four tablets of Marmola daily until the excess disappears. Then simply use Marmola to control the fat if necessary. You may never need it again.

This method is scientific; it is right. It has proved itself for 22 years. Learn what others know about it, in fairness to yourself. Don't wait longer—start today.

Sold by all druggists at $1 a box. Any druggist who is out will order from his jobber.

YSTERY FILM ENLIVENED BY COMEDY

"The Studio Murder Mystery" combines the essentials of both comedy and drama.

About Frederick March's murder is the story woven.—Photo by Richee.

By WHITNEY WILLIAMS

IF YOU like your murder mystery smacking of a bit of humor, lightly treated, no doubt you'll enjoy "The Studio Murder Mystery," which Frank Tuttle directed for Paramount. There are moments when you are almost led to believe that the production is a satire on the solution of all homicidal perplexities, but a general summing up convinces one finally that it is freshness of direction only.

Who killed Frederick March? Found dead on a studio set, his murder points to five people: Warner Oland, who was directing March in his first picture, while knowing that March had carried on an affair with his wife; Florence Eldridge, March's wife, who had discovered him in a new love affair with the daughter of the studio night watchman; Doris Hill, the watchman's daughter, who had hysterically threatened to make him suffer for his false promises of marriage; Gardner James, Doris Hill's brother, who was aware of his sister's secret trysts with March; and Guy Oliver, the night watchman and father of Doris Hill, who also knew of his daughter's betrayal by March.

Police grill these suspects, and Guy Oliver admits he knows the identity of the murderer. But as he is about to make his disclosure, he drops dead—a poison victim!

Doris Hill, enmeshed by circumstantial evidence, is convicted of both crimes. She is sentenced to die.

There you have the story, or the beginning of it—work it our yourself. Who killed Frederick March? The plot is fairly well constructed, but it lacks real suspense. It is not difficult, either, to guess the person who committed the crime. One cannot be certain, of course, until the final expose, but all the same your suspicions, if you know your murder clues, are well-founded.

Interest in the picture will undoubtedly be heightened by most of the action taking place in a motion picture studio. It shows life behind the camera and the atmosphere is excellently portrayed. While not designed primarily to be a story of studio life, a glimpse of it as it actually appears is gained. You'll like it, I think.

At frequent intervals the action becomes quite flippant, which you may or may not accept. Personally, I believe this element of flippancy was a bit overplayed. With so serious a thing as murder as a subject it is scarcely in order. Yet it does not particularly detract.

The story was written by the Edingtons, Ethel Doherty is responsible for the screen play, and adaptation and dialogue are from the pen of the director, Tuttle.

There is a thrilling fight in the last reel between Neil Hamilton (he's the hero, so, of course, how could he do the dastardly deed?) and the actual murderer that is well worth commenting upon. Quite naturally, too, the heroine is saved from the gallows in the very nick of time, and all, except the bad, old villain, live happily ever after. At least, Hamilton and Doris Hill marry.

In addition to those already named, the cast includes Chester Conklin, Eugene Pallett, Donald Mackenzie, Jack Luden, E. H. Calvert, Lane Chandler, Lawford Davidson, Mary Foy and Mischa Auer.

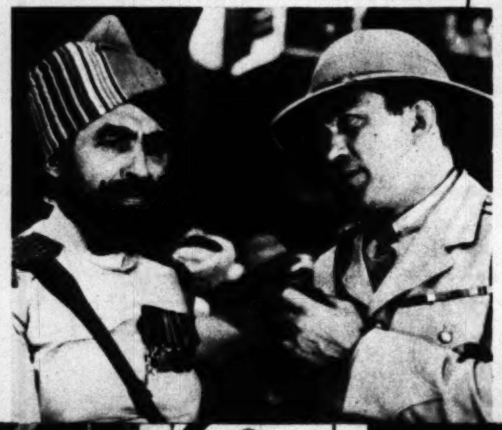
DRAMA of THE KHYBER PASS

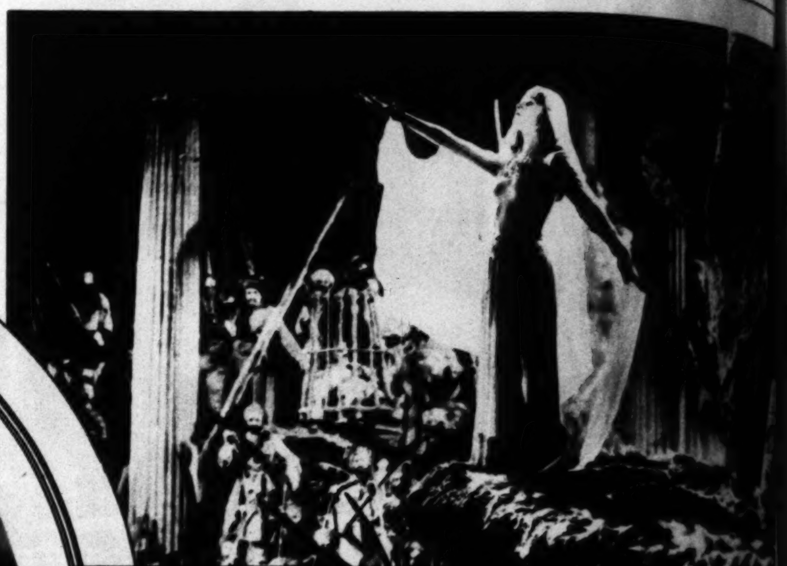
McLaglen disguised as a native sees the fate of a man who has preceded him on the same mission.



Mitchell Lewis aids McLaglen in his attempt to quell the approaching holy war.

Mitchell Lewis uses fiery means to persuade Walter Long to reveal where the stored-up ammunition of the hill tribes about to revolt is secreted.

Victor McLaglen in the dress uniform of the Scottish Black Watch regiment.



INDIA, land of mosques and minarets, of restless natives and diabolical intrigue, the land woven so deftly into story form by Kipling—this same India forms the background for most of the action of "The Black Watch," featuring Victor McLaglen, which opened during the past week at the Carthay Circle Theatre.

Adapted from Talbot Munday's story, "King of the Khyber Rifles," it will undoubtedly appeal to all with a love of adventure. It deals with an officer of a Highland regiment being sent on a secret mission to India, the night his own regiment crosses the Channel to enter the War. He is branded as a slacker by his comrades. The successful accomplishment of his dangerous assignment makes up the bulk of the drama.

With McLaglen in this production, which John Ford directed for Fox, are Myrna Loy, Mitchell Lewis, Roy d'Arcy, David Rollins, Walter Long and others.

Myrna Loy plays the part of Yasmini, a beautiful Indian woman whom the hill tribes regard as a goddess and their natural leader.

To gain the confidence of Yasmini, McLaglen, as Captain King, makes violent love to her.

As Rowa Chunga, a native supposedly in the service of the British but really an inside man for the revolutionary group, Roy d'Arcy is seen in a picturesque role.
